Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Important! Operators Notice.

THIS department has received such an enormous number of kicks about the poor inspection of film that I am going to make you the following proposition. I am doing this at the request of one of the largest film manufacturers in the country: Where you find evidence of poor inspection, cut out the faulty part, or the poor splices, and forward them to me, with the data as to what day the films were received, and what exchange they were received from. You may either sign the letter, or sign your name on a separate slip of paper, and enclose a stamped, blank envelope. I will then forward the whole thing to the headquarters of the company handling that exchange, with request they investigate the matter, and remedy whatever is wrong with the inspection in their exchange. Now please understand that I must have the following data: First: What make of film is it? Second: Does it come from a Universal, a General Film, a Mutual, or an independent exchange? Third: What day was it received? Don't mix up bad patches, or other faults, cut from several reels. If you take out faults from several reels, put each one in a separate envelope and mark them with the name of the film, when the film was received, and what exchange it came from; or, if you cannot use so many envelopes, pin the pieces of film together and attach a tag; also don't forget the postage, because, while I am willing to do this, I cannot pay out two or three dollars a day in postage to accomplish even as great a good as I hope will result from this proposition.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 99.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is it that causes condensing lenses to discolor? What are the effects of discoloration of condenser lenses as applied to the result on the screen? Is it better to use a spot of large diameter or of small diameter? Explain, in detail, your views as to this highly important matter.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 93.

The answers to question No. 93 were few and far between. I think Joseph H. M. Smith is the only one entitled to the Roll of Honor, although F. V. Poysen, Brandon, Manitoba; C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada; John Solar, Watertown, New York, and A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, Louisiana, made a very good stagger at answering.

The question is a difficult one and involves quite a number of points. After looking over Brother Smith's answer very carefully I sent it to Brother Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., and requested him to criticise it, and I am now going to print Friend Smith's reply, supplemented by Griffiths' comment.

Reply to Question No. 93.

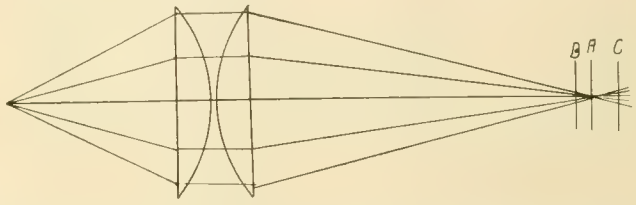
By Jos. H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas.

The Question:

What is the optical effect of changing the distance between your condensing lenses? Of changing the distance from condenser to aperture? How can you tell whether your condensing lenses set square with each other or not?

The Answer:

Question No. 93 is divided into three parts which I will designate "A," "B," "C." Replying to part "A": Selecting two plano-convex condensers of similar foci, say 12 inches each, if we place their flat sides in contact they would have an equivalent focus of 6 inches. The rule for finding the e. f. of any lens combination is as follows, remembering that the spacing of the lenses plays an important part in the matter: Multiply the focus of one condenser by the focus of the other and divide the product by the combined focus of both lenses, less the distance of separation. For two 12-inch condensers, which is extreme, we would then have $12 \times 12 = 144$, which divided by 24 (12 + 12) equals 6 inches. Now suppose we have a 10-inch space between lenses; it would then be $12 \times 12 = 144 \div 24\ (12 + 12) - 10 = 10.28$ focus. Now suppose we had two 7-inch condensers with ¼ inch space between; $7 \times 7 = 49$, while $7 + 7 = 14 - ¼ = 13¾$, and $49 \div 13¾ = 3.563$ + E. F. By the mere expedient of separating the condensing lenses, the E. F. of the combination may be lengthened—that is to say, within certain limits the greater the space between the lenses the longer will be the focus.



Part "B." If at position "A" in the sketch your light was the best that could be had, which it should be, then by lengthening the distance between the condensers and aperture you would obtain yellow corners on your picture by reason of the fact that you would bring the point of focus on your picture by reason of the fact that you would bring the point of focus so small that would not cover the aperture. By shortening the distance you increase the size of the spot and your light crosses at a point beyond where it ought to focus, thus causing loss of illumination, and a blue ghost on the screen.

Part "C." If the lens, or rather the arc was not situated on the optical axis of the condenser, then the image will be imperfectly projected. Suppose we take one condenser, as per sketch A, B, C, D, E, F, we can readily see that if our optical system is out of line the sharpness of the picture would now give place to a certain kind of indistinctness, and the projected image would be inferior. If we look at the sketch, in which a few oblique rays are represented before and after transmission, it will be seen that rays A and B suffer less refraction than D, E and F, and this being the case, there is a degree of confusion at the focus. Thus, if the picture is out of focus on one machine, and perfectly in focus on the other, all lenses being scrupulously clean, and nothing else wrong, then you would know that the lens system was not properly centered, or square. Any competent operator ought to be able to tell when his optical system is out of line by the spot on his shutter, if he has an outside shutter, or, still better, by results on the screen.

The following is Brother Griffiths' comment on the foregoing. I referred it to Griffiths because I believe he is better competent to deal with this matter than is the editor:

> Your communication, with Brother Smith's letter enclosed, received this morning. As to the first part of the question, he is correct in saying that increasing the space between the lenses increases the E. F. of the combination. He works the formula all right, but with a slight error in the last instance when he says 3,563 + E. F., the plus E. F. being the error; it should be "3,563 + equals E. F." Just for comparison; two 7-inch condensers without space would figure $7 \times 7 = 49$, $7 + 7 = 14$, and $49 \div 14 = 3.5$, which is the E. F. of the combination. There are also other points to be considered in answering the first part of the question. First: changing the E. F. of the combination; second: loss of light between the condensers, owing to the divergence of the beam of light from the first condenser; third: owing to the longer E. F. of the combination they will project a smaller sized spot at the aperture, if the distance between the condenser and the film remains the same, since a long E. F. objective will project a smaller picture than will a short E. F. objective when the throw is the same. (Brother Griffiths here evidently means to say that the optical action of the objective and the condenser system is precisely similar, which is the fact. Ed.) Fourth: the arc will be a little further from the condensers to get a clear, sharp image of the crater at the aperture, because the longer the E. F. the greater the B. F. (which means light loss.—Ed.).

With reference to Brother Smith's answer to Part "B," i. e., changing the distance between the condenser and aperture, I do not think he understands the signification of the question, or the action of light rays in the condenser light beam. First he assumes the beam as going to a point; secondly, that the distance is changed without adjusting the light to new conditions. Assuming that when a change is made in distance between condenser and aperture the arc is advanced to meet the new conditions, the effect of increasing the distance without changing the condensers is to enlarge the spot and bring the arc nearer the back condenser. The effect of decreasing the distance between the condenser and aperture without changing the condensers is to decrease the size of the spot and retard the arc away from the back condenser. The E. F. of the condensers should be increased directly as the distance between the condenser and aperture is increased. Another effect of changing the distance between condenser and aperture is to change the diameter of the narrowest part of the beam of light in front of the objective, the beam decreasing in thickness, or, in other words, in cross section as the distance between the condensers and aperture increases, thus making a narrower beam of light for the shutter to cut. Still another effect of changing the distance between the condenser and aperture is that it changes the divergence of the beam of light between the aperture and objective lens. The divergence of the beam decreases as the distance between the condenser and aperture increases. This action governs the waste of light at the aperture of the objective lens. (Brother Griffiths is not quite clear enough here. What he means is that the increase and decrease between the lens and aperture will be as the difference between lines drawn from either edge of the side of the condenser through the opposite side of the aperture, and from the top edge of the lens through the aperture, touching the lower edge of the aperture and from the lower edge of the condenser lens through the aperture touching at top edge. That, perhaps, is not very clear either, but that is the best I can do without a drawing, and the drawing you will get before very long.—Ed.)

With reference to Friend Smith's answer to the third part of the question, personally I do not think that imperfections (other than those which cause color to be projected to the spot on the aperture) in the condensers would injure the definition of the picture on the screen. The direct result of imperfectly placed condensers would be a poor image of the crater at the aperture, and, incidentally an injury to the illumination on the screen, but not necessarily poor definition, or focus at the screen. Frankly, I'll be darned if I, myself, know how I could tell whether the condensers set square or not, other than by looking at them. I suppose it could be done by taking out the front condenser and withdrawing the arc so as to project say, a 5-inch spot with the single condenser, center it with the aperture, and then put in the front lens. If the center of the light beam did not change, or, in other words, the aperture was still in the center of the light, which would now be back focus, we would presume the condensers were set square. Don't you think so?

This is a most excellent way of determining the matter, in fact, the best I have seen up to date, and one I, myself, had not thought of. I disagree with Brother Griffiths in one particular, viz.: Theoretically Smith is, I think, right when he says the definition on the screen would be injured by the condensers being out of square with each other, practically, though, I dunno. I have done considerable experimenting with placing condensing lenses at various angles and really, strange as it seems, a comparatively slight angle does not seem to make any visible difference at the spot. While I was dictating this a probable solution occurred to me. The convex surface of a lens is a segment of a sphere, so that it would not make any difference on that side of the lens at what angle it be set with reference to the light, so the only difference, I think, would be a difference in refraction caused by the front or flat surface, and I am not at all certain this would make any practical difference, because the refraction would, I believe, be the same all over the lens. Now, mind you, I am not stating this as a fact. It just occurred to me, and I would have to study the matter a little. Let us hear from the rest of you on that particular subject. It is interesting and rather important.

In closing let me say that I have placed Brother Smith on the Roll of Honor because, while his answer was very incomplete, still, everything considered, it was an excellent answer for an operator to send in. It would be manifestly unfair to expect a very complete reply on things of this kind when it has cost a pile of money and months of study to dope out the optical action of the projector lens systems, a thing I guess nobody understood until we did dig it out. This will all be at your disposal very soon. I think I can begin the publication within two weeks.

Gives a Lift.

John Quigley, manager Wonderland theater, Inverness, Nova Scotia, says:

> I note in July 17th issue that C. E. Quinn, Waverly, Minn., desires information regarding his light plant. As this is my first attempt to give a brother a lift I hope you will excuse me if it is not put just right, but in my own blunt way. (I'll attend to that part of it, Brother Quigley. If I published ninety-nine out of every hundred letters just as they are written, the department would be a queer looking animal. It sometimes is a mighty hard job to dope out the correspondent's real meaning, and put it into understandable and printable language. Ed.) I have been using a Detroit Lighting plant for four years, and must say, as Brother Quinn says, it is a dandy, though I did not call it that during the first four months. I was in a small town, where one is obliged to be his own electrician, and was compelled to literally hoe my own row as best I could. It is a wonder I did not commit murder on that outfit during those months. I blamed the engine, the firm that made it, the metal that was in it and the mine the metal came from, but finally discovered, through experience, that the entire trouble was my own lack of knowledge, and I believe that must be the way with all those who purchase such machines without having previous knowledge of the vagaries of gasoline engines and dynamos. Your answer to Friend Quinn is correct. The trouble is in the engine. If he will open the cylinder, clean out the carbon deposit, and make sure that the piston rings work freely, he will discover that thereafter his 35 or 40 amperes will answer roll call. The way I doped out the rheostat matter was by studying the handbook. I had a 110 volt rheostat, and found it would not work with the Detroit outfit, I cut out one coil, but discovered that I still had too much resistance, and kept cutting out until I finally came down to seventeen coils, and now it just works fine. I get 35 to 40 amperes, and when it drops below 30 I know it is time to clean the carbon out of my engine cylinders, and see that everything is well oiled, whereupon the amperage jumps back to normal until it happens again. I have two oil feeds to my engine, one to the cylinder and one to the crank, and find that instead of putting oil through the feed I can mix it with the gasoline. It does not seem to make so much carbon deposit. Yes, when you told Quinn there must be something wrong with the engine you were right, and carbon is the answer.

All gasoline engines deposit carbon in their cylinders, the amount of the deposit depending largely on the amount of lubricating oil used, and its quality. The effect of carbon is to cause preignition of the charge, and thus decrease the power which, of course, would reduce the speed and lower the amperage. I don't quite understand about the rheostat. If you mean you have cut out seventeen coils, that might be all right, but if you mean you still have seventeen coils in circuit, why it must be a queer rheostat. Using the ordinary 110 volt, 25 ampere rheostat, I do not believe that you would need more than one or two coils at most with a 60 volt dynamo.

Shutter Change.

W. A. Cox, Alpha, Illinois, writes:

> Am using a three-wing shutter on a Power's Six A motor driven machine, and desire to change to a two-wing. How may this be accomplished?

The best way would be to purchase a two-wing shutter from the Nicholas Power Company, 90 Gold Street, New York City, or from some dealer in motion picture supplies in Chicago. Having done so, just simply take off the old shutter and put on the new, setting the shutter as per instructions in the Handbook, copy of which I presume you have. You may purchase only the two-wing blade, if you prefer to, and use your old hub. In that case, just take the three-wing blade out of the hub and put the two-winger in its place. You will have to set it, of course.

Three-Phase Versus Single-Phase.

C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada, writes:

> With reference to Friend Searcy's proposition of three-phase versus single-phase motor for generator set, while I have a great deal still to learn about electricity, it seems to me he was right in deciding in favor of the three-phase, particularly for current of such low frequency as 25 cycle. If I understand the principle of polyphase generation, a three-phase, 25-cycle, would give the practical effect of a 75-cycle single-phase current, reducing wear and tear, and giving a steadier pull to the motor, consequently a more regular flow from the generator. This is the way it appears to me. However, I may be wrong. Shall be glad to see the point taken up in a reasonably non-technical way by someone who knows. I say "non-technical" because I do not imagine that a very large percentage of the boys are electrical engineers.

Theoretically your point is well taken, but practically it is not. Of course, a 25-cycle will theoretically produce a jerking effect in the armature of the motor, and hence in the armature of the generator, but practically it will not, because of the fact that after all 25 cycles per second is pretty reasonably rapid, and the momentum of the armature is such that it cannot possibly be affected. You must remember that a gas engine only receives an impulse every other, or every fourth revolution, yet by reason of the momentum of its balance wheel it runs steadily, and will produce practically perfect results when pulling a generator. No, your point is not well taken, except theoretically. However, we all make mistakes. I think you did not stop to give this matter sufficient thought. Just sort of went off "half cocked," as it were.

A Very Great Mistake.

Returning from Liberty, N. Y., to New York City, on my gasoline two-wheel cart, we passed through Hackettstown, N. J., and, as the shades of night were drawing near, and mine host of the hotel known to be, from past experience, a genial entertainer, we garaged our rubber-tired brute and spent the night in that classic village. During the evening noticing a blaze of illumination consisting of one flaming arc lamp and quite some considerable number of incandescents, we muttered under our editorial breath "moving pictures," with a further growled remark that the manager must be quite an enterprising gentleman, therefore, first having interviewed the ticket seller and secured bits of pasteboard at the cost of 10 cents per paste, we ambled in to view the performance. And right here let me say it is really astonishing what monumental and utterly useless errors small town show men commit. The manager was out. I did not have the pleasure of meeting him, but venture the assertion that he would scoff at the idea of actually paying three perfectly good dollars for the Moving Picture World for one year, and studying its projection department, although that department is carefully read by some of the biggest men in the business. I also venture the further assertion that if you told him he ought to invest $2.50 in a handbook he would feel strongly tempted to have your head examined, and would suggest that probably all the lunatics are not yet confined behind bars. Yet notwithstanding his probable state of mind concerning such things, it is a cold-blooded fact that by the expenditure of just a little common sense, just a little labor and one, or maybe two dollars—not more—he could improve his picture by nearly 100 per cent., and, with all due respect to his knowledge, let me say that anything which improves his picture will bring added revenue to the box office.

Here is what I found. Mr. Philip A. Anderson, formerly of Philadelphia, is the operator, and during the entire two reels I viewed them was not once a shadow on the screen; also the pictures were run at proper speed. In other words, considering the difficulties Brother Anderson worked under he was producing distinctly good results. However, he was projecting upon a white screen at least six feet wider than the picture itself, and considerably higher up and down. This in itself is sufficient to kill any picture, but added to this, the picture was not centered on the screen, but set over to one side—not a serious fault, true, but it looks bad. The second glaring fault was that the piano, which set angling across the corner of the room, close to the screen on the left-hand side, had upon its front what was probably not less than a 16 candle power lamp, shaded so that the light literally spread all over the front of the instrument, and we, together with the rest of the audience were compelled to sit there with that big splotch of white light within range of our vision, and some of it, though not much, reached the screen by reflection. It was not the effect on the screen that did the damage, however, but the fact that the audience had to stare right at the big splotch of white light on the front of the piano. That piano player should have a lamp of not greater candle power than 8, and there should be a carefully arranged shade which would only allow the light to shine on the sheet of music being played. In fact I am sure a 4 c. p. lamp, properly arranged and shaded, would be ample. But this was not all. Across the entrance were two rather flimsy curtains, dark green in color, I believe. Beside these curtains was a girl who acted as ticket taker, but instead of standing outside she stood inside and about half the time had those curtains pulled apart looking out, with the full glare of that flaming arc lamp pouring into the theater and literally committing murder on the picture.

I am not the guardian of the Hackettstown Opera House manager. I am not running his business, praise be, but I submit that the failure to remedy such abuses as this is in the nature of an outrage on his own pocketbook, on his patrons, and on the moving picture industry as a whole. I venture the advice that he immediately outline that picture in black, I have no doubt but Mr. Anderson, his operator, can direct the painter how to do it, but here are the directions; project the white light on the screen, draw a line, in pencil, around the light, about two inches inside its edge, and then paint with flat black (lamp black mixed with ⅔ turpentine and ⅓ boiled linseed oil) all the rest of the screen. Having done this yank out that big incandescent light on the piano and get a 4 c. p. lamp I am sure that size will do very well. The piano player may kick, but it is better to have him strain his eyes just a little than to have the entire audience strain theirs. Having accomplished these two things, either paint that portion of the flaming arc lamp globe which is next to the door with black, and instruct that girl to let the curtain alone, on pain of losing her job, or, better still, rearrange the entrance so that no light can enter when it is open. If the Hackettstown manager, and hundreds and hundreds of other managers would do what thousands of managers have already done—invest the sum of $2.50 in a handbook, they would not have to be told to do such simple things as these. I have none but the most kindly feelings for the gentleman in question. I never met him in my life. He is one of many other small town managers who are their own worst enemies.

I Wonder.

Gary, Indiana, says:

> With reference to your reply to S. L. Swain, Lexington, North Carolina, July 5th issue, I have often wondered if such problems could not be solved by using a rotary converter, running it ordinarily as a double current generator, taking D. C. from the commutator to run the projection arc, and A. C. of the same frequency as that of the power company, from the collector rings to feed the house distributing panel, having first arranged a switch, so that, when the breakdown comes, if it is in the engine, where I believe it would most likely be, you could run the rotary converter as a converter with A. C. to supply D. C. to the arc, and switch over the house distributing panel to the power company's lines. This latter could also be done after the show, so that in case it was desired to burn only a few lights it would not be necessary to run the engine. A resistance, or its equivalent, could also be arranged, with switches to cut out the converter entirely in case it went out of commission. The ratio of the voltage of the A. C. current entering a single-phase converter, to that of the D. C. leaving the converter, is .707 to 1, and the voltage at the arc would be about 60. But ordinarily, to obtain the 60 volts D. C. the A. C. voltage would be reduced by a step-down transformer, which would act as a step-up transformer when

Single throw switch open when converter runs as generator closed when converter runs as converter
To house distributing panel
To power co's lines
Double throw switches to connect arc to converter or to transformer
Double throw switch to connect house distributing panel to converter or to power co's lines > the converter runs as a generator. To obtain the required 60 volts D. C., the A. C. would have to be reduced to about 42 volts, which would not be far from the correct voltage for an A. C. arc, and possibly the transformer could be made to connect directly to the arc. In case this would be possible the transformer in the sketch would come where the dotted line A-B crosses the A. C. side of the line from the converter. The converter would have to be single-phase, and would have to have some arrangement for starting in order to run it as a converter. I don't know what their efficiency is, but they are used in power stations as double current generators, where surely they would not be used if they did not compare favorably in efficiency with ordinary generators. If the thing would work it would have the advantage of being a little cheaper than the two generators you advise, and would supply D. C. to the arc in case the engine failed to run. This is my first offense, so please let me down easy.

I am not going to "let you down" at all. I am not myself well enough posted in the action of this sort of machine to dope this matter out correctly, at least without consuming a lot of time and energy. I therefore pass it along to our electrician correspondents, with the comment that, provided it will work, it really is a matter which seems to be of considerable value.

From Salt Lake City.

The editor was agreeably surprised recently to receive a call from C. A. Porter of Local No. 250, Salt Lake City, whom he met two years ago at the Convention in Seattle. Brother Porter is visiting relatives in New Jersey, and may decide to pitch his tent in the east for a time; also, when his visit is over, we may see him vanish in the trail which leads toward the setting sun. Porter is a live wire and a good fellow. He has an invention in the shape of an indicator designed to warn the operator about one minute before the film has all run out. I presume he intends to try to market it. It is a good little device and we wish him success.

To Fasten Machine.

Ohio says:

> This is my first offense, though I have been reading the department for the past three years. At present am employed as assistant operator, but have an offer to take the position as chief at another theater where there are two Power's SixA machines which are not fastened to the cement floor. I would like to know what is the best way of anchoring these projectors to the floor. Everything here is union, the scale being $21 for chief and $16 for assistant. At present we are in with the stage hands, but expect to apply for a charter of our own soon.

Why there are several ways of doing that. If the floor is thick you might cut holes about one-half inch deep, and just a little larger than the machine table legs. Place the machine in position with the legs in the hole, register the picture on the screen, and then, when the show closes down at night, fill up the holes with cement mixed quite thin. Another way would be to drill a hole in the floor, put in anchor bolts having an eye hole at one end and fill up the hole with cement. When the cement has hardened, attach a rod with a turn buckle to the anchor bolt and machine table and pull the thing down solid. This should be done at both ends of the machine. In fact, my dear boy, if you have the necessary knowledge and ingenuity to successfully handle a projection room, you won't have much trouble in anchoring those machines down.

That Is Better.

The I. A. Convention was duly pulled off in Chicago. We understand that no action of special import to the operators was taken, except that the convention wiped that fool law, passed two years ago, to which we have several times alluded, off its books.

It was the sensible thing to do. The law in question was a tremendous error to start with; it was illegal and foolish. Well, it is a thing of the past, so let us let it go at that. The I. A. men can now feel at liberty to set forth their views in the department whenever the spirit moves them. Later the I. A. probably will print a paper of its own for the conduct of its official business—an expensive luxury, though a thing which can be made of considerable value to the organization.

End of First Sausage: Second Sausage Follows.

Connecticut says:

> The General Film, as you probably know, have instituted a campaign against punching holes in their films. I can appreciate their stand in this matter, but cannot understand their attitude, unless they labor under the impression that all theaters are conducted as are a few in New York City, where the operating room is conducted as such, with two, or even three men at the job, and where high class projection is not only sought, but provided for, this, however, is far from being the condition in the operating room of the great majority of theaters, in which one operator is the limit. It has been suggested to the General Film Company that they provide a suitable warning, but to date they have failed to act upon it. In one of their features, at least 25 feet per reel was taken up with the legend "something follows," "this is it." This custom is not only unreasonable, but it wastes film and is troublesome in threading up: it is unnecessary, just as much it would be as for a delicatessen store to say: End of first sausage, second sausage follows.
> I enclose herewith a copy of letter to their branch manager; the suggestion is well meant, its adoption or disapproval will demonstrate to us certain things which we may later use.

The letter to the branch manager reads:

> Your letters dated July 3d and 12th, respectively, addressed to the Orpheum theater, relative to "punching films," have been referred to me. May I say that it is quite essential that the operator have some warning of a reel's closing. Since you insist that we do not punch your film, why not avoid controversy and ill feeling by punching them yourself, advising those using your service of the nature of the "warning," and requesting that these marks be not altered. In this manner I am sure you will find few, if any, disregarding your request. I trust you will consider my suggestion in the spirit that it is given, namely, to pursue the course of least resistance and accomplish a much desired purpose. May I ask that you please advise me as to whether your company will meet us half way?

The General Film Company is perfectly correct in objecting to the punching of their films. I presume their activity along this line was brought about through this department, which has called their attention to the damage being done film and suggesting that the punching be made unnecessary by the incorporation of the warning mark in the film itself. Connecticut is perfectly right in demanding this warning sign. As he says, in modern practice it is absolutely necessary that the operator know when to switch from one machine to the other, in projecting multiple reel releases. It is a duty the manufacturer owes to the exhibitor that this matter be taken care of, and Brother Max Berner, chief operator of the Vitagraph theater, New York City, has suggested that it be done in the following manner.

> The first reel should finish up with a sub-title, and the second reel should open with the same sub-title which ends the first reel. This should be the procedure at the end and beginning of each subsequent change until the feature is finished. For instance: suppose the first sub-title to read: "There're Off." The second would open up with the same sub-title, viz: "They're Off." Now when the operator sees the sub-title come on he knows it is time to switch to the other machine, the beginning sub-title of which has been carefully framed in the aperture of the projector. This not only gives the operator warning of the impending change, but allows him to fade one sub-title into the other so perfectly that the audience never knows there is any change at all. The sub-title at the end of each reel should be about 14 feet in length, while the one at the beginning of each reel should be about 10 feet. The operator can, of course, tell what the ending title of the reel being projected is by glancing at the beginning title of the reel he is threading in the machine.

Brother Berner's suggestion seems to be perfectly feasible, and this department would recommend it to the serious consideration of film producers. It is to the interest of the film producers that their multiple reel releases be run through without a break, or any other indication of the switching over one reel to the next. If they wish this done, and at the same time don't want their films punched, they will be compelled to adopt this, or some other equally good suggestion, and that is all there is to it.

Speaking of Screens.

Now is right here where the editor proceeds to deliberately butt into trouble—to "dig it up," as it were. There is an old saying: "Let sleeping dogs lie," but in this particular instance the "sleeping dogs" do so confounded much growling that they keep my goat in a state of constant irritation.

I refer to the screen manufacturers who, taken by and large, can call each other a greater variety of names in a less period of time than any other similar number of individuals or companies with whom I am acquainted.

Now, gentlemen, don't get mad and bite yourselves, or the editor either. You know it is true; I know it is true, and everyone else at all acquainted with the situation knows it is true, and if you will pardon me for saying so, there isn't a bit of sense in it.

The editor of this department has examined practically all the screen surfaces now being marketed—that is the leading ones. He finds points of excellence in every one of them; also every single one of them have points which he could criticise. There are none of these surfaces perfect, and there are none of them very imperfect either, so what is the use in wasting energy in calling the "other fellow" names? I am glad to see there are one or two of the screen manufacturers who, to the best of my knowledge and belief do not indulge in this practice, but, frankly, the rest of them seem to put in about half their time making and selling screens, and the other half in inventing new terms of disapproval to apply to their competitors.

Cut it out, gentlemen! stop it! quit it! break away! It is not a good game. It is distinctly on the blink. It don't get you anything or anywhere. So what's the use? You all have a fairly good article. Some of the surfaces are, I believe, better than others, yes. But, after all, there is room for every one of you, because there are those who prefer one kind of surface and others who prefer another kind; therefore, if only one kind of surface was made the fellow who preferred something else could not be suited.

This department likes to be friends with all of you, but it does most emphatically not see any possible good to be accomplished by a manufacturer deliberately knocking his competitor.

I trust you will pardon me for this verbal spanking. You have been a bunch of very bad kids (some of you), and you need it. Now run along and make the best possible screen you know how to make and sell them on their merit, without wasting valuable energy wielding a useless hammer.

A New Carbon.

Jones & Cammack, New York City, are the importers of a new carbon made in Switzerland called the "Reflex." This carbon has been presented to the editor for examination, and he has requested the importers to send out to certain operators a bundle of carbons for trial.

The carbons are made for positive and for negative, the negative having copper around the core. As soon as we get reports from the tests we will have more to say about the Reflex.

We are glad to welcome into the market any product that is good, but first we must know that it is good, and that is the reason for the test.

MANAGERS AND OPERATORS

Kindly note that the Richardson Handbook is completely out of print. Please send no more orders or remittances. The author is now at work on a new and revised edition, which will be still larger and better. Announcement of publication date will appear in due course.

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS in cinematography addressed to this department will receive carbon copy of the department's reply by mail when four cents in stamps are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which cannot be replied to in this department for $1.00.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is a rule of this department that no apparatus will be recommended editorially until the value of such appliances have been demonstrated to its editor.

Direct Title Making.

Earle C. Sly, Minneapolis, Minn., writes:

"I am a new hand in the camera department of a new producing concern in this city and I am having difficulty in making captions by the following method: We have a typewriter which prints as per sample through carbon paper (no ribbon used) and my idea is to take these and photograph them direct in the camera after reversing the film (emulsion away from lens) and have them ready to run at once without any further printing, etc., but the trouble is I cannot seem to get black enough blacks and white enough whites, although I am using positive film in the camera and straight hydroquinone for development. At first, halation seemed to be the trouble but after reducing my white surface to this size, the result seems to be but little better. No doubt you know of a much better system than this but I do not, and any information you can give me will be greatly appreciated."

He sends a sample of a neat little cut out border about two by three inches in which he inserts his typewritten caption together with a sample piece of title film made by this method. A number of the large film concerns use this method for making titles except that the captions are printed with printers' ink on a press instead of on a typewriter. A dark red carbon tissue would probably give better results than the black, but the real trouble is probably with the developer used. Try the following formula:

Hydroquinone	½ oz.
Sodium sulphite	10 "
Formaldehyde	½ "
Water	1 quart

Temperature of this developer not to be less than 70°.

Slight under exposure and long development but not too long to clog the letters will give the best results.

If you could have your captions set up on a linotype machine and have a good black proof pulled, using a paper with a very slight glaze, to insert in your cut out frame, you would have still better results.

Companies which use this method for making titles do not insert these direct titles in their films except when they have only a copy or two in which they have to insert foreign captions. A dupe or print is made and developed in the same contrast developer which gives added density, and this dupe or negative is then inserted in the negative and printed continuous with the scenes. Other companies first make a lantern slide negative from which the title negative is made either in the camera or in a projecting printer, and at least one company uses a printer in which the title is projected from a lantern slide positive between the scenes where it belongs; the scene negative being automatically disengaged while the title is being printed.

The favorite size for the caption copy in the factories, however, is about six by eight inches, or slightly smaller.

There is, of course, a certain loss of definition in photographing through the film and if you have sufficient work of this character to warrant the expenditure it might be wise to purchase a reversing prism for your lens such as photoengravers use—this will permit of the captions being photographed direct on the emulsion side with the characters in the proper order to be read correctly on the screen.

I notice that your caption does not seem to be in absolute contact with the cut out border, for it seems to throw a wavy shadow upon the caption paper.

This may be avoided by placing them in a printing frame beneath a clear glass. The glass will make no difference in the definition if care is taken that the illuminating lights, two high power nitrogen globes with reflectors being very good, do not reflect from the glass into the lens.

Wants to Buy a Camera.

J. L. Derfus, Redland, California, says:

"I am a poor 'crank turner,' not a photographer, alooking for learning. I have been thinking of buying a small camera for topical work. I wish to know about what the cost would be of a small camera and tripod. It should be economical in film. I have found an ideal camera in most every regard except price which is $550; it wastes about 18 inches of film when it is threaded, but after that a hundred setups can be made without the waste of a single frame. It has two matched lenses and an object far down the road may be brought in focus and as it comes nearer the focus can be changed before your eyes as you crank. It is sure a bun of a camera, but I do not care to pay that price for a camera alone, and the maker, H. K. Fairall, who lives in a nearby town, does not seem to care whether he makes them or not.

"What speed lens would you recommend, f 1.9; f 3.5 or one slower yet?

"What has been your experience with the B & L, Zeiss; Carl Zeiss and the Cooke lenses? I like the Cooke construction, but I have never heard it strongly recommended.

"What light rays does a green background reflect?"

I would like to see one of the cameras which you describe or at least a description with illustrations. There are a number of good makes of cameras for sale at a smaller price than the one mentioned which would probably fit all your requirements for topical work. Write for catalogues to some of the manufacturers who advertise in the Moving Picture World.

An f 1.9 lens is too large an aperture for general work and the definition is not sharp enough when used at small apertures. Such a lens is only of use under exceptionally bad light conditions. All of the makes of lenses which you mention are good and for topical work which is mostly exterior, a Voigtlaender Heliar f 4.5 would probably be as good a lens as you could get.

There are many shades of green, but yellow and blue light are the predominating colors reflected from a green surface which would be registered in a photograph by some shade of gray.

Wants to Become a Cameraman.

R. B. N., Columbus, Ohio, writes:

"I am very anxious to enter the film manufacturing business and wish to learn the photographic end of it, for I think that is the best place in which to start. I have not had a great deal of experience, but flatter myself by saying that I have sufficient of the gray matter that by close study and concentration could 'get by.' If you could give me the names of any of the large studios who would be willing to take on an apprentice I would appreciate it immensely."

I do not know of any studios that take on apprentices in the accepted sense of the word. There are many ambitious young men in different studios who have obtained positions in the film factories in order to work their way up to some good position in the industry, and where they have shown intelligence and aptitude have succeeded in attaining the position they coveted by hard work and steady application. I can recall a number of young men who have worked their way up from the dark room boys at seven or eight dollars a week to camera men and factory foremen at various salaries up to a hundred dollars a week. The last-named salary being, of course, exceptional and requiring five years of very hard work to attain.

You have not stated what your qualifications are, nor where you are willing to start. Decide what you think you are capable of doing, and then write letters of application to all of the large firms whose advertisements appear in the World, stating your qualifications, past experiences and references as briefly as possible. If you are personally acquainted with any of the exchange men in your city, get letters from them regarding your ability to some of the firms whom they represent. Use plain paper and do not write upon someone else's stationery when making such application.

If you have perserverance and the right stuff in you, you will land a job where you can work up to the position you wish.

Cameraman's Scrapbook.

Frank Urson, cinematographer for Director Frank Grandon of the Griffith Mutual-Reliance forces in Los Angeles, writes:

"I am keeping a notebook in which I either write down or paste in articles and formulas which I think will be of use to me for future reference. I am cutting out your page each week as it appears, keeping the articles in their proper sequence. I have been keeping this scrapbook for two years now, and while a great deal of the information which I have collected has been from superintendents of film factories, technical men and different camera and lens catalogues and trade papers, my biggest source of information has been from the columns of the Moving Picture World.

"I wouldn't lose this book for a good deal of money and its value is constantly increasing.

"We have a wonderful organization out here now, new buildings all around; you remember it used to be the old Kinemacolor Studio when you were out here. The entire plot is nearly covered with buildings, and Bitzer, Griffith's cameraman, who has charge of the technical end, has organized what is said to be one of the best, if not the best, developing plant in the country."

The scrapbook idea is a very good one, there are quite a number of the cameramen whom I know keep such books for reference, particularly those who have worked their way up through the different steps in factory work.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

WHAT DID HE WHISPER? (Vitagraph), Aug. 9.—The author of this one-reel comedy permits the question propounded by his title to be answered as one's sense of humor dictates. The play is amusing during its entire length, and the enigmatic climax gives rise to any number of laughable constructions. George Stanley and Otto Lederer are the principal funmakers.

THE HIDDEN LIFE (Biograph), Aug. 9.—Chas. Perley and Augusta Anderson carry the burden of the acting in this one-reel drama. The material is new and fairly dramatic, but the climax is not well hanndled.

THE HAPPY HOUSE (Essanay), Aug. 9.—A quiet little romance is told in this one-reel photplay. The momentary fickleness of a young girl furnishes the only "clash." The production and acting are in keeping with the spirit of the drama. Richard Tabor heads the cast.

THE GREAT LONE LAND (Lubin), Aug. 9.—There is an excellent supply of both human interest and dramatic incident in this one-reel drama, written and produced by Romaine Fielding, who also plays the leading part. Mr. Fielding's story is not novel, but it is one that is always worth telling. Vinnie Burns leads the adequate supporting company.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 63 (Selig), Aug. 9.—Col. Roosevelt greeting the Rough Riders at the San Diego Exposition has first place in this number. The other items: Henry Elionsky swimming in straight jacket, New York; turners at Panama-Pacific Exposition; coast artillery drill, Boston; unloading watermelons, Washington; on the battle line in France; tennis match between Miss Bjursted and Mrs. McLean, Thousand Islands; exhibition of life saving, Pride's Crossing, Mass.; English envoy at San Francisco Fair; caring for sick school children, South Boston.

HORRIBLE HYDE (Lubin), Aug. 10.—E. W. Sargent has founded an amusing half-reel farce upon the troubles of an impecunious actor who frightens his landlady into letting his board bill run by making up as the terrifying Hyde in the play of "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde." Jerold T. Hevener is excellent as the actor. "Relentless Dalton," a clever cartoon comedy by Vincent Whitman, is on the same reel.

THE GOLD DUST AND THE SQUAW (Selig), Aug. 10.—The scenic effects in this one-reel western drama are very picturesque. The story is dramatic and contains a number of thrills. Sid Jordan, Leo Maloney and Bettie O'Neil carry the burden of the acting. The reel has received the able direction of Tom Mix.

THE WINNING WASH (Kalem), Aug. 10.—"Ham" and "Bud" have a nice soapy time in a Chinese laundry, during the action of this one-reel comedy. The fun is deft, clean and plentiful, and the comic neatness of the climax one of the best features of the film.

HIS FAIRY GODMOTHER (Vitagraph), Aug. 11.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1177 issue of August 14.

THE FABLE OF THE TIP AND THE TREASURE (Essanay), Aug. 11.—Peggy Sweeny and Sidney Carlyle are the pair of lovers in this George Ade one-reel comedy, which has for its moral: Keep on digging and you will find something. Roger Danby goes hunting for a buried treasure and finds what Adam found in the Garden of Eden—a mate. The Ade brand of humor is freely sprinkled all through the reel.

HIS BUNKIE (Vitagraph), Aug. 12.—A one-reel military drama by Jasper Ewing Brady, this offering has the correctness of detail which marked the author's other army plays. The story has decided merit, a company of U. S. soldiers helping to sustain the martial atmosphere. Darwin Karr, Ned Finley and Eleanor Woodruff deserve their high rank as members of the cast.

BILLY'S NURSE (MinA), Aug. 12.—This is a neat one-reel comedy, well acted by Eddie Genung, Marie Baxter and a competent cast. The story is skilfully developed, and the director has done his work faithfully.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 64 (Selig), Aug. 12.—Testing the stability of the excursion steamer Christopher Columbus in Lake Michigan; dynamiting 75,000 tons of rock, Winchester, Mass.; starting a 125 miles canoe trip, Franklin, N. H.; Boy Scouts at Canton, Mass.; classic dancing school, South Woodstock, Mass.; testing electric railroad device, Aurora, Ill.; severe storm at Highland Beach, N. J.; on the firing line in Serbia; American hospital, Belgrade, and the flood at Erie, Pa., are pictured in this number.

THE BELL HOP (Essanay), Aug. 12.—Comic supplement humor is sprinkled plentifully through this one-reel farce. Ben Turpin is the chief of the fun brigade, his broadly grotesque methods fitting in nicely with the drolleries of the reel. Victor Potel is amusing as two yards and over of comic countryman.

STRONGER THAN LOVE (Biograph), Aug. 12.—Isabel Rea and Frank Newburg are featured in this one-reel drama of studio life. The loyal hearted little artist, played by Miss Rea, almost loses the man she loves, but her fellow craftsman comes to his senses at last. It is an engaging bit of romance, cleverly acted by all concerned.

THE LAST DROP OF WATER (Biograph), Aug. 13.—A re-issue of one of D. W. Griffith's one-reel western dramas, it has all the animation, color and mastery of detail which were found in this director's earlier productions. Blanche Sweet, Chas. W. West, Jos. Graybill, W. Christie Miller and Wm. J. Butler are in the cast.

BRONCHO BILLY STEPS IN (Essanay), Aug. 13.—Wild western comedy runs rampant through this one-reel photoplay. G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton have the assistance of a large cast of cowpunchers, and a schoolroom scene is introduced that would set the teeth of a convocation of Boston school-marms on edge.

THE DECEPTION (Lubin), Aug. 13.—Lively action, an engrossing story, and a surprise finish are all found in this one-reel drama, written by Shannon Fyfe and produced by Joseph Kaufman. Walter Hitchcock, Ethel Clayton and Thurston Hall guarantee the quality of the acting.

A KEYBOARD STRATEGY (Vitagraph), Aug. 13.—There is much pleasant fooling in this one-reel comedy, a worth while love interest having its proper place in the plot. Lillian Walker, Evart Overton, Constance Talmadge, J. H. Lewis and Mary Maurice have been assigned suitable parts in the cast.

HER ROMEO (Lubin), Aug. 14.—Billie Reeves' attempt to play Romeo in real life and the real Romeo clothes is the main spring of this one-reel farce written by Epes W. Sargent. The result is amusing, as only Billie's romantic sweetheart is impressed with his appearance.

THE ORANG-OUTANG (Selig), Aug. 14.—The orang-outang is worked into the plot of this one-reel Jungle-Zoo drama with considerable skill, although several of the incidents are rather improbable. The picture holds the interest, and has the benefit of a good cast.

THE LIMITED'S PERIL (Episode No. 40 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Aug. 14.—An attempt at train wrecking is neatly foiled in this one-reel drama. Helen's life is in danger several times during the action of the play, but, as usual, she is the means of bringing the rogues to justice. A railroad lift bridge is utilized in the picture.

A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK (Edison), Aug. 14.—Pat O'Malley, Bessie Learn, Gladys Hulette and Mrs. Wallace Erskine give an excellent performance of this one-reel drama. The story illustrates the danger of a married man picking out his own stenographer, the sprig of Shamrock being the means of the husband and wife becoming reconciled.

THE LITTLE SLAVEY (Biograph), Aug. 14.—The character acting of Irma Dawkins in the title role of this one-reel drama is uncommonly clever. The story is not overburdened with new material, but will meet a popular demand. Gus Pixley, Jack Mulhall and Chas. Bennett have important roles.

THE CUB AND THE DAISY CHAIN (Vitagraph), Aug. 23.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1177 issue of August 14.

General Film Company Specials.

THE RUNAWAY WIFE (Kalem), Aug. 9.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1015 issue of August 7.

THE FACE IN THE MIRROR (Selig), Aug. 9.—Edward S. Kern's two-reel "crook" drama opens without waste of film, proceeds with directness, and sustains the suspense until the end. The story has a supply of well groomed characters, even the "crooks" appearing in evening clothes. The settings are elaborate and appropriate, and the action of Lamar Johnstone, Stella Razeto, Joe King and the remaining members of the cast keeps the performance up to the mark.

LIFE'S YESTERDAYS (Vitagraph), Aug. 10.—The superior quality of the acting of Leo Delaney and Julia Swayne Gordon makes the moral of this two-reel drama impressive. The story is not a pleasant one, although never unnecessarily morbid. The regeneration of the drug-crazed physician is brought about logically, the woman who caused his fall finding release from the morphine habit only through death. Leo Delaney's suggestion of the dope fiend is without a trace of over acting; thoroughly convincing, and always within the bounds of artistic restraint.

THE LAW OF LOVE (Biograph), Aug. 10.—Simplicity of plot marks this two-reel domestic drama. The story will appeal to lovers of the sentimental, the child interest at the finish being a strong factor in the play's success. Jose Ruben, Chas. H. Mailes, Madge Kirby and G. Raymond Nye constitute a competent cast.

BOLD EMMETT, IRELAND'S MARTYR (Lubin), Aug. 11.—The leading character in this three-reel drama is not the Irish hero, Robert Emmett, but Con Daly, played by Sidney Olcott, who also wrote and produced the play. Mr. Olcott appears to equal advantage either as playwright, producer or actor. His drama is decidedly interesting, and the production, which was made in Ireland, contains many romantic scenes. Jack Melville is manly and earnest as Emmett, and Valentine Grant is a charming Nora Doyle, Con's sweetheart.

THE RIDDLE OF THE RINGS (Episode No. 4 of the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel (Kalem), Aug. 11.—Life in the "Grand Hotel" still continues to have its feverish moments. The latest episode relates to the scheme of a pair of exceptionally adroit crooks to "work" the hotel, but the lady house detective blocks the game. A glance into the barber-shop is given in this number. It is quite as elaborate as the lobby. Producer James W. Horne has kept the entire picture up to the standard.

WHEN LOVE IS MOCKED (Selig), Aug. 12.—Reviewed by James S. McQuade on page 1174 issue of August 14.

THE POWER OF PRAYER (Lubin), Aug. 12.—Without being an imitation, the plot of this two-reel drama recalls "Domby and Son." The author has gone in for bold effects, and has occasionally over-accentuated the religious intolerance of his chief character—notably, when Morgan tears the cross from his wife's neck. The theme is well handled, in the main, and is excellently acted by Melvin Mayo, L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Velma Whitman and a remarkable two-year-old named Lyle Phelps.

THE KING OF THE WIRE (Edison), Aug. 13.—Ashley Miller has taken a deep dive into turbulent melodramatic waters, in writing and producing this three-reel photoplay. The hero's walking out of a second story window on a telephone wire with the heroine in his arms is the big stunt, said feat being performed by Pat O'Malley and Gladys Hulette. Like the "thrillers" of old, everything is sacrificed to the "punch," and the law of probability thrown into the discard. The picture is excellently acted and produced.

HEAVY VILLAINS (Vitagraph), Aug. 14.—In the hands of six such experienced players of comedy as Flora Finch, Kate Price, William Shea, Hughie Mack, John T. Kelly and Cissy Fitz-Gerald, this three-reel farce is the source of many a laugh. The play is well put together, and the complications are plentifully supplied with humor.

THE CAVE ON THUNDER CLOUD (Essanay), Aug. 14.—The richly flavored humor of this two-reel comedy, based on a story by Mary Roberts Rinehart which appeared in "The Saturday Evening Post," has been skilfully transferred to the screen. The three maiden ladies are convincingly played by Camille D'Arcy, Marian Skinner and Louise Crolius. Edmund F. Cobb and Eugene Acker have the leading male roles.

ASHES OF INSPIRATION (Biograph), Aug. 17.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 670 issue of July 24.

MY LOST ONE (Vitagraph), Aug. 17.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 1016 issue of August 7.

THE SUBSTITUTED JEWEL (No. 5 of the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel") (Kalem), Aug. 18.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 1174 issue of August 14.

EAST LYNNE (Biograph), Aug. 18.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1324 issue of August 21.

SHADOWS OF THE PAST (Edison), Aug. 20.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1015 issue of August 7.

THE BARNSTORMERS (Kalem—"Broadway Favorites"), Aug. 23.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 1322 issue of August 21.

MISTER PAGANINI (Biograph), Aug. 24.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1175 issue of August 14.

Mutual Film Corporation.

WEIGHED IN THE BALANCE (Thanhouser), Aug. 13.—A story of good moral import, and well developed. A young man falls into temptation in a pool room, and handles counterfeit money to his sorrow. His employer gives him one more chance and he promises to make good.

THE CROGMERE RUBY (Thanhouser), Aug. 15.—An entertaining detective yarn, with a surprise finish. The thief poses as a Scotland Yard man, but the girl exposes him and turns out to be a sleuth herself. This is pleasing.

THE FATAL FINGER PRINTS (Komic), Aug. 15.—An excellent farce comedy in which the villain bridegroom is caught by means of finger prints on his bride's face. Some wet paint is accountable for the presence of the finger prints. The bridegroom, be it known, has stolen a necklace, and on the day of his wedding the secret service man grabs him.

THE BIG BROTHER (Reliance), Aug. 16.—This picture has been adapted from a short story by Robert C. McElravy, and makes an interesting one-reel offering. The story could have been done more effectively in two reels. It presents an incident of the Big Brother's movement, and has good moral backing.

A MARVELOUS MARATHONER (Falstaff), Aug. 16.—A good comedy number, featuring Boyd Marshall as a young man in love with a rich man's daughter. He is promised her hand if he wins the marathon race. He succeeds in this when a spinster admirer gets after him. The close is very funny. A good subject.

THE HONEYMOONERS (Beauty), Aug. 17.—A bright, pleasing comedy number, featuring Wm. Carroll, Marty Marten, Webster Campbell and Neva Gerber. Two young married couples are mistaken for one another in a perfectly plausible way and each couple gets a different sort of entertainment than anticipated. This is well handled and better than the average.

PROVIDENCE AND THE TWINS (Majestic), Aug. 17.—A well-made one-reel picture in which a woman who has grown old in brooding over an old time sweetheart would have lost her entire fortune of one thousand dollars at the return of the unscrupulous man, had not a couple of twins left with her by their mother misplaced the money, and filled the bag containing it with bits of paper.

AN INDEPENDENT WOMAN (Reliance), Aug. 18.—Here is an attractive western subject in which a woman tries very hard to be independent, but through the theft of all her money by one of the men of the mining camp who aims at getting back at her, she is obliged to change her course, and afterward falls in love with and marries the man who gives her aid.

THE ASSAYER OF LONE GAP (American), Aug. 18.—This production is based on pre-natal influence. It presents as an example a young man whose birthmark is the fear of a gun. The terror which the sight or sound of one strikes to his heart makes him appear cowardly. For this his sweetheart turns her back on him, which is the first thing to arouse in him the spirit of the conqueror. At the finale he wins out in a fight with the ring leader of the gang of cowboys who have been tormenting him.

THE ROOT OF ALL EVIL (Majestic), Aug. 20.—Spottiswoode Aiken and Jennie Lee play the part of a country couple who win $10,000 for having lived together thirty years without quarreling. She adopts a pig and he rebels. Trouble starts and an adventuress helps stir things up. This contains good character work and is very laughable where the old lady cleans up the blackmailers with a gun.

HELP! HELP! (Falstaff), Aug. 20.—Riley Chamberlin is featured in this as a judge with a house full of servants. When the women try to leave and get married he sentences their sweethearts to jail. There is an amusing idea in this, worked out with a fair degree of strength.

IN A JAPANESE GARDEN (Thanhouser), Aug. 22.—This is a prettily produced picture. It is the story of a dream inspired from toying with a miniature Japanese garden. The players in the picture are almost all Japanese, which gives an added charm to the pretty romance.

GLORIANNA'S GETAWAY (Falstaff), Aug. 23.—There is nothing especially new about the theme of this picture, but it is amusing. The colored maid taking advantage of her mistress' message to the effect that she will be unable to accompany her sweetheart to a masked ball that evening, dresses the part and deceives the young man. The revelation and Glorianna's getaway is distinctly funny.

HIS MYSTERIOUS PROFESSION (Beauty), Aug. 24.—Reviewed by James S. McQuade on page 1323 issue of August 21.

JERRY'S BUSY DAY (Cub), Aug. 26.—Featuring George Ovey in a series of park situations. He mixes up several sets of clothes and creates much mischief. The action is a little confusing in places and the plot might have been stronger, but there is some amusement in this.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE WAY OF A MOTHER (Reliance), Aug. 14.—A two-reel production of no special merit. Marguerite Marsh and George Walsh play the leads in a story that is not overly convincing. The story is of how a country mother, hearing on false authority that her son is going wrong, comes to the city to save him, and ends by blessing the love of her son and the pretty actress. The story is morally good.

THE KINSHIP OF COURAGE (Majestic), Aug. 15.—A rather attractive two-reel production with W. E. Lawrence and Wilbur Higby in the leading male roles, and Francelia Bilington and Mildred Marsh in the feminine leads. The picture is above the ordinary, and is partially set on the Mexican border. It tells of the appeal of man to man on the matter of regeneration from the life of a bandit to a life of honor, and naturally presents some fine types of manhood.

THE JILT (American), Aug. 16.—A two-reel subject, featuring Winifred Greenwood, George Field and Edward Coxen. The girl sends her lover away from the house during the absence of her parents and lets in the man with whom she had been flirting. Later a child is born, after the second man's marriage, and the problem is to discover which is father of the child. The girl finally admits her first lover to be the father. This, as can be seen, is very frank in treatment. It is, however, excellently staged and handled with as much delicacy as the subject-matter will permit.

SNAPSHOTS (Thanhouser), Aug. 24.—A very pleasing two-reel number in spite of some unevenness of photography. The events of the second reel in particular are brightly pictured and the situations contain considerable originality. In the first reel the bank president is shown looting the bank and casting the blame on the cashier, who has presumably gone to South America. Later a small boy accidentally photographs the pair in Central Park near Cleopatra's needle. The love story is ingeniously handled. In spite of some minor faults this is better than the average production and leaves a pleasant feeling with the observer.

PINTO BEN (Broncho), Aug. 25.—This two-reel number features Wm. S. Hart as a cowboy reciting a poem entitled "Pinto Ben." The poem is printed between scenes in eight-line stanzas and tells of the manner in which a cow pony saved his master's life. The scenes are very picturesque and include some stirring views of the cattle range during the roundup. The tale then moves to the Chicago stockyards, where Pinto Ben escapes from a stampede and loses his own life in saving the hero. The number is a pleasing variation of the average western offering and will make many friends.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY. CHAPTER XVI (American), Aug. 16.—This serial continues to be interesting. In chapter 16, which is entitled "The Path of Peril," there is a successful attempt by Vivian to fascinate Arthur, after he has rescued her from drowning. Esther takes a perilous ride in the mine, and the Englishman, Smythe, picks up the diamond where it has been deposited in the stream by the pelican, and is looking stupidly at it as the curtain falls.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE'S NEWS, NO. 62, 1915, Aug. 4.—In this issue some of the interesting items are an historical pageant in Salt Lake City, scenes of the flood at Erie, Pa., and the exercises of the Grecian cavalry which is being kept in readiness for a call to the front.

THE SIERRA NEVADAS (Picturesque Spain) (Globe), Aug. 23.—Another scenic showing the wonderful beauty in the passes and on the summits of this mountain range.

THE BOIS DE BOULOGNE (Picturesque France) (Photocolor), Aug. 23.—An intensely interesting colored scenic covering only part of a reel.

PRESSING HIS SUIT (Phunphilms), Aug. 23.—A farce comedy in which a good deal of horse play takes place. It is, however, not uninteresting, and would get a laugh with the average audience.

TERRIBLY STUCKUP (Phunphilms), Aug. 28.—This is a farce comedy which is very attractive. It presents a rivalry for the hand of the pretty maid of the story, which ends by a fall in the water for all concerned. The picture has been put on with considerable skill.

ROMANCE OF ELAINE (Episode No. 9), Aug. 9.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1325 issue of August 21.

THE INGRATE (Victory), Aug. 16.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1177 issue of August 14.

THE MONOPOLIST (Victory), Aug. 21.—A three-reel production of fair values. The story is scarcely strong enough for a three-reel production, and in spite of the fact that the picture has been given the advantage of elaborate setting, and a capable cast, there is felt somewhat of a lameness in construction.

A RINGER FOR MAX (Punch), Aug. 23.—A two-reel comedy production which is especially attractive. Max Linder plays a double role with his usual gusto. A man who discovers that he is really Max Linder's double tries to see how far he can go on his nerve while impersonating the actor. The work is so well done that the story carries through two reels without being tiresome.

THE SILENT CHORD (Victory), Aug. 28.—This production has been made in Italy, and carries considerable interest. The story is of a young man whose feminine companionship led him to dishonesty. His sister's effort in later years to help him to rise, leads to trouble between her and her husband. The brother is shot on her doorsteps, after which a reconciliation takes place between husband and wife. The production is in three reels.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 179 (Universal), Aug. 11.—An exceptionally diversified number, full of interesting scenes, taken in this country and abroad.

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A PHOTO (L-Ko), Aug. 15.—A low comedy number, with Irene Wallace and others in the cast. She is a cigarette girl and puts her photo and address in a box of them. Two men write to her, and complications ensue. The tone of the comedy is not the best, but it has points of merit.

ROOM 22 (Universal Special), Aug. 16.—The action is good in this ninth instalment of "The Broken Coin" series. Kitty is saved from her difficulties by Roleaux. Then begins active effort on the part of Kitty, Count Frederick, Count Sachio and the Apaches to gain possession of the broken coin. One of the Apaches murders Johns and Roleaux brings him to justice in a dramatic manner. The number is characteristic and continues the interest.

A SEASHORE ROMEO (Rex), Aug. 22.—Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips are the central figures in this production which is only moderately amusing. The story is another of those affairs where the father opposes the daughter's association with the man of her choice. The finale takes place at the seashore, where a ruse on the part of the lovers wherein the young man saves his sweetheart from drowning, brings father to time.

HIS LUCKY VACATION (Nestor), Aug. 23.—Herbert Stanley and Billy Rhodes are featured in this number, written by Frank Harris. The girl's admirer palms himself off as a taxi driver, but she evades him. Later he saves her from a fake fire and then a real one. This makes quite a pleasing number.

HIS EGYPTIAN AFFINITY (Nestor), Aug. 27.—A farce comedy, well produced, and enacted in an enthusiastic manner. The play is full of rapid action, and has evidently been produced at some expense. It deals, as would be supposed, with a subject almost wholly Oriental, where a spring touched in a sarcophagus two thousand years later than the period of the opening scenes, causes the dead to return and the feud of the past is recommenced and finished with a flourish. Victoria Ford and Eddie Lyons have the leading roles.

THE BOX OF BANDITS (Victor), Aug. 27.—Featuring Violet McMillan in a fairy story which should please children in particular. The little girl dreams of opening an old trunk in the attic, from which three robbers emerge. The action is of a light comedy sort.

THE BRAVEST OF THE BRAVE (Joker), Aug. 28.—This one-reel farce uses a comedy crook as its leading character, played by Max Asher. The doings of this gentleman and divers other characters are somewhat familiar, at times, but all work with a vim, and produce a satisfactory amount of laughs.

A CAD (Rex), Aug. 24.—This number, written by Raymond L. Schrock, features Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips and Jos. W. Girard. The action is quite melodramatic and pictures the efforts of one suitor to kill his rival. The good photography and fine wood scenes are the strongest features of this offering.

THE MYSTERY OF THE TAPESTRY ROOM (Big U), Aug. 26.—Reviewed by Edward Weitzel on page 1178 issue of August 14.

Mabel Trunnelle

IT IS only when, in such tense plays as "Shadows from the Past," the remarkably plotted play by Director Richard Ridgley, that the ability of Mabel Trunnelle, of the Edison Company, to surmount the wordless, silent screen is seen enabling us actually to sense, with all the keenness of the speaking stage, the emotions to which she is able to give voice.

To try to analyze the reason for this power would be much like trying to dissect the intangible but strange secret of personality. Some might say that it is Miss Trunnelle's eyes which seem able to paint the gray depths of despair or the fleetest, lightest fancy of the buoyant girl. Others would say it is her unusual mobility of face. Yet watch face or eyes ever so closely, we can but feel we are as far from the secret as ever, for in the usual sense—change of eye or face—there is astonishingly little change perceptible.

Mabel Trunnelle.

In her biggest scenes Miss Trunnelle's screen work is characterized by a gracefulness that heightens rather than detracts from the power of the scene. It must be an inherent gracefulness, for one could never, through training alone, succeed in maintaining the intensity of an emotional scene as Miss Trunnelle does, and remember a trained gracefulness without giving the suggestion of a pose. Her work always bears what might be called character consistency strength, because, partly, she always closely studies her play so that she may intelligently present every change of mood and bring forth with illuminating clearness every actuating motive in the impersonation in a consistent way. In that most excellent of schools, the stage, Miss Trunnelle was featured for three years in "Under Southern Skies," in "The Blue Mouse" and in "Lena Rivers." Five years have been spent before the camera.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

SO MUCH has been said of late by those interested in the "silent" drama as to its welfare as compared with that of the old line of theatrical work that, despite the great success of the motion pictures, some people are inclined to believe that many of the sentiments are subsidized. It is a "crowning glory" to the moving pictures that their position today has not been due to what is known in the theatrical field as "press work." Quite to the contrary, the pictures have been ignored, if not abhorred, by the press. They have won upon their own merits. These merits, strange as it may seem, have been recognized first (publicly) by the local newspapers that go direct into the families. A little four-page publication of Flatbush, Brooklyn, called "Parish News," falls into line with "America" in telling its readers something about motion pictures. It says "Day of Better Films Pictures Here." It should be remembered that by no possible stretch of imagination can it be inferred that these tiny publications are subsidized by motion picture makers or exhibitors. No such advertisements, and few of others, appear in them. The papers are published in the interests of their respective parishioners.

The "America" and "Parish News" speaking to the church people, say "the very best actors and actresses are turning their eyes from the crowded audiences before whom they once loved to play, and are now enacting their art before the camera. Almost every day new names of national importance are transferred from the theater to the ranks of the moving pictures. . . . Many will welcome this new development, even while they recognize that it is not an unmixed good, for it is a movement upward and not downward. . . . With the influx of real art into the motion picture the elevation of the standard would seem inevitable."

The publications from which these quotations are made do not run theatrical columns. They are not subsidized by either advertisements, nor passes. Neither are they controlled by associations with managers. The thoughts given are free, voluntary and entirely in the interests of their readers. The sentiments expressed by them, carried direct into the household, have popularized the entertainment for the masses, in spite of opposition on the part of the paid press. The "Parish News," of Flatbush, for instance, is a better guide on amusements than the paper that boasts of a million or more paid circulation.

A lady who has been in the theatrical profession for years and who has been recently trying to attain a livelihood in the motion picture business said the other day, "I am grateful to the motion pictures because they have aroused the theatrical people to their duty. The great popularity of the pictures has shown them what the public wants in the regular theatrical line and the coming season will show a wonderful revival for the straight business." A friend took me aside and said: "That lady really believes all she says. Do not argue with her. She is happy. In spite of the heaviest fall of rain she will persuade herself that the sun is shining bright and that there are no clouds in sight."

By an intelligent combination and a sensible presentation of facts the organized exhibitors of this city have secured from the authorities a reasonable modification of the order against the transportation of motion picture films. This is something for serious thought. Why not exercise the same power in other directions? For instance, why not aid the authorities in the detection and suppression of those exhibitors who violate the laws at their houses—those exhibitors who are in the business solely for the gate receipts and who never attend the meetings, or contribute to the support of the organization that is working for the benefit of the motion picture business? Before the real exhibitors can relieve themselves of the many persecutions that unjustly fall upon them they must exterminate the few whose transgressions bring evil upon the many. These transgressors, if not the allies, are the excuses for the conspirators. Now that the standard of productions has been raised to a point where it challenges the critics, let the legitimate exhibitors begin a crusade against the reckless exhibitors whose outward displays not only mislead the public but are painful exhibitions to the legitimate exhibitors. There are many places on the east and west sides of this city that, for this reason, should not be allowed to operate. The organized exhibitors can prevail upon the Commissioner of Licenses as successfully as they did upon the Fire Commissioner. Many places along Fourteenth street, for instance, do not care a snap for the present or future of the motion picture business. They exhibit what seems to them the most sensational subject, regardless of the law. It is the effect made by such places that has an important bearing on censorship action in the country districts. Such places depend almost solely upon transient patronage and the sole aim is to get the almighty admission fee. The organized exhibitors of this city and state should lose no time in giving this matter attention. The sooner the catch-penny picture house is driven out of existence so much sooner will the agitators be deprived of their chief bone of contention. It is no longer a question of the play, or the player, but the play house.

The contracts offered by nearly all the theatrical managers for the 1915-16 season contain a clause never incorporated before. It stipulates that "said artist specifically agrees not to render or perform services for motion pictures during the life of this agreement." Mr. Harris, of Cohan & Harris, the well-known theatrical manager of this city, explains that the clause means that the players hired by his firm must not give part of the time to picture work. He adds the prediction that before the close of the season the legitimate managers will draw a still tighter line and refuse to employ players having affiliations with the motion pictures. In justification of the latter regulation Mr. Harris says the William Fox company has declared it will not employ actors who have anything to do with the stage.

Such an announcement as Mr. Harris makes does not come as a surprise, except that the policy adopted by the old line managers is not as radical as it was expected to be. During most of last season well founded reports were heard that the old line managers intended to cut off their lists any player who took up motion picture work, and these reports were very justly criticised. The managers have shown good judgment in not attempting to put into force what the reports said they intended doing. So far as the motion picture companies are concerned, they will not be a party to inducing players to violate the new clause. Quite to the contrary, they will not entertain propositions from, or make overtures to, people who are tied up with stage engagements. This decision was voluntarily made by a number of the large companies before the other managers put the new clause into their contracts, and it was not due to any competitive spirit, or prejudice against the stage. Companies that put on pictures which require weeks for production have found it very inconvenient and expensive to have in the cast people who are under contract with the regular theatrical managers. Naturally, the players must abide by the regular contracts and the picture producers must await their convenience. The result has been that when the picture producer was ready to take up a continuance of his picture he found some of the most needed people tied up with rehearsals or matinee performances on the stage. A prominent director, speaking of experience of this kind, says that one day he had an elaborate set and a large number of people ready to continue his picture when he discovered that one of the most important parts was in the hands of an actor who had started rehearsals in an uptown theater. Messengers were started on the run and telephone wires were kept busy trying to locate the actor, who had left his hotel and no one knew where he was rehearsing. He was finally located, but the picture had to be postponed for a couple of days to give the actor an opportunity to get his regular manager to fix his rehearsal so that the actor could finish his work in the picture. Had the manager been as prejudiced as some are, the picture people might have been obliged to get another actor and go over all the work again.

It will thus be seen that when the picture producers refuse to use people who are tied up by theatrical contracts they do so for pure business reasons. Perhaps it would be better to say the policy is one of self protection. On the other hand, the old line managers hold there is danger that if their people spend their spare time in silent play work it may tend to impair their work in the speaking parts at night. To all of which sensible people must say "Amen!"

But the restriction must end here if the managers wish to escape adverse criticism. To say that stage people will be boycotted for motion picture work, or vice versa, will not strike a popular chord. Mr. Harris says it is certain that in the near future a distinct line will be drawn between the two professions. That line was drawn by the old managers long ago. In drawing the line the regulars should be careful that they do not make their knock a boost.

Farrar Says Farewell

Famous Opera Star Brings Her First Photoplay Work to a Notable End.

THERE is more or less gloom in the colony of motion picture stars and players in Southern California since Geraldine Farrar left the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Sunday, August 15, and started eastward for New York and a brilliant season in concert and grand opera at the Metropolitan Opera House. She had been at the Lasky studios since early in June and in the two months had completed picturizations of "Carmen" and two other plays.

The farewell entertainment, which was attended by more than one hundred leading figures in the motion picture industry of Los Angeles and vicinity, is now a matter of history, not likely to be soon forgotten by those who attended or by those who watched the festivities from without the hedge which surrounds the house which Miss Farrar and her parents have called "home" this summer.

"Saturday evening at nine o'clock Miss Farrar officially started her farewell party; Sunday at midnight Miss Farrar officially ended her farewell party" is the preface of a description of the farewell written by one who attended. He continues, "Supper, breakfast, lunch, dinner and supper were served during the intermissions between the dances. The orchestra worked on six-hour shifts. A pleasant time was had by everyone but the neighbors."

That, perhaps, was putting the case rather imaginatively. But that Miss Farrar was a splendid hostess none of those present will deny. Not long after the arrival of the guests Miss Farrar disappeared for a few minutes, to reappear in her "Carmen" costume. She sang several arias from "Carmen" and returned a moment later as Clo Clo San and sang some of the numbers from "Madama Butterfly." This part of the entertainment was a startling surprise to everyone, and the prima donna was congratulated again and again. She responded with numerous encores.

Among those who attended Miss Farrar's farewell were Mrs. David Belasco, Mrs. Morris Gest, Miss Helen Ware, Miss Blanche Ring, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil B. De Mille, Mr. and Mrs. William C. De Mille, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Melford, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Reicher, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. McGowan, Miss Helen Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Buckland, and Messrs. Fred Kley, Kenneth McGaffey, Thomas Meighan, Pedro de Cordoba, William Desmond, Frank A. Connor, Louis Sherwin, dramatic critic of the New York Evening Globe; James Sullivan, Miss Jeanne MacPherson, Miss Frances Ring, Miss Charlotte Greenwood, and many others.

Miss Farrar's special train left Los Angeles for New York on Sunday night. No better proof of her great popularity in Los Angeles could be better shown than the huge throng that had gathered to bid her farewell and a safe journey. Her private car was literally laden with roses and as the train disappeared from view Miss Farrar remained on the rear platform waving good-bye.

The prima donna and her party reached Chicago at eight o'clock on Thursday morning and arrived in New York at five o'clock Friday afternoon, August 20.

BUSHMAN IN "PENNINGTON'S CHOICE."

Francis X. Bushman, heading the company of Quality Players, has departed for Big Bear Valley, where the production of "Pennington's Choice" will take place. Bushman is heading an all-star cast composed of Helen Wolcott, Roland Farris, Lester Cuneo and Helen Dunbar.

A great feature in connection with this story that sport fans will be interested in is the fact that James J. Jeffries, the prize fighter, will be seen in the production to good advantage in a number of training scenes which will be taken at his camp in the Sierra Madres. The story is one of the Canadian-Northwest simple, yet thrilling to the extent that many unusual and hazardous deeds will be performed. The picture is of five-reel length and will be directed by Mr. W. J. Bowman.

RUSSELL TO REPRESENT HORSLEY IN ENGLAND.

D. W. Russell, recently appointed representative of David Horsley in England, sailed for London August 14, accompanied by Mrs. Russell. In London his headquarters will be at No. 193 Wardour street, W., from which office he will handle the entire output of the Horsley studios abroad. Mr. Russell has been associated with the Horsley interests for several years, first as Western representative, with headquarters in Chicago, and more recently as general sales manager, with headquarters in Bayonne.

Famous Players Secures Marshal Neilan

THE Famous Players Film Company, in many of whose recent productions he has appeared to advantage, has now secured the permanent services of the popular leading man, Marshal Neilan, who, within a comparatively short time after his entrance into the motion picture field, has risen to an estimable place in the ranks of film favorites.

Mr. Neilan has been presented by the Famous Players in conspicuous and leading roles in "The Love Route," "May Blossom," "Rags," in which his capable support of Miss Pickford was favorably noted by all the trade paper critics in their reviews of this subject, and in a forthcoming Pickford production, "A Girl of Yesterday," will be again seen in a similarly important part. Mr. Neilan also played the title role in one of the early Lasky productions on the Paramount program, "The Country Boy." In all of these various plays he has displayed a fine dramatic sense, strong personal force, and that other essential of screen acting, magnetism.

Marshal Neilan.

The consistent approbation with which his previous appearances in the Famous Players' releases have met throughout the country has now induced this concern to place him under permanent contract. His past experience, comprising, as it does, every element of dramatic work, ranging from stock to support of Broadway favorites, enables him to undertake with an adequate measure of ability, any screen role, however difficult. When, added to this, his youth and photographic attractiveness are considered, it may be reasonably assumed that Mr. Neilan will be conceded a valuable acquisition to the regular organization of the Famous Players Film Company.

It is planned that Mr. Neilan will be assigned some very important work in Famous Players productions now being prepared or contemplated.

FLORENCE ROCKWELL WITH FROHMAN CO.

Florence Rockwell, whose work on the stage with the three "M's," Miller, Mansfield and Mantell, as well as with a long line of New York successes, places her in the front rank of dramatic artists, has been secured by the Frohman Amusement Corporation to star in their next photoplay, work on which will be commenced in a few days.

Miss Rockwell has all the requisites for beautiful picture work—face, figure and grace—and adds to these the ability to act. These charms, combined with her magnetic personality, make her one of the "finds" which delight a director's heart, and in the powerful play which has been secured for her Miss Rockwell should find herself as great a favorite as she has been on the stage.

LESSER TAKES STANDARD PROGRAM.

Al. Lichtman, vice-president and general manager of the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Inc., wires in from the Coast that Sol. L. Lesser, president of the All-Star Features Distributors, Inc., handling the Metro program in California, Nevada and Arizona, has completed arrangements to serve the Standard program to the theaters of the above territory through his well-known Golden Gate Film Exchange in San Francisco.

FROHMAN CO. WITHDRAWS FROM WORLD FILM.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation has withdrawn from the program of the World Film Corporation. It is said they are in negotiation with two prominent releasing exchanges but no definite arrangements have been made as yet. William L. Sherrill, the company's president, says that the success in disposing of territorial rights on "Just Out of College" has been so great that he may continue to dispose of his productions through this channel.

Attitude of Producer Toward Censorship

Some Light Thrown on the Question by Arthur S. Friend, General Counsel of the Lasky Company.

INSPIRED by the recent proceedings brought by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company to raise the ban placed upon "The Secret Orchard" by the Board of Censors of the state of Pennsylvania, Arthur S. Friend, general counsel of the Lasky Company, discusses the subject of censorship from a safe and sane standpoint which should appeal to all who have given it careful attention. Mr. Friend, unlike many who speak and write of censorship, admits the right of government to control offerings of literature in whatever form and insists that the existing laws should be respected. In the course of his argument, which follows, he suggests the remedy:

On Monday, Aug 9, 1915, the Hon John M. Patterson, sitting in the Court of Common Pleas for Philadelphia County, Pennsylvania, decided, after a hearing lasting several hours that the ban placed by the Pennsylvania Board of Censors on the motion picture photoplay, entitled "The Secret Orchard," must be removed.

For many months the entire motion picture industry has been concerned with the question of censorship as constituted by the acts of the legislatures and aldermanic bodies of several of the states and cities in the United States of America.

There has been violent opposition to this form of so-called legalized censorship, and there has been a sturdy and effective defense, made undoubtedly more sturdy and more effective by the violence of the opposition. I have heard so many flamboyant orators speak of "free speech," "untrammelled art," "freedom of the press," and the "breadth and scope of literature," that I have come to wonder whether the world at large does not believe that all of those engaged in the moving picture industry are obsessed with the notion that theirs is a field in which salaciousness may run riot, and regulation and control must, because they will it so, be thrown to the winds.

No careful observer can honestly avoid the conclusion that some of those engaged in the industry are men who know neither business morals, nor business principles; men who respect only the desire to gain and who in a large part seem to take great joy in the excitement of producing and distributing pictures of such a character that if translated into straight dramatic form or into narrative, would never be permitted to be shown on any stage or printed in any publication of any kind in this great country of "free speech" and "untrammelled art."

It goes almost without saying that there are also engaged in the industry men who have a thorough and comprehensive appreciation of honest business principle and motive, and a worthy appreciation of right as distinguished from wrong. It is the men of this latter class who have been made to suffer on account of the sins of those of the former class. And we might as well now, as later, in a spirit of honesty to ourselves, admit that the methods used by motion picture people of the former class have brought about an excuse if not incomplete justification of the so-called legalized censorship in the several states and cities of the country.

Long before motion pictures were possible, there existed the right on the part of all the governments, federal, state and municipal, to regulate and control the offerings of literature, whether in the form of narrative or dramatic composition, which right was as positive and as real as that which is now exercised by the various Boards of Censors in respect to motion pictures.

The people of New York can recall that the police of their city stopped the productions of several highly salacious plays which were attempted to be shown in the New York theaters, and within the last few months a play attempted to be offered in Boston on the stage of one of the legitimate, first-class theaters was stopped by the police. Time and again the circulation of novels, stories and so-called "dime novels" was stopped by the authorities. And all of this was done on the theory that the production of such plays and the circulation of such literature tended toward the impairment of the morals of the community.

Pennsylvania and the other States which adopted so-called legalized censorship for motion pictures have merely relied upon the inherent right of the State to exercise its so-called police power, and that power, adopted a modus operandi in respect to the exhibition of motion pictures of a questionable character. Judge Paterson's decision to which reference was made at the outset, is that the Courts will take jurisdiction to right any wrong resulting from action of the Censorship Board. The public morals must always be protected. It is to be said that because in the first instance the right to protect them is vested in a body designated as a Board of Censors, the protection will be less than it should be or that any injustice will result to those who are honestly carrying on their business of producing and exhibiting decent, artistic motion pictures. Clearly not, for, after all, the board of censors like the police department and the other executive and administrative departments of our government is made up of human beings whose capabilities and fallabilities are, on the average, like those of any other human beings. Often, through sitting too long on such a board, the members get the censorial attitude, just as theatrical critics, by reviewing too many plays, become obsessed with the notion that their only function is to find fault; but that is a difficulty inherent in men, not in laws or in customs. If Boards of Censors are eliminated, there would be no more right to show salacious or immoral motion pictures than there is now. Censors may err, but when they do there is left to him who is aggrieved the right to submit his grievances to the courts with the assurance that he will there get as much relief as he may be entitled to.

On the occasion of my being in Philadelphia in connection with the appeal taken to the courts from the ruling of the censors, condemning "The Secret Orchard," I was told that a short time since the Pennsylvania manager of a motion picture distributing corporation specializing in the distribution of sensational motion pictures which had been condemned by the censors. The imposition of the fine was in accordance with the provisions of the Pennsylvania statute. The distribution company had not appealed from the ruling of the censors, but had undertaken to ignore it so there was no question as to the legality of the subsequent proceedings which resulted in the fine. The manager requested permission to go to his office to get the money with which to pay the fine. With the consent of the chairman of the board of censors, the court granted the defendant the indulgence asked. To show his appreciation of the trust placed in him he promptly ran away.

Among those who cry loudest against censorship is the company which employed this fugitive. Is it at all remarkable then that the censors should feel that they are in other instances dealing with men of questionable character? How are they to learn to differentiate? The producers are miles away from the public. Quietly and without ostentation, they produce their pictures in studios located at various points throughout the country and between them and the public at large come the myriads of distributors, exchangemen and exhibitors. Truly, if in any industry the good must suffer through the sins of the bad, it is so in the motion picture industry.

The cure of the evil, if it is an evil and if we would cure it, does not lie in fighting the censorship laws. So long as they are laws, we must respect them. That is the first step. The next step and the most difficult, is to clean up within ourselves and to make the world know and understand during that cleaning process that we do not deserve to be wholly condemned because, among us, there are some who are unworthy. By continuing to consistently produce worthy photoplays and avoiding the temptation to cater to the sensation loving desire of the minority of the American picture public, the producer can demonstrate that censorship legislation is bad because it is unnecessary, because it complicates and retards an industry the development of which should be encouraged. Through its still new form of expression, literature and art of the very highest type is being given to the world. The producer alone cannot make its proof. He needs the active co-operation of the distributor, the exchangeman and the exhibitor. The distributor should refuse to handle the sensational picture; the exchangeman should refuse to handle it, and the exhibitor should refuse to exhibit it.

Appreciating that there is no philanthropy in the industry, understanding fully that the men engaged in it are trying to make a commercial success, I realize that the temptation to produce, distribute and exhibit sensational pictures is great to those who lack foresight, and who, like so many Americans, engaged in a business, which, in general, returns unusual profits, are prone to count the present pennies and forget the future dollars. Whether there are more of such men in the motion picture industry than in other industries I do not know. That there are some is shown by the continued production of sensational pictures. Those who can see beyond their noses know what will happen to the men in that branch of the business, but in the interim, and until that does happen and until they are driven out by the financial reverses that are certain to come to them, the clean men of the industry will have to walk with the criminal's brand upon them unless, as pointed out above, concerted action on the part of those who believe in the future of the industry as an honest and a worthy one. The world is convinced that the art of motion pictures is above the presentation of mere scandal, obscenity, baseness and vulgarity.

There is nothing to be gained by berating the censors. They are human beings trying in all sincerity, I have no doubt, to act wihtin the strict provisions of constitutional enactments. If they make mistakes, the mistakes can be rectified as they were in "The Secret Orchard" case by submitting the issues to a regularly organized court.

When the people are convinced, as they can be, if the decent men in the industry adhere consistently to their decency, that so far as they are concerned, censors are not required, the truth will come to light. Then, without to do, the legislation that has created these boards, will be taken from the books and the boards themselves will pass into oblivion.

Richie Ling in "The Woman Next Door"

RICHIE LING, who essays the important role of Benjamin Whittier in George Kleine's film production of Owen Davis' "The Woman Next Door," is one of the most recent acquisitions of the moving picture screen at the expense of the speaking stage. Although he might boast of a long and successful career in both the operatic and straight dramatic branches of "legitimate" endeavor, Mr. Ling's chief delight at present is to point to the fact that in his first appearance in the silent drama he has given what he is told is one of the most finished portrayals of the middle aged broker-clubman ever seen in moving pictures.

Richie Ling.

To the support of Miss Fenwick in "The Woman Next Door" Mr. Ling brought many years of stage experience and an unusual amount of native dramatic ability. Lovers of light opera will remember him as prominent in the support of such famous prima donnas as Lillian Russell, Alice Neilsen, Marie Tempest and Fritzi Scheff, with all of whom he sang roles that called for genuine talent as an actor as well as an unusually fine singing voice. Mr. Ling has also made his mark in straight drama in such productions as "The White Sister," with Viola Allen; Charles Frohman's "Decorating Clementine," David Belasco's "Temperamental Journey," and "The Butterfly on the Wheel."

"The Woman Next Door" will be released September 1st through the Kleine-Edison Feature Film Service.

Pathe's "Gold Rooster" Producers

Who the Men Are That Are Directing the New Line of Plays.

GENERAL MANAGER GASNIER of Pathe, when he determined to put out in the fall features of the highest quality, found his hardest problem to be the assembling of a thoroughly competent corps of producers. Buying the picture rights to famous novels and plays for these features was comparatively easy, but looking back over his long experience as chief director of the Pathe studios he knew how easy it was for a mediocre director to either spoil a picture or else run its cast up to a prohibitive figure. It took him months to get his producing force organized and now he feels that man for man there is no staff of directors in the country to whom the Pathe group should yield the palm. It is interesting to note that of the eight, only three have not been actors.

Donald Mackenzie has been with Pathe for over three years. When the "Perils of Pauline" was put on, his ability was recognized by his being placed in charge of the production of most of the episodes. Mr. Mackenzie has two pictures already on the Gold Rooster program, "The Spender" and "The Galloper." He will soon begin work on the third, Richard Carle's "Mary's Lamb."

George Fitzmaurice started in as Pathe's scenario editor several years ago, and later, becoming a director, put on two successful pictures for Pathe. After a number of months with Kleine, during which he made a number of big pictures, he returned to Pathe and is just finishing "Via Wireless," a big theatrical success, which will probably be the second Gold Rooster play to be released.

Edward Jose starred in a number of Pathe's best pictures a year ago, and then went with Fox. He has, since his return to Pathe, finished two very fine plays, Wm. J. Locke's "The Beloved Vagabond," and "Simon, the Jester," and is now at work on Henry C. Rowland's "Closing Net."

L. D. and T. W. Wharton have been identified with some of Pathe's best pictures for several years. With the "Romance of Elaine" finished, they have immediately started work upon various features with quality casts and stories. No producers in the business can make better pictures than the Whartons.

Arnold Daly is the latest acquisition to the staff of Pathe's Gold Rooster play producers. Famous as an actor on the legitimate stage, he added to his fame and popularity in the "Exploits of Elaine." Trying the production end recently for the first time, he made a feature based on one of the "Ashton Kirk" stories that will cause a sensation. Mr. Daly's talent and long theatrical experience insure the excellence of his product.

The Horkheimers, H. M. and E. D., have made a big name for themselves during the past year. No company has shown greater improvement, versatility and artistic talent than theirs, the Balboa. With their fine new studios and their big force of well-known able players, the special features from their studios for the Gold Rooster plays may be confidently expected to be away above par.

KELCEY AND SHANNON IN "THE SPHINX."

Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon are rushing "The Sphinx," in which they are to appear under the Universal banner. Their company is working day and night to get the picture finished by August 20, as they are due to commence their "legitimate" season in Detroit on August 23. Jack Adolfi, their director, is producing the picture on an elaborate scale, and quality will not be sacrificed to speed if Jack has anything to say about it. The story of "The Sphinx" is an engrossing one and the completed feature will make a notable addition to the Universal Broadway Feature program.

MENGER & RING MAN ON THE ROAD.

Arnold Kornicker, representing Menger & Ring, manufacturers of picture and lobby display frames especially adapted to the needs of the picture theater, has left New York for an extended trip through Pennsylvania, Ohio and Michigan. Mr. Kornicker will visit as many theaters as possible and will endeavor to cover the field thoroughly, but any managers who desire to see him can be sure of an appointment by communicating with the New York office of the firm at 304 West 42d street. As this is about the time to think of whatever remodeling your theater needs before the opening of the season, a look at the line of display frames made by Menger & Ring might be profitable.

NEW "QUALITY" STUDIO.

The new studio of the Quality Picture Corporation is fast becoming one of the most modern motion picture studios on the Pacific Coast. The new diffusing system was installed last week and has proven to be a wonderful asset for picture making. The artificial studio will be equipped with Cooper-Hewitts and will be finished by the 1st of October. The floor space is 100 feet long by 50 feet wide. The new laboratory will be built as soon as the electric studio is finished.

EXCELLENT CAST IN PATHE'S "THE CLOSING NET."

"The Closing Net," by H. C. Rowland, a coming Pathe Gold Rooster play, will have a strong cast. Edward Jose, who is producing it, has signed Howard Estabrook, the popular leading man now appearing in the new play, "Search Me," at the Gaiety theater, New York, for the lead. He will be supported by Bliss Milford, Kathryn Browne-Decker and Madaline Traverse.

NEW MOTION PICTURE MAGAZINE.

The latest motion picture magazine to claim the attention of the public and also exhibitors is Photoplay Vogue, a copy of the first issue of which has reached us. The initial number is in thirty-four pages, a quarter of that space in advertisements. The journal will be issued on the 5th and 20th of each month, and will be printed in Buffalo. Frederic J. Knoll is editor.

KLEINE'S "MONEY MASTER" WILL NOT BE SHOWN AT CANDLER.

Owing to the commencement of rehearsals, the Candler theater will not be used for the special exhibitors' performance of George Kleine's "The Money Master" Tuesday, August 24, as previously announced.

PARAMOUNT TRAVEL BOOKLET.

Paramount Pictures Corporation has issued an eight-page booklet descriptive of its travel series. The pages are about 10 by 13 inches. The printing is in two colors. There are many illustrations. In composition, both as to contents and composition, it is a creditable production.

Sydney E. Abel

SYDNEY E. ABEL, manager of the Cleveland office of the V-L-S-E, prior to his connection with the Big Four, gained valuable experience in many capacities in the film industry; mechanical, artistic and exhibition experiences have qualified him for the responsible position he now holds.

Sydney E. Abel.

Before realizing the possibilities in pictures, Mr. Abel was interested in legitimate amusements on the business end. Deciding that the growth of pictures would be rapid and profitable, he managed to secure small "bits" as an extra in the Vitagraph studios in Flatbush, Brooklyn, where he gained his first inside knowledge in the film business. In turn he was appointed manager of the Boston office for the Exclusive Film Service Corporation, and then entered the service of the Mutual Film Corporation, some three years ago, managing the Harrisburg, Wilkes-Barre and Pittsburgh, Pa., offices, respectively.

Mr. Abel is a competent, efficient salesman and his experience fits him well to direct the energies of the large sales force operating from his office in the interest of V-L-S-E productions.

His record as a sales-promoter is excellent and he makes a valuable addition to the premier film distributing organization.

McKim, Another New Lubin Director

LUBIN of Philadelphia announces the engagement of Edward McKim, who was identified with various different companies, and whose last play, "The Confession," in five parts, was filmed by him in the record breaking time of twelve days and scored an instantaneous success.

Mr. McKim was born in Pittsburgh and made his professional entrance on the speaking stage as Philistus in "Damon and Pythias." His success on the speaking stage was such that soon he became leading man for Mary Wainwright and made a tour of the country in Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night."

Edward McKim.

After being leading man in various plays, especially leading man in "The Man of the Hour," Mr. McKim turned his attention to the direction of photoplays, and succeeded in making an enviable record for himself.

At Lubin's he makes a specialty of straight comedies.

Miss Warda Howard

ESSANAY has secured an unusually talented and beautiful actress in Warda Howard, well known in legitimate stage productions on Broadway and throughout the country.

Miss Howard acts exceptionally well in emotional roles and firmly established herself in motion picture work playing opposite Henry B. Walthall in "Temper." The play is full of emotional climaxes and Miss Howard brings out the subtle expressions called for in a way that makes the character she represents a living, breathing being on the screen. She not only has demonstrated her talent in acting before the camera but has proven an excellent photographic type.

Miss Warda Howard.

A wide experience on the speaking stage has ably fitted her for almost any role, she having starred in such productions as "The Wolf," "The Lion and the Mouse," "An American Widow," "When Knighthood Was In Flower," "The Cowboy and the Lady," "Paid in Full," "The Christian," "The Girl of the Golden West," "Sapho," "Brewster's Millions," and many others.

Miss Howard is a daughter of Professor C. H. S. Howard, of the University of California. She herself is a graduate of the university and while in school starred in all the college theatrical productions. Her talent was recognized even then and she had no difficulty in getting a small part on the stage, rising in a short time to taking leads.

PATHE TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

The Pathe office force is all "het up" over a tennis tournament which has been gotten up to take place at Lee Woodruff's courts at Brighton Beach on Saturday, August 28. Mr. Woodruff has generously offered the use of his courts for the occasion, and it is planned to have a swim and dinner after the championship has been decided.

There are twelve entries and it is whispered that several of the boys have got something up their sleeves in the way of real tennis ability. General Manager Gasnier will probably be present to award the prizes, and Pearl White may take her life in her hands and referee.

BLANCHE RING TO APPEAR IN FORMER SUCCESS.

Following the announcement involving the acquisition of Blanche Ring, the well-known theatrical star, for the screen by Oliver Morosco, it is stated that the vehicle selected for Miss Ring to make her motion picture debut, is "The Yankee Girl," in which play she scored a big success on Broadway and throughout the country.

In the title character as Jessie Gordon, Miss Ring appeared in "The Yankee Girl" during the latter part of 1901 and played the same part at the Herald Square theater, New York, opening in February, 1910. After registering one of the biggest hits of the season at the Herald Square, the star again started a tour of the the country in this piece, meeting with popular favor wherever presented.

UNIVERSAL HAS "THE MIRTH OF THE NATION."

"The Mirth of the Nation," a five-reel burlesque and travesty written by H. H. Van Loan for the Universal, is now on the stocks at Universal City. This big feature comedy is said to have more laughs in it than a striped hyena and the fact that Van Loan wrote it certainly would indicate that such is the case. "The Mirth of the Nation" will be issued in book form shortly by Grosset & Dunlap, publishers, of 518 West 26th street, New York City. The scenario of the multiple-reel comedy has been copyrighted in pamphlet form at Washington.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week At the New York Motion Picture Houses.

Vitagraph Theater Bill.

"TO CHERISH AND PROTECT," a strong three-part drama, heads the list of pictures this week at the Vitagraph theater. The drama was written by William Vaughn Pettit and produced by William Humphrey, with a cast including Harry Morey, L. Rogers Lytton, Bobby Connelly, Harry Northrup, Gladden James, Denton Vane and Estelle Mardo. It is a story of tense action, pathos and direct human appeal, and tells of a firm of stockbrokers who, as a last resort, use a customer's stock as collateral. They gamble and lose. As each carries enough life insurance to save the firm from absolute ruin, they decide to draw lots, the one drawing the fatal slip to commit suicide. Two of the partners, one of whom is secretly in love with the third one's wife, conspire to trick the other.

Comedy dominates the balance of the program, Mr. Sidney Drew appearing in "Unlucky Louey," one of the most thoroughly enjoyable of the Drew comedies, in which Louey, in trying to get back to prison, finds it impossible because of unexpected kindness and a shower of gold that rains down upon him at every turn. Lillian Walker, Evart Overton and a star cast in "The Fire Escape" enact an amusing story of how a fire escape aids a pair of lovers to circumvent an irate father and an unwelcome suitor. The Western Vitagraph players present a laughing comedy, "Willie Stayed Single." The remaining picture is a two-part feature drama. "The Kidnapped Stockbroker," in which a young newspaper reporter, aided by the cleverness of his sweetheart, solves the mysterious disappearance of a wealthy broker. Dorothy Kelly, Louise Beaudet, Jay Dwiggins and William Dunn are seen to advantage in the enactment of the principal characters.

Sam Bernard at the Strand.

"Poor Schmaltz," a laughable farce-comedy, produced by the Famous Players Film Company, with Sam Bernard in the title role, has first place on the Strand theater program this week. The comedy complications arise from Schmaltz, finding that his wig business has gone to smash, attempting to pass himself off as a count in order to marry the daughter of a rich brewer from America. The real and the bogus count meet, and a very funny duel is the result.

The educational feature this week is "Elephant Labor in India." The Topical Review contains, besides the latest news pictures from this country and abroad, a carefully selected lot of extremely interesting and realistic European war pictures. A new Kalem Comedy is also shown on the screen.

Percy Richards, "The Man in White," and Miss Grace Hoffman are the vocal soloists. The Concert Orchestra, under the direction of Carl Edouarde, render an attractive program.

Marguerite Clark at the Broadway.

"Helene of the North," a picturesque photodrama in which Marguerite Clark has a well-fitting role, leads the list at the Broadway theater. The supporting company contains such well-known names as Conway Tearle, Frank Losee, Elliott Dexter, David Wall, James Kearney, Bringham Royce and Katherine Adams. A fresh instalment of South American Travel Pictures, the Broadway Animated News, and one-reel comedies are also on the program.

FORREST STANLEY JOINS MOROSCO.

Forrest Stanley, as great an idol as the Los Angeles matinee girl ever had, has said his adieux to the famous Burbank theater stock company, where he reigned supreme for four solid years, and is now established in his new position as leading man with the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company. Having taken his degree in engineering at Columbia University, Mr. Stanley has figured out that where he was appearing to 1,000 people at a performance on the speaking stage the same performances upon the screen introduced him to a huge clientele that not only netted easily 105,000 people a day, but also had the advantage of multiplying his performance simultaneously, so that it was enacted in over thirty different parts of the civilized globe at one and the same time. He believes that an artist did not know what celebrity was or could be until moving pictures arrived.

SIEGEL-LEVY.

Announcement cards have been issued by Mrs. Sarah Levy upon the marriage of her daughter, Lena L., to Abe E. Siegel, which event was celebrated on Sunday, August 15, 1915. Mr. Siegel is a traveling representative of the Fox film company.

Remarkable Record of Young Author

In Two Years Miss Elaine Sterne Has Written Fifty Photoplays, All Produced by Well-Known Companies.

EXACTLY two years ago next month Elaine Sterne had her first story accepted by the Vitagraph Company. Since that time she has written exactly fifty plays, all of which have been bought by well-known companies. She captured the thousand-dollar prize offered by the Vitagraph and Evening Sun for her "Sins of the Mothers," and the five hundred dollar prize awarded by the Telegraph and Flamingo Company. She is now engaged in putting the finishing touches to her latest creation, "Lincoln's Dream," which promises to be a picture of unusual merit.

When Miss Sterne first became known in the film world, her determination to write the "better sort of things" was quoted as well as her oft repeated belief that there was unlimited opportunity in the motion picture play for the earnest author. She has proved in the short two years of her work that her ability beyond a doubt lies in the direction of the "better sort of things." There is a wealth of detail and originality that makes her work stand out.

Perhaps the most popular are the Vitagraph series of Sonny Jim pictures, featuring Bobby Connelly. In these, with three leading characters, Sonny, Daddy Jim, portrayed by Tefft Johnson, and Mother Dear, by Mabel Kelly, she has woven tales full of rare humor and heart interest.

For the past year she has written many plays for Mary Fuller, of the Universal Company. The plays include "The Witch Girl," "The Girl Who Had a Soul," the "Daughter of the Nile." A new comedy entitled "The Tale of the C" is to be released at an early date.

When one reflects that Miss Sterne is very much younger than the average author of note, that she is fond of outdoor sports and travel, one can but wonder how she accomplishes it all.

K. & E.-FOX SUIT ADJUSTMENT.

A report subsequent to that printed in The Moving Picture World under date of August 21 gives a different meaning to the outcome of the suit of Robert Hilliard, Klaw & Erlanger and Porter Emerson Browne against the William Fox Vaudeville Company, concerning the photoplay "A Fool There Was." It appears that Judge Augustus N. Hand, of the United States District Court, directed the Fox Vaudeville Company to give the complainants precisely what they asked for on the argument of their motion. When the court directed Mr. Fox's attorney to produce, on the filing of the papers, the contract between the Fox Vaudeville Company and the Fox Film Corporation, which their affidavits showed they had refused to exhibit, Mortimer Fishel, attorney for the complainants, withdrew his request for an injunction. In receiving the contracts and accounts he had gained his point.

When the papers were finally filed the court wrote his opinion as follows:

"Defendant, William Fox Vaudeville Company has today, in the presence of complainants' counsel, presented to me an account certified by chartered accountants, showing details of the receipts of the William Fox Vaudeville Company, from a Box Office Attraction Film Rental Company and the Fox Film Corporation, companies with which the defendant had contracts for manufacturing and exhibiting films. Under these circumstances I consider that the provision of the contract between the complainants and the defendant for furnishing accounts has now been complied with and any cause of action for cancelling the contract between the parties for past violations to furnish accounts must be regarded as ended. The Court, however, has obtained jurisdiction of the matter and the complainants are entitled to have similar detailed accounts furnished in the future."

BUSHMAN BRINGS NEW METRO FEATURE EAST.

Francis X. Bushman, the Metro Star, comes East from the Pacific Coast this week, bringing with him the new feature, "The Silent Voice," said to be one of the most pretentious offerings he has yet given to the screen. At a private exhibition given at the Studebaker theater in Chicago on Thursday morning, the picture won high praise from the audience, many exhibitors asserting that in "The Silent Voice" Mr. Bushman had registered one of the most notable characterizations of his artistic career.

A special exhibition of "The Silent Voice" was given to New York Exhibitors at the Broadway theater, 40th street and Broadway, at 10.30 p. m. Friday. At this showing the picture was presented with a full orchestra, for which a special musical program was arranged by B. A. Rolfe.

Mexican Notes

Chihuahua, Mexico, Aug. 9, 1915.

THE long threatened complete close down of all the picture theaters in this country is now more than a mere possibility. Undoubtedly ninety-nine per cent. of all exhibitors are at present running merely to keep up the prestige of their houses and to maintain their organizations. Very few houses are earning a profit, but because of a hope of better future business, most exhibitors have managed to keep open up to the present time. However, the showdown is not far off, if conditions continue as at present. It is now almost impossible to secure film service. During last week Stahl Brothers, who supply films to a great number of houses in Central and Northern Mexico, have canceled all contracts, and ordered all films returned immediately. The El Paso Film Co., which also supplies a large number of houses, has done likewise. Thus the exhibitor is face to face with the critical condition of no film service, which means dark houses.

Don Manuel Rivero, one of Mexico's old impresarios, and at one time manager of the Lombardi Grand Opera Company, is in this city at present, having brought with him a number of European feature films, which are being shown at "The Alcazar." Among these are: "Inheritance of Hate" (Cines), nine reels; "Adventures of Arizona Bill" (Eclipse), five reels, and others.

Don Manuel left Mexico City last February, and has since that time been touring the republic with a collection of films. Under great difficulties he has managed to complete his trip to the border, greatly handicapped by the lack of railway communications. Naturally Signor Rivero has had a splendid opportunity to look over the entire Mexican picture field. "While I have found conditions by no means ideal," says Don Manuel, "I have not found them as bad as one would be led to believe by some alarmist reports. Of course one finds discontent over the low value of the fiat money, but there is plenty of it, and houses as a rule have splendid crowds. I ran my pictures, for instance, at Monterey at two different houses, with good box office receipts at each. "The Obrero" is a splendid house with a capacity of 5,000. It is an innovation in this country as it has been built to run high-grade films at low prices, with special reference, as its name, "The Laborer," indicates, to the needs of the laboring man. There is a lack of film service, which is further aggravated by poor railway and express service. I have been impressed with the great opportunity which Mexico offers as a motion picture field. I have found everywhere, except in the extreme north, a decided prejudice against American films. This is possibly because Mexican audiences have never had an opportunity to become acquainted with the best American productions, while the finest products of Europe's studios have been at our disposal. But maybe American producers will be better prepared to show us what they can do when at last we have peace here.

Because no agreement could be reached in regard to the price, the sale of the Alcazar to a group of Guadalajara capitalists was not consummated, hence it continues under the management of Buchez & Williams.

Alberto P. Damiani's new picture house, "The Azteca," was opened to the public the night of the 31st of July. The house seats about seven hundred people and is the first show in this city to be located in a suburb and away from the downtown district. A Powers projector has been installed. The venture will prove a complete success, judging from the box office receipts for the first week.

Manuel Sanabia passed through this city on his way to Ciudad Juárez during the present week. He intends to open a tent show in that border city.

The Saló Variedades of this city has been closed indefinitely. Manager Symons, who formerly had charge of the Variedades, continues to manage the Cine Club, which for the past weeks has been running a program of pictures and vaudeville.

Following instructions received from headquarters, the American Smelting & Refining Co. has ordered Manager Williams to await further developments before throwing open the doors of the Alcazar No. 2, at the above-mentioned company's smelting plant near this city. The house is now ready to open, and as soon as the critical conditions now existing in the city improve the opening will take place.

HARRY B. OTT.

Howell Hansel

FROM the "Million Dollar Mystery," with its crashing succession of punches, to the pure burlesque of a Dressler farce is about as wide a gulf as can be imagined in photoplay production, but after completing the "Million Dollar Mystery," Howell Hansel washed the accumulated gore from his hands, bade farewell to Jones the Butler, shook the dust of New Rochelle from his feet and headed for Lubinville, where he at once plunged into the intricacies of "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," the new multiple reel written by Acton Davies, former critic of the New York Evening Sun, for Miss Marie Dressler.

Howell Hansel.

This is an age of specialization, but Mr. Hansel is a specialist in motion pictures in general and not in one branch in particular. He has made the Dressler comedy with the care and finesse of the dramatic producer, and this care shows upon the screen in a certainty of effect that is too generally lacking in comedy, even of the pretentious sort. It should give him a place among the best comedy directors equal to that he already holds as a dramatic producer.

Mr. Hansel has made a number of important feature productions as well as regular releases for the Mutual and Universal programs. One of his most marked successes among the feature releases was Col. Carter, of Cartersville, and his Ben Bolt was one of the best sellers on the Fox program.

He has had a long and varied career as dramatic player and producer. He has filled many important engagements as stock and production stage manager, and was for three years with David Belasco as leading man, immediately prior to his entrance into the picture business.

NINE FOYS KEYSTONING WITH SENNETT.

Eddie Foy was engaged to star under the direction of Mack Sennett with the Keystone Film Company. After he arrived at the studio at Edendale, Cal., it was decided to include the seven little Foys in the first picture. They all took to the Keystone idea with all the enthusiasm and ease of old-time film comedians. Mother Foy remained at the Foy cottage at Santa Monica for the first few days, but before the end of the first week she appeared at the studio, "just to watch them work." After sitting at the filmside for part of an hour the director, not recognizing her, shouted "come on here, get in this scene." Mother Foy "got in" and before Eddie or any of the seven realized it she was working with all the vim of the rest of the family. The next morning the callboy megaphoned, "the fifty-seven Foys on the set," and got a general laugh.

GEORGE OVEY WITH MUTUAL.

"The Little Hero" and "Jerry's Busy Day," first of the new Cub Comedies to be produced by David Horsley for release in the regular Mutual Program, the first for release August 19 and the second August 26, finds George Ovey, the featured player in these productions, more than living up to his reputation as one of the funniest and most original comedians in picture work. Both productions were screened under the personal direction of Milton H. Fahrney, chief comedy director for Mr. Horsley. Ovey, who is making his initial bow to Mutual audiences in these two comedies, in each instance has been furnished with roles that give him exceptional opportunities of displaying his many talents which have won for him an enviable reputation as a screen comedian.

ORMSTON NOW TECHNICAL DIRECTOR.

Frank Ormston, who has long been connected with the Universal Film Company in a technical capacity, was this week made head of the technical department at Universal City. For the past six weeks, Mr. Ormston has been with the Smalleys' producing company in Chicago, where they have been staging the scenes in the production of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," in which Anna Pavlowa is to be featured.

Real Stories from the Reel Studios

By Thornton Fisher.

WHAT the press agent doesn't tell us about himself—Sam Spedon is some little lecturer and artist. Watching Samuel survey the Vitagraph posters before they go out reminds one of a French art critic sizing up a picture

It's a regular case of "watch your step" if you saunter along Brighton Beach these days. You're likely to walk over a picture actor down there. The studio fellows colonize at this resort and after the day's work is over beat a quick exit for a shore dinner and an earful of wild waves. We gave big, handsome Ben Wilson the once over down there the other day. He was inside the classiest white suit that ever gathered dust.

One of these days they're going to hang placards in the office of the New York Motion Picture Corporation's office to read "Alarm clocks prohibited in this office." "Employees and

British Notes

CYRIL MAUDE is again in London after his arduous spell of toil in screen acting in Los Angeles. He arrived last week, but his days in England are numbered. When he has sold his theater (The Playhouse) he will hasten back again to the irrepressible call of the Pacific Coast and start again upon a film adaptation of "Grumpy," possibly during the fall. Maude's only appearance before the camera on this side was made about three years ago in a version of W. W. Jacob's comedy, "Beauty and the Barge."

Tuition in some subjects by the film appears to find increasing favor in the eyes of the Government. At the request of the War Office a film demonstrating the proper way to pack hay by means of mechanical baling appliances has been prepared by Mrs. E. H. Turnbull, the wife of the Agent General for New Brunswick, Canada. It is intended to instruct certain troops at the front in baling hay through this medium. Another gratifying circumstance to that yet small section of moving picture enthusiasts whose ideal is tuition by film is the thorough and whole-hearted way in which the organs of the educational profession have taken up the gauntlet against legislative cranks opposed to any breach of convention.

The melodramatic creations of the two brothers Melville are doubeless well known upon the American legitimate stage. For more than a decade they have flowered as hardy annuals in suburban and provincial theaters in Britain, and another lease of life to their evergreen popularity is being assured by their translation from the language of the spoken stage to the gesture of the silent screen. The recently incorporated company, British Empire Films, Ltd., exhibited the first of these picturizations, "The Beggar Girl's Wedding," as its maiden effort at the West End Cinema the other day.

It is a fact as patent to the authorities in this country as in the United States that German films are being extensively circulated among American motion picture exhibitors as part and parcel of the military propaganda of the German Government. The following extract from a letter to a newspaper from an Arizona town by a man who had just been to see the war pictures shows clearly which way the wind is blowing in the kinematograph campaign: "What terrible havoc the German guns have caused in Paris! What an awful pity that all those beautiful buildings have been destroyed!" I have good reason for stating that a consignment of films showing "real" war pictures may be expected in the United States before long. For a few weeks past now official camera men have accompanied the advances of the allied forces in Flanders and the facilities accorded to these men for securing reliable, realistic records of the military operations could never be computed upon a cash basis. They are simply and purely pictures taken under the authority of the French and British Governments. Premier Asquith stated as much in Parliament yesterday, July 29, and as such will probably be destined for the British Museum or some other archives of the State. Of course those which are circulated for public exhibition at home or abroad, will be carefully chosen from the original negatives, but the remaining sections depicting the sterner and more ghastly realities of modern warfare will never be made public property.

"The Ringtailed Rhinoceros"

Raymond Hitchcock Makes First Photoplay Appearance in Farce Produced by Lubin for V-L-S-E Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

FOR his motion picture debut, Raymond Hitchcock was provided with a fantastic farce for which originality may justly be claimed. "The Ringtailed Rhinoceros"—an excellent comedy title, by the way—is amusing by reason of its absurdity. In writing the four-reel scenario, Lawrence McCloskey allowed his fancy to wander among the hobgoblins of fairyland, and depended upon Director George Terwilliger to re-create all the strange creatures he met, among them the ringtailed rhinoceros. The picture contains the atmosphere of a fairy tale made farcical; likewise it contains much humor directly attributable to Mr. Hitchcock.

This most persuasive of comedians did not find it necessary to alter the stage methods, which, for many years, have been unfailingly successful in drawing laughs. His facial expressions are equally amusing when recorded by the camera and his comedy business does very well in pictures. Odd tricks of manner and bearing register effectively on the screen.

The whimsical imaginings in this story are accounted for by John Carter-Carter's (Mr. Hitchcock's) intemperate habits He is never entirely sober and is frequently so emphatically the reverse that his fiancee, Marybelle, is moved to tears. When her little brother seeks the cause of her grief, Carter-Carter replies that a ringtailed rhinoceros is to blame, whereupon the sympathetic lad determines to kill the beast. Presently the youth and the discredited lover fall asleep in a big arm-chair and the scene dissolves into a dream of pirates, who make the badly frightened Carter-Carter walk the plank; of dense forests in which the wanderer encounters every species of wild beast, and of the royal court where the princess is destined to weep and weep until the ringtailed rhinoceros is killed. Eventually the animal is disposed of and on awakening, Carter-Carter is ready to sign the pledge.

Many of the scenes were made on Mr. Hitchcock's Long Island estate and on other beautiful country places in the neighborhood. The picture provides a sequence of attractive locations perfectly photographed. "The Ringtailed Rhinoceros" reveals imagination in conception and the manner of its handling and deserves better sub-titles than the couplets provided. Flora Zabelle (Mrs. Hitchcock), playing the weeping princess, has a part of limited opportunities. Raymond Hackett makes a manly little fellow of her brother and other characters are suitably cast.

Around a valuable necklace presented by a banker to his wife, hinges the numerous dramatic situations which run through "A Woman of Nerve," a single reel Reliance to be released August 6. "The Vanderhoff Affair"

Four-Reel Kalem "Broadway Favorites" Offering—Has Freshly Interesting Situation—Drags in First Reel, But Gets Speed at End.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

MARGUERITE COURTOT, who plays the center of interest in this four-reel picture, "The Vanderhoff Affair," has one delightfully charming scene, in which she sends a message to a young man who is to be her deliverer from a villainous uncle, and does it by pantomime behind the drawn, bright lighted curtain of her room. The picture she makes by this is as pretty as it could be. At the close of a very melodramatic story the action—it is wholly elemental, by the way—becomes exciting. It has opened in Mexico, and the first reel is slow; it does little but introduce the characters who are under the spell of a mystery. The heroine is being conducted to New York and the hero has taken the same ship. He doesn't believe she is really mad; but his friend the doctor examines her and says that her mind is truly affected. The second reel tells us what the truth is. The trouble in this reel is that we are shown bits of the action that led up to the situation presented in the first reel. It is all very interesting, but following each scene is a written description of it—we get mighty tired of those written notes.

The girl is an heiress whose father has left her in the keeping of his brother, who feeds loco (the insanity weed) to her. His object is to get her committed to an asylum and inherit her fortune. How the hero manages to get the truth known and free the maiden is told in the last two reels, and these two reels are more lively than the first two; but we cannot help feeling that more might have been made of this excellent situation. Perhaps the hero failed to keep us in sympathy with his part through lack of experience before the camera. The villainous uncle is satisfactorily played by Henry Hallam; and his two helpers, Mexicans (T. J. Dow and Helen Lindroth), also do well in their foreign parts. Frances Cappeliano, as heroine's maid and friend, makes one scene effective by the contrast between her face and that of her girl mistress, as she looks in the door over her loco-stricken mistress, who has had to drink the weed.

Scene from "The Vanderhoff Affair" (Kalem).

Robert G. Vignola, the director, plays the role of doctor fairly. Hal Forde is not effective in the leading male role. The photography falls below Kalem standard in several scenes; but on the whole is good.

"Capital Punishment"

A Drama with a Purpose, Produced by Knickerbocker Star Features in Three Reels.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE purpose of this three-part Knickerbocker Star Feature, written by the Rev. C. J. Harris and directed by Joseph Levering, is clearly enough indicated by the title. It is a drama inspired by a laudable aim, that of presenting the possible injustice and wrong of capital punishment, and as such merits attention. Unfortunately, however, the accomplishment falls short of the promise of the theme, and this despite obvious sincerity in the preparation of the story and an acceptable company of players headed by Lenore Ulrich, an actress with temperament and a rather exotic type of beauty.

When a picture demands that an audience think, as a dramatic argument against capital punishment unquestionably does, it behooves an author to prepare a plausible story. Even melodrama must have a surface plausibility if it is to become convincing. "Capital Punishment" lacks conviction in a basic element of the plot. We have two sisters in love with the same man. An influential politician, a friend of the girls' father, a judge, plans to force a marriage with Olive, who detests him, by compromising the weaker sister.

To justify a great sacrifice on the part of Olive, ample cause is needed, yet we find her marrying the politician for no better reason than that he inveigled her sister into a fashionable gambling house, where she acquired a debt which she sought to meet by forging the judge's name on a check. All this might have been explained and forgiven. Instead, Olive marries the politician in order to buy his silence and then insists on remaining a wife in name only. The violent death of her husband, not by a pistol shot, as at first appeared, but by falling from a window, leads to the unjust conviction of the man she really loves. He is exonerated only a few moments before the hour set for his execution. An audience may ask for the courtroom precedent for two people being placed on trial at the same time that a jury may choose the offender.

Overlooking the shortcomings mentioned, one finds a quick-moving and at times cleverly developed plot in "Capital Punishment." The trial scene is well staged, and throughout, in fact, there is no fault to find with the settings, although the photography does not always reveal them at their best. Miss Ulrich is by all odds the most conspicuously able member of the cast.

"Monsieur Lecoq"

Four-Part Thanhouser Adapted from the Detective Story by Emile Gaboriau.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THANHOUSER has always been strong on the preservation of "atmosphere" in his productions, taking infinite pains to eliminate those details which dissipate the naturalness of a pictured story, and he has succeeded in making "Monsieur Lecoq" decidedly French, even in the exteriors. The constructive methods of Gaboriau lend themselves admirably to the building of a photo drama dependent upon arousing curiosity at the outset and maintaining suspense by holding up the solution of a mystery. Thanhouser has followed the Gaboriau method so closely that he has literally transferred the detective story from the printed page to the screen. This might fail utterly, however, with careless handling—it might easily become mechanical, even repulsive—but foresight and skill have made the complete product satisfying to the eye and to that sense of consistency which has become the common property of picture theater audiences.

Scene from "Monsieur Lecoq" (Thanhouser).

The story opens with the usual Gaboriau activity. A murder mystery upon which Monsieur Lecoq stumbles. His active work leads him rapidly to a warm trail—there can be no possible doubt that he is in pursuit of the real criminals—he actually sees them enter the house of a man of high social station and spotless career—yet he is brought up against a blank wall through which the murderer and his accomplice seem to have vanished. There is but one resource left, and the smallest clue points a way to a solution of the mystery. Lecoq puts the man of lofty rank and clean reputation under arrest. This brings to light a family skeleton with an interesting and humanizing finish to the story.

"The Little Dutch Girl"

Picturesque Version of Ouida's Story is Made by Emile Chautard for World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

CHARM and heart appeal are the outstanding qualities of this five-part adaptation of Ouida's "Two Little Dutch Shoes," produced by Emile Chautard with Vivian Martin looking her prettiest in the role of Little Dutch. Artistically the picture is a treat. The manner of the story's unfolding, the delightful rustic settings, the acting of Miss Martin and several less prominent members of the cast, are all consistently in the spirit of the romantic tale of the unsophisticated little girl who falls in love with an artist and dies of a broken heart. Once again Director Chautard shows how the atmosphere of poetry may be brought to the screen.

Scene from "The Little Dutch Girl" (World Film).

If one stops to analyze this story the plot must appear slight for a five-reel subject; but so expert is the treatment of details that the need for more complicated drama is not felt. There is enough to attract the eye in the wealth of beautiful locations, and interest in the career of the delicate little orphan girl gives the story the requisite human appeal. Probably Miss Martin never had a part to which she was better suited in appearance and temperament. "The Little Dutch Girl" should be no less popular than "The Wishing Ring."

The tragic romance is developed in a leisurely fashion with plenty of opportunity afforded for scenes of poetic suggestiveness and character portrayal. When we meet the artist, Lionel, searching in vain for a suitable model for his painting of "Marguerite," it is a foregone conclusion that Little Dutch will fill the requirements of innocence and beauty. Also it is a reasonable certainty that the painter and his Marguerite will fall in love; but an audience fed on happy endings will have no cause to anticipate the author's denouement—Little Dutch's journey to the city in quest of the artist whom she believes needs her because he is ill and poor, her disillusionment when she finds him surrounded by beautiful courtesans, and her pitiable grief and death. These scenes, finely handled by Miss Martin, mark the most poignant moments of the drama.

With the exception of John Bowers, who makes a rather too stolid artist, the cast, numbering Chester Barnett, W. J. Gross, Dorothy Fairchild and Julia Stuart, is capable.

"The Marriage of Kitty"

Fannie Ward, in Her Initial Screen Appearance, Gives Excellent Performance in Lasky Production.

Scene from "The Marriage of Kitty" (Lasky).

support of Fannie Ward, the comedienne who in this subject makes her bow to the screen. There are a few serious moments, and in these the dramatic situations are treated with skill. This is especially true of the closing scenes.

Miss Ward has the role of an orphaned girl who appeals to a lawyer friend in the city to aid her, and the lawyer makes use of her as an instrument to circumvent a will that is bothering one of his clients—that prevents an Englishman from marrying a girl of the stage. On the suggestion of the lawyer the Englishman marries Kitty and departs for a stay of six months, in order to lay grounds for a charge of desertion, thereby enabling him to marry the player.

The comedian amuses as the freak young woman which she makes of herself in order to gain the acquiescence of the fiancee to the transaction. It must be admitted that the girl from a small community displays a command of the art of make-up, but we laugh just the same. She charms as the duly installed Lady Belsize, and she must needs be charming to win the impressionable lord from the clever Helen De Semiano of the Gayety theater.

Cleo Ridgeley has the part of Helen, and she brings to the interpretation the art of the screen player as well as a most interesting personality. Jack Dean scores as the Englishman, Lord Reginald Belsize; his conception of Belsize makes him a very swagger young man, but there is no trace of the burlesque. Tom Forman is good as the brother and adviser of Helen, and the same must be said of Richard Morris as the lawyer and Mrs. McCord as the old friend of Kitty. The statement may be repeated that it is an excellent cast. The scenario is the work of Hector Turnbull; he has well told the story.

"The Marriage of Kitty" will make splendid entertainment.

"Under Southern Skies"

A Production of the Universal Film Company Based on Lottie B. Parker's Story.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

POPULAR Mary Fuller has here been cast for a part for which she is well fitted and of which she makes the most. It may be doubted whether the filmable materials in the story amounted to very much in the first instance, and it may also be doubted whether the producers have made the most of what materials there are. The quality in feature productions has improved a good deal within the last year or two, and any pretentious effort today naturally invites a comparison with the best that has gone before. While the story is strictly along conventional lines and has in thinly altered guises been often told before, there are traces of a genuine Southern atmosphere, a laudable fidelity to the costumes of the period and very fair portrayals of ante-bellum conditions.

There is an intelligent and persistent attempt to show the beauties of the Southern landscapes and there are scenes in which the attempt is entirely successful. At other times, however, the photography is or appears to be flat and dead. It is, of course, important to choose the right kind of settings, but it is no less important to transfer the natural charm of scenery to the screen, and only the most progressive camera work will do it.

The cast supporting Miss Fuller consists of old-time screen favorites who without exception acquit themselves very capably. Indeed, the acting is one of the strong points of the play. The direction is by no means entirely lacking in skill, but at times the story moved as if on silts, and the anti-climax in the last scenes might easily have been avoided.

"The Tigress"

Vitagraph Company Produces a Three-Part Melodrama in Which There Is Plenty of Action.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

AS LONG as audiences exist for melodrama of this stamp it no doubt will be accorded a place among the productions of even the most progressive manufacturers. That stories such as "The Tigress," written by Willian Addison Lathrop and produced in three reels by Lorimer Johnston for the Vitagraph Company, cannot be taken seriously, does not mean that they are without popular merit. Truth to tell, "The Tigress" is likely to enjoy greater favor than many pictures of a more ambitious nature. Without attaining a high form of the story teller's art, it at least is a satisfactory example of its type—exciting fiction untrammeled by the laws of reason.

Anything may happen in such a melodrama so long as it carries a thrill and it would be folly to take the author to task for lapses in consistency. There are many things in "The Tigress" that might cause an incredulous smile if an audience stopped to consider them; but the chances are that it will be swept from point to point—perhaps from punch to punch would be better—without misgivings.

Julia Swayne Gordon, in the title role, is a sort of superwoman in the perpetration of evil. Then, too, she has a few good qualities, but they are pretty well smothered by the more aggressive side of her forceful nature. She assists her husband, a gang leader, in robbing a judge's home where she is employed as nurse and when her husband is killed she takes charge of the gang herself, meanwhile retaining the judge's son, whom she rescued from the burning house. Having reached maturity, the son knows nothing of the woman's professional career and naturally believes her to be his mother; that is until the cleverest of clever detectives unravels a crime and with it the fabric of deceit surrounding The Tigress' life. Always ready to do the dramatically correct thing, she swallows poison.

Mrs. Gordon gives a capital performance, Leo Delaney makes a properly astute detective and other characters are adequately portrayed in a picture produced with the care customary in Vitagraph offerings.

"Dora" and Other Biographs

Artistic Three-Part Version of Tennyson's Poem—Some One-Reel Subjects of Good Quality.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

BIOGRAPH'S three-part version of Charles Reade's dramatization of Tennyson's poem, "Dora," makes a distinctly pleasing, if not very forceful photoplay. The production was sympathetically handled by Director Travers Vale, who had an able cast at his command, with Isabel Rea making a quite ideal Dora in appearance and manner, Gretchen Hartman playing Mary Morrison and Jack Mulhall, Franklin Ritchie and Jack Drumier in other roles.

The troubled romances of Dora and Mary do not produce an especially dramatic story; but there are scenes of poetic charm, others of sincere feeling and frequently there are opportunities for telling bits of characterization. Mr. Drumier's portrayal of the obdurate old farmer, who prefers to cause unhappiness rather than alter his plans for the lives of others, is consistent and effective. Delightful rural settings, perfectly photographed, are an important asset of this creditable offering.

For early release the Biograph Company has prepared a number of single-reel subjects that strike a high average, among them a vivid little melodrama with an unexpected twist at the end that suggests an O. Henry story. It is called "Among Those Killed," an unusual and appropriate title, by the way.

The situation is stated in the first hundred feet, during which we see a man awaiting death at the hands of his mortal enemy. Then we return to the incidents leading up to the enmity and these having been disclosed, flash back to the man writhing in dread of his expected visitor. Finally he is driven to taking poison just before he reads in a newspaper that his enemy was "among those killed" in a railroad wreck. It is an impressive sketch with a nice touch of irony.

"The Man Who Never Was Caught" is the first of several rapid-fire melodramas being made by Wray Physioc with a burglar for the hero. His house-breaking exploit in this one is exciting enough and his escape is fraught with all sorts of dangers, increased by a newspaper woman (Mary Maletesta), who runs into a good story while looking for a Sunday special on the evil of the dance hall.

A new series under the general head of "Truth's Queer Tales" will open with a society melodrama called "The Wheel of the Gods." Here, as in "Among Those Killed," there is an unusual denouement, showing how a man is literally frightened to death by the physician whose wife he attempted to seduce. The doctor tells him he is in the last stages of heart disease, so instead of eloping, the lover returns home and takes a revolver from the bureau drawer. Augusta Anderson, Charles Bennet and Charles Perley appear in this picture.

only at rare intervals in the world of pictures. In fact we are not sure that just such interesting realism has happened in any previous serial or other picture production, with one or two exceptions. The overflow of lava from the crater of Mt. Pelee has at some former eruption of this volcano been photographed and utilized in the making of "Neal of the Navy."

The feminine star of the production, Lillian Loraine, has not yet appeared on the scene. And of William Courtleigh, the male lead, we have as yet caught only a glimpse. But of the excellent supporting cast we have been introduced to H. Stanley, Wm. Conklin and Edward Brady.

Director W. M. Harvey is responsible for the visualization of the story which has been adapted to the screen by Douglas Bronston. The theme is based on the separation of a family through the confusion attendant on the eruption of the volcano. The father of a little girl baby is cast by the sea on a barren shore with some associates, while the child and the mother are taken on board a vessel that is putting out to sea to escape the danger of the shores of the Island of Martinique.

At the close of the chapter a packet found with the child after the mother's death announces her identity and the fortune which is to be hers.

Fourteen chapters of two reels each will complete this serial, which promises to equal if not surpass some of the serials already on the market. The story so far is well handled and the production is elaborate in its makeup.

"Salvation Nell"

Screen Version of Edward Sheldon's Play, Featuring Beatriz Michelena, the Well Known Prima Donna, a Big Success.

Reviewed by Margaret I MacDonald.

EDWARD SHELDON'S play, "Salvation Nell," is familiar to the majority of theatergoers. It is a presentation of life in the slums, and one that could easily have fallen to mediocrity in its screen portrayal, had not the cast chosen to interpret the various roles of the play fitted the situation so well.

Captain Leslie Peacocke made the adaptation of the play used by the California Motion Picture Company in preparing the screen version. It may be felt in the opening of the picture that too much time has been given to familiarizing the spectator with the home life of Nell Saunders. But at the double tragedy, when her father in a drunken rage brutally murders her mother, and a few moments later at the saloon, the murderer meets his death at the hands of his associates, this sensation vanishes to a large extent.

Alex. E. Beyfuss has directed the production with an eye to the artistic as well as the truly human. And of the work of the star, Beatriz Michelena, it may be said that her conception of the character is exceptionally fine. She has made of "Salvation Nell" a type that is sweet and dignified, living in the midst of vice yet preserving within herself an atmosphere of righteousness and purity that held her in the straightest path that she knew of, and helped her eventually to appeal successfully to the best there was in the man that she loved. It is interesting to note that Miss Michelena had never seen the play previous to playing the picture. Therefore, the character "Salvation Nell" as seen in the California Motion Picture Company's is an original conception.

Some of the cast are particularly worthy of mention. For instance, William Pike as Jim Platt, Andrew Robson as Major Williams, and Irene Outrim as Myrtle who fell lower at every step. Miss Outrim is to be highly commended for the manner in which she has made this part stand out. Nina Herbert and Clarence Arper as Nell's mother and father are also noticeable in the excellence of their work. Then there is Myrtle Neuman as Sal, a small part well played. Frank Hollins as the old roue, and James Leslie as Sid McGovern, also Kathrine Angus, D. Mitsoras, Minnette Barrett, and Earle Emlay all do excellent work in the supporting cast.

Machiste Magnificent

Six-Reel Itala Feature Portraying Some Perilous Experiences of the Cabiria Hercules.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT IS true that "Cabiria" made Machiste famous, but it is equally true that the visible strength and activity of Earnest Pagano, who created the role of Machiste, contributed materially to the success of D'Annunzio's great screen drama. The fact that he appeared as a black giant augmented rather than detracted from his magnificent proportions—he was a superb bronze statue in motion, of ideal proportions and possessed of a certain unconscious grace that men of nicely balanced physical proportions display under training without affectation. Part of the pleasure of watching athletes in competitive games is due to the fact that they use their limbs and bodies with an ease and freedom delightful to see and suggesting what manhood should be in an ideal development. It is akin to that which has interested humankind of all ages in works of sculpture.

Mighty Machiste now reappears in his proper person and is given varied opportunity in a series of dangerous adventures from which no man of ordinary strength could escape unharmed. His great body is here illumined with a soul, one of magnanimity, for he responds nobly to the appeal of a girl who implores him to save her from a mysterious form of persecution. The story opens in romantic fashion, gripping interest from the outset, and though the lines on which it is developed are far from being new, many of the expedients calculated to try the courage and resources of Machiste to their utmost are entirely new and highly ingenious.

The persecuted girl is first seen in a desperate attempt to escape from abductors who are following her closely. She barely eludes them for a while and finally takes refuge in a moving picture theater where "Cabiria" is being presented in magnificent style. A bright thought occurs to her—she will write to the man of many pictured exploits and ascertain if he could be as capable in real life. Such is the challenging tenor of a note she sends him, in which she makes an appointment. He decides to accept the challenge, and he meets her by appointment, but the story she tells is too much for his credulity. He parts with her after she refuses his proffered financial aid. Hardly has he done so before he hears her cry for help, and he follows the trail of her abductors until he breaks into their hiding place and captures single-handed a dray-full of tough gangsters. From that moment he is led into one peril after another, from which he manages to extricate himself and the girl by exhibitions of magnificent strength and rare ingenuity.

The girl and her mother are sole heirs to a large estate which has fallen under the management of the "Duke," the girl's uncle. This Duke is a well known character in romantic stories. He wants the property, and he is not particularly scrupulous in his methods of getting it. He has the mother sent to a private asylum and is in process of disposing of the girl when Machiste becomes her saviour and the Duke's Nemesis. The interior settings of the pictured story are both appropriate and attractive. The exteriors are well chosen, but are not always as clear as the studio views. The picture as a whole has a large balance on the merit side and will undoubtedly prove to be a big drawing card wherever shown.

New Mutual Brands

President Freuler Picks Some Snappy Names and Ends a Controversy.

"RIALTO STAR FEATURES" and "Clipper Star Features" are two brand new names on the Mutual's brand new $8,000,000 program. The Rialto brand is the appellation chosen for the three-reel Broadway star features produced by the Gaumont Company for release on the Mutual Film Corporation's regular program. This new name puts an end to the controversy over the "Knickerbocker Star Features" brand. Rialto occurred to the Mutual chiefs a happy thought after much prayerful consideration. It is calculated to carry all the atmosphere of Broadway with it and to breathe a perfume of class around it.

"Clipper Star Features" will be the name for the three-reel releases of the same high quality made by the American Film Manufacturing Co., Inc.

The first release under the Rialto brand will be "The Unsuspected Isles" with Fania Marinoff, famous Broadway star, as the lead. This star three-reeler will be released on the regular program to Mutual exhibitors Sept. 8, and without extra rental charge. It is an expression of the new Mutual policy of an all-feature program, as announced by President John R. Freuler.

Particular significance is attached to this release under the Rialto brand because of the condensed quality offering. So many features which could more artistically be presented in less are padded to four reels. The sponsors of the Rialto brand promise a meaty, virile, three-reel feature, every reel and every scene full of dramatic potency.

Next on the list of three-reelers will come "Shorty's Ranch," a Broncho release with enough thrill in it to entertain even the most jaded film fan's appetite. It will be released Sept. 15.

Then comes a "Clipper," in "The Great Question," produced by the American Film Corporation for the new Mutual program. In "The Great Question," Harold Lockwood and Mae Allison are starred. This is the first time such a prominent star as Harold Lockwood has appeared in a three-reel production. He has played in the "Lure of the Mask," by Harold McGrath.

Produced for F. Roy Comstock Under the Direction of Edwin August.

THERE were seventy-five girls from the Winter Garden chorus and twenty-five men who went over to the Kinemacolor studio at Whitestone Monday, August 16, to take part in one of the most pretentious scenes which has been made for a motion picture. Edwin August is producing "Evidence" for the F. Ray Comstock company, and the stageland beauties went over to take part in a beautiful allegory which the director interpolated into the play, which was produced at the Lyric last season.

An enormous stage, built like an Egyptian temple, was set up outdoors. There was a high raised platform at the back, with steps leading up to it, and on this and in a lower space between the platform and the king' throne which was at the opposite end, the people from the Winter Garden danced and played. Over them floated the flying ballet, in flowing white garments, and waving garlands in the air. In the foreground the action between the principals took place. The tale was that of a beautiful princess who was locked up in a dungeon, the key for which a wicked king had and would not give to the two princes who loved her and wanted to make her free. The key is wrested from the king at last, however, and the princess is made happy again.

The allegory is a symbolical story of the plot of the drama—in which the only evidence which will prove to Lady Una's husband that she is guiltless has been destroyed and the secret is held by the man for whom her husband believes she has been untrue to him. The key is the evidence.

"Lady Una," the sad princess, is played by Lillian Tucker, "Captain Pollock," or the king who holds the key, is Richard Temple, the two princes, or "Lord Cyril Wimbourne (Una's husband), and Lushington, are played by Richard Buhler and Edwin August. Florence Hackett is the sorceress, Haidee Wright, the fairy godmother, and Lionel Pape the jestor. Maurice Stewart plays the part of "Bing," the little boy to whom the fairy story is told.

The Winter Garden chorus left the theater in New York at 7:30 in buses. At noon, they were entertained at lunch, the entire dining room of the hotel being reserved for them. It was the first appearance in the pictures for them as a body, and for most of them individually.

Kalem Has a New "Helen"

Famous "Hazards of Helen" Series Will Be Continued with Helen Gibson as Star.

BECAUSE of the requests received that the "Hazards of Helen Railroad Series" be continued, Kalem has taken steps which indicate that this remarkably successful series will run on for an indefinite period. These railroad stories have been issued at weekly intervals for almost a year.

Of paramount interest to exhibitors and their patrons is the announcement that Miss Helen Gibson has been engaged to succeed Helen Holmes as the heroine of the series. This change goes into effect immediately. Miss Gibson is declared to be admirably suited for the part. Her absolute lack of fear, the delight she seems to take in performing even the most hazardous of feats, together with her ability as an actress, were among the factors which caused her to be added to the galaxy of Kalem stars.

The daughter of a railroad engineer, there is probably no other girl who is more familiar with railroading and railroad life in general, than this charming young lady. According to her friends, Miss Gibson actually ran her father's locomotive at the age of twelve. With a host of friends employed in various capacities on the roads in and about her native city, Kalem's newest actress has had an unusual opportunity to acquire the accomplishments demanded of the heroine of the series.

Aside from the acquisition of Miss Gibson, Kalem has put other changes into effect which promise to make the "Hazards of Helen Railroad Series" stronger and more sensational than ever. It is to be expected that to those people who have seen the episodes alrady issued, this would seem impossible of accomplishment. Nevertheless, the fact that Kalem has yet to fail to live up to its prophecies concerning its product must be taken into consideration.

In this connection, it is interesting to note that the "Hazards of Helen Railroad Series" has achieved a unique record. Not once have the episodes released to date received disparaging mention on the part of the motion picture reviewers. Indeed a record of which to be proud!

Roskam—Film Doctor.

Many a film has proven a total failure with the audience through being badly titled or poorly assembled. E. M. Roskam of the Eclipse Company in the Chandler Building, New York, has made a reputation for himself in reassembling films and titles that led a friend to crown him a few days since as King of Film Editors.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE BANK" (Essanay).

To the lover of high class comedy this is one of the best of Charles Chaplin' pictures. It is clean, wholesome fun. Chaplin deviates from his slapstick tactics in this comedy, although his famous walk is still with him, as well as his comic antics and his unique facial expressions. The comedy carries a well constructed plot instead of the ordinary more or less disjointed construction of the slapstick school. There also is a touch of pathos in the picture which lends additional interest, while not detracting at all from the comedy element. Chaplin, a janitor in a bank, falls in love with a stenographer. When she gives him the cold shouder he goes to the basement to brood and there falls asleep and dreams that robbers enter the bank. He proves to be the hero and wins the praise of the president and the love of the pretty stenographer, while the cashier, with whom the girl is in love, is discharged for cowardice. Then Chaplin wakes up to find that he is hugging and kissing a mop. He wanders sadly to the foot of the stairs where his heart receives the final blow when he sees the stenographer in the cashier's arms.

"THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY" (No. 17).

The absorbing interest in "The Diamond From The Sky" is heightened by the thrilling action of the various leading characters in Chapter 17. This chapter is released under the title

Scene from "The Diamond from the Sky" (American).

"The King of Diamonds and the Queen of Hearts." Miss Lottie Pickford, playing the role of Esther, the heroine, is afforded excellent opportunity for the display of film talent. Miss Charlotte Burton, too, playing the role of Vivian, the fair adventuress, is enabled to display her dramatic ability.

Irving Cummings, who plays the role of Arthur Stanley, alias John Powell, the leading man character in the photoplay, enacts the character of a young man captivated by a designing woman's wiles. George Periolat, as Luke Lovell, and William Russell as Blair Stanley, both are excellent. Disregarding the previous chapters of this remarkable film story, Chapter 17 is in itself, a thrilling release.

"THE INDIAN TRAPPER'S VINDICATION" (Reliance).

Dark Cloud, the noted Indian player, heads the Reliance cast which appears in a deeply interesting photoplay of frontier life, "The Indian Trapper's Vindication." He is ably supported by Bert Hadley; the juvenile players, Paul Willis and Mildred Harris; Alice Pettus, Art Ortego and Charles Gorman.

Dark Cloud in the photoplay is an Indian trapper unjustly accused of robbing a trader's store. The children of the trader go for a canoe ride upon the river. They lose their paddle and begin to drift toward the dangerous rapids. Dark Cloud, nearby, hears their cries. He swims to their aid and guides them safely through the rapids before they reach waterfalls of considerable proportion. The children ask him to take them to their home, but he does not feel that he can return to the trader's dwelling.

While they are on the river bank he hears a shot. He finds that a half-breed Indian has been shot by his Indian partner. It develops that the quarrel between the two was over the division of the money which they had stolen from the trader. Dark Cloud pursues the Indian who wounded his partner to a lofty cliff overlooking the river. There is a hand-to-hand fight between them and Dark Cloud hurls his antagonist into the river. The latter seems about to escape by swimming when Dark Cloud makes him a captive. The scenes of struggle are witnessed by the trader and his friends.

The trader offers every apology and amend within his power, but the Indian is too proud to remain with them. He makes his new camp far from them, followed by the prayers of the children for his safety.

A SELIG FEATURE IN REGULAR SERVICE.

"The Way of a Woman's Heart," a Selig Special in two reels, released in regular service on Monday, August 30, was originally planned for a feature photoplay. However, nothing is too good for the Selig regular program and it was decided to present this worthy story in regular service. "The Way of a Woman's Heart" features Miss Eugenie Besserer, the French emotional actress, who is supported by Harry de Vere, Miss Virginia Kirtley and others. The plot is from the pen of Nellie Browne Duff, the well known authoress. The story deals with a stage-struck girl and how she finally realizes that all is not gold that glitters. There is also an appealing story of a woman's sacrifice interwoven in the thread of this strong story.

A Selig Diamond Special of unusual appeal will be released in regular service on Thursday, September 9. It is entitled "'Neath Calvary's Shadow," and features those popular stars of the Screen, Miss Fritzie Brunette and Wheeler Oakman. How the rector of a fashionable church loses his parish because of his care for a foundling and how finally peace, love and understanding come to him and his sweetheart are convincingly presented. W. H. Lippert is author of this Selig Diamond Special of unusual story, action, and which possesses a wealth of beautiful scenic backgrounds.

JAPANESE PLAYERS AT THANHOUSER.

Immediately on their arrival in this country for an extraordinary engagement at the San Francisco Exposition, the Maida Imperial Dramatic Company was met at the pier by George Foster Platt, the Thanhouser director. In Tokio Mr. Platt had ample opportunity to study the Japanese dramatic art, and when he heard Mr. Maida was coming to these shores he laid plans to introduce them to the films. In this he succeeded. The visitors finally accepted Mr. Thanhouser's offer and they are now at work under Director Platt, who is well versed in Nipponese custom and folk lore. The first release is "In a Japanese Garden," scheduled for August 22. In this the Samurai code of obedience to the parent's wish is tragically illustrated, and it is interesting that Mr. Maida, who plays the Samurai, is one of that honorable class in actual life.

Thanhouser Japanese Players.

MARIE TEMPEST IN "MRS. PLUM'S PUDDING."

The next Broadway Universal Feature to be released will be Miss Marie Tempest in "Mrs. Plum's Pudding," with W. Grahame Browne, Lee Moran and Eddie Lyons in the cast. This five reel comedy feature will be released on Monday, August 23.

"A CHILD OF THE SURF" (Majestic).

The quaint fishing village atmosphere of "A Child of the Surf," Majestic feature, was obtained at Portuguese Bend, on the Pacific Ocean, between St. Pedro and Santa Barbara, Cal. A company of Majestic players, headed by the featured actress, Teddy Sampson, made a long stay in the little village before the feature was filmed to get thoroughly into the spirit of their parts.

"A Child of the Surf" was written by Mary H. O'Connor. Teddy Sampson is presented as Nancy, the belle of the fishing village. She lives with her grandfather. She is a veritable child of the surf. Robert, a city man of wealth, comes to the village, is attracted to Nancy, pays her court, but is forbidden the house by the grandfather. The latter thinks that all city men are worthless.

Scene from "A Child of the Surf" (Majestic).

Robert disguises himself as one of his own workmen who are building a jetty. As such he has some exciting adventures, but eventually, he is able to persuade the grandfather that at least one city man is a good citizen.

Spottiswoode Aitken is the grandfather and Frank Borzage is Robert.

ADDITIONAL PRINTS ARE NEEDED.

Return engagements on two reel productions are unusual, although they are common with "The Battle at Elderbush Gulch," a two reel Biograph re-issue, released in the regular service July 30. Demands on the exchanges throughout the country for return engagements on this production have exceeded the working capacity of the prints originally in service, and additional prints were ordered to supply the demand. In most cases, the return engagements cover a period of two or three days, and in not a few instances, an entire week's booking is the outcome of the success of a single day's run.

"THE GALLOPER" (Pathe).

"The Galloper," the first of Pathe's Gold Rooster Plays to be released, is worthy of the honor thus given to it. Richard Harding Davis, the author, is too well known, both as author and dramatist, to require any comment, therefore let it suffice to say that "The Galloper" is written in his best style and enjoyed a fine run on the stage. George Brackett Seitz adapted it for a five-reel comedy-drama and it will be released on September 10.

Two things in particular strike the observer as he views this fine production—first, the excellent direction—apparent in every scene, of Donald Mackenzie, the producer, and secondly, the really brilliant work done by the famous comedian, Clifton Crawford, in the title role. A character not in the original play, that of "the unknown," has been inserted by Mr. Mackenzie with excellent results. "The unknown" is a Turkish spy, played by David Burton, and he adds wonderfully to the humor of the play. He was Mr. Mackenzie's own conception and forms merely one of the number of examples of the producer's care and ability. Clifton Crawford proves himself to be an artist of the first rank, and worth the very large salary which it is understood he received for appearing in this, his first picture. Without detracting from the fine ability shown by the rest of this really excellent cast, second honors go to Melville Stewart and Jessie Ralph, the first mentioned, playing the part of a much-married correspondent, and the latter as a rich and unlovely widow with matrimonial designs. Fania Marinoff, Rhys Alexander and Sam Ryan give worthy support.

Scene from "The Galloper" (Pathe)..

The story deals with a divorced war correspondent who divides his time between dodging alimony-hunting divorced wives and various creditors. Despite the fact that "The Galloper" is primarily a comedy, there is plenty of drama and much thrill to it. Pathe is to be congratulated on its first Gold Rooster Play, and Donald Mackenzie upon the production of what will undoubtedly be one of the big successes of the year.

"SHOCKING STOCKINGS" (Komic).

"Shocking Stockings," the newest "Komic" comedy, employs laughably the services of Fay Tincher, Edward "Komic" Dillon, Chester Withey and Max Davidson.

"Shocking Stockings" derives its title from a stocking incident at the seashore. Ed is in love with Fay, but her father is opposed to the match. Fay half buries herself in the sand. Ed., her sweetheart, makes a dummy, a prominent part of which is a pair of wooden legs. Upon these legs he places stockings similar to those worn by Fay. Papa is completely deceived and believes Fay safe in the sand, while she and Ed go for a ride in a Ferris wheel.

A rival for the hand of Fay, however, contrives to get Ed alone in the wheel, which is stuck in mid-air. The rival carries Fay off in a rowboat and jeers at the helpless Ed, who, however, makes a leap from the upper part of the wheel into the ocean and rescues Fay. This completely eliminates the rival.

Fay Tincher, of course, is Fay. Edward "Komic" Dillon not only directs the picture, but plays the part of Ed. Chester Withey is the rival, while Fay's father is Max Davidson.

Origin of Kalem Picture

"A False Clue" Based on Incident Said to Have Happened in San Francisco Hotel.

The adventure which befell a certain famous star, while stopping at the Hotel St. Francis, San Francisco, formed the basis of "A False Clue," the newest episode of Kalem's "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel." This star for years has played in detective dramas, and according to prominent critics, he actually lives his part. The production in which he was featured some time ago was to be presented at San Francisco, and upon arrival in that city the player, together with his wife and a valet, who had been in his service for years, registered at the Hotel St. Francis.

Scene from "The False Clue" (Kalem).

According to the hotel officials, the actor's wife kept her jewels in a small jewel box reposing on her dresser. The day after their arrival, one of the hotel bellboys delivered a parcel to the star, and while waiting for the receipt to be signed stood near the dresser. The actor, his wife, and the valet, were all in the room at the time.

Shortly after the messenger had returned to the office floor, the actor rushed down, grasped the boy by the arm, and excitedly declared that the bellboy had stolen his wife's rings. Attracted by the commotion, one of the hotel officials attempted to question the boy, but the infuriated guest interrupted the cross-examination by declaring there was no doubt but that the boy had stolen the jewels while waiting for the receipt. Furthermore, the actor insisted, because of his stage training he was at once able to discern the guilty party, and that the bellboy was a thief because his deductions in such cases were always infallible.

After considerable argument the house detective of the St. Francis succeeded in getting all parties interested back to the actor's apartment. The sleuth's questions concerning the valet were haughtily frowned down by the star, who declared the man to be absolutely honest. Following a long-winded recital of his prowess as an amateur detective, the actor wound up with the statement that unless the hotel management compelled the boy to restore the stolen property it would have to make good his loss.

The patient house official inquired as to the disposition of the people in the room at the time the boy called with the parcel, and what the actor, the latter's wife and the valet had been doing prior to the lad's appearance.

It then developed that the valet had been cleaning the rings with alcohol, and that he had subsequently buried them in sawdust to make the stones dry with the most lustre. Upon hearing this, the house detective examined the waste basket and found it to contain a quantity of the sawdust. Groping about in the basket the sleuth brought the missing rings to view. The valet then recalled that while he was cleaning the rings, his master had been rehearsing a role. Deeply interested, the servant placed the rings in the sawdust, later emptying the box into the waste basket without first removing the gems.

The star suddenly forgot his prowess as a sleuth, and while the hotel detective was turning the rings over to him, he salved the messenger's pride with an exceedingly liberal tip. That same day the player departed from the hotel, nor has he ever visited the St. Francis since.

KLEINE TO MAKE "THE POLITICIAN."

"The Politicians," Aaron Hoffman's celebrated farce, is now in course of filming at the Kleine studios with a Broadway cast featuring Bickel and Watson. Such well known players as Snitz Edwards, Miss Ruby Hoffman, Miss Alma Hanlon, Florence Morrison and John Nicholson will support the famous comedians. The precedent in matters of exquisite interiors and the general excellence of detail set by "Hello Bill" will be followed in "The Politicians."

"OUT OF DARKNESS" AN EXPOSE OF INHUMAN LABOR CONDITIONS.

Miss Charlotte Walker's new photoplay production, "Out of Darkness," by Hector Turnbull, formerly dramatic critic of the New York Tribune and now a member of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company's literary and photodramatic staff, is a severe arraignment of the inhuman conditions of labor in some of the big canneries of the United States. It will be recalled that several years ago labor conditions in these great establishments were the subject of special federal investigation. Mr. Turnbull, through his newspaper connection, had the opportunity of special study and knowledge of the wrongs at first hand.

The combination of a stirring and thrilling story and an attack on a great evil make "Out of Darkness" particularly interesting and potent.

Miss Walker made her debut as a photoplay star in the Lasky production of "Kindling." This is proving throughout the country to be one of the most popular productions of the Lasky studios. It also was a severe indictment of inhuman conditions—tenement life in big cities. Unlike her first role, Miss Walker in "Out of Darkness" will be seen for some minutes of the drama in exquisite costumes of the modern-day society girl.

The turn of the story from the upper to the lower social level takes place when the heroine is wrecked at sea. This is a scene exciting in episode, as Miss Walker, on a small sailing boat, is thrown into the water when a big liner runs down the sloop. Injured, she loses her memory and forgets her identity. Friends care for her, and when she recovers she obtains a position in one of the Scott canneries—a branch of the industry she owns. Previously she had refused to better the labor conditions. Now she finds herself caught in the mesh of her own business.

Thomas Meighan, Margery Daw and Mrs. Loyola O'Connor appear in leading roles in support of Miss Walker.

ANDERSON IN STRAIGHT COMEDY.

G. M. Anderson is now illustrating his ability to handle comedy-drama as well as straight drama. In the last several photoplays he has produced he introduces comedy into the action. Believing that the seriousness of the film will be the more appreciated and impressive because of the contrasting comedy, Mr. Anderson is adopting the rule of taking great care in studying out the best comedy pantomime which is possible and inserting it.

In "Broncho Billy's Protege," Mr. Anderson illustrates this new theory of his and includes, besides himself and Marguerite Clayton for drama roles, Harry Todd, Ben Turpin and Slippery Slim for comedy parts, who also fill the functions of supporting characters. Mr. Anderson is quite familiar with comedy work. He not only knows how to get the most out of his comedians, but can adapt himself to comedy parts. He played in comedy on the speaking stage for some time before entering motion picture work.

HARRY MOREY IN A COMING V-L-S-E.

Harry Morey, one of the leading players in the Vitagraph Stock Company, whose remarkable ability for playing character leads and heavies is unsurpassed and known both to the exhibitor and public for his work in such successes as "A Million Bid," "The Wreck," "413," "Shadows of the Past," "My Official Wife," "The Price of Folly," and "The Enemies," and numerous other Vitagraph productions, is now working in a very strong dramatic picturization entitled "The Making Over of Geoffry Manning," in which he plays the title role. The picture being produced under the direction of Harry Davenport and will be in four parts. This feature will be known as a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature to be released in the near future.

Scene from "The Making Over of Geoffry Manning" (Vitagraph).

"THE WANDERER" (Biograph).

Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lionel Barrymore, Claire McDowell, Walter Miller, Charles H. Mailes, Jack Dillon and W. C. Cabanne complete the well chosen cast of this Biograph re-issue, directed by D. W. Griffith and released in the regular service, Friday, September 3.

It is a symbolic story of a young idealist's desire to take to the open road with his flute and charm the ears of all who might hear his music. Lovers hear this familiar strain and are hushed into happiness. A self-willed little girl hears the same strain and is humbled. Later, when her parents had sold her to a crafty old merchant, she sought the protection of the flute player.

Years later, the lovers of old are astray in bitterness and sin. The woman has another lover, and for his sake is willing to rob and slay her lord. Together they steal into his room; the dagger is drawn, the gold clutched; then they hear the familiar strains of the wanderer's flute, and the woman refuses to do her new lover's bidding. Once more the idealist has charmed the lovers with his true notes.

As was said, it is a symbolic story, dependant not so much on plot construction as it is on careful presentation, and as acted by this splendid cast under the direction of D. W. Griffith, it makes a one reel offering that will be appreciated by audiences who prefer art in pictures, rather than suspense and thrills.

CHANGE IN RELEASE OF EDISON'S "VANITY FAIR."

The unusual character and elaborate pretentiousness of the Edison feature masterpiece, "Vanity Fair," starring Mrs. Fiske, has made necessary a change in the advertised release date. This subject was scheduled as the initial Edison attraction in the newly organized Kleine-Edison Service, for release September 8. Owing to the extraordinary nature of the big release and in accordance with the Kleine-Edison policy of allowing an abundance of time for careful editing and laboratory work, "Vanity Fair" will be released October 6 instead of September 8. In its place the great Kleine feature, "The Money Master," completed some months ago and recently given its finishing touches, founded on Cleveland Moffett's play, "The Battle," starring Frank Sheridan, supported by Paul McAllister, Fania Marinoff and others, will be released September 8.

"THE MAN WITH THE IRON HEART" (Selig).

"The Man with the Iron Heart" is the title of the Selig Diamond Special, in three reels, released Thursday, September 2, in regular service. This unusual play is from the pen of Henry Kolker, the well-known actor. Al Filson assumes the leading role and is ably supported by Lillian Hayward, Fred Hearn, Vivian Reed and other Selig artists. Hundreds of supernumeraries are engaged in several of the numerous climaxes which will be found in this picture play. Geo. Nicholls, the director, has been most happy in the selection of beautiful interior and exterior settings.

I. M. Mann, millionaire president of a large corporation, is known as "The Man with the Iron Heart." He looks upon his workmen as slaves and those who earn their daily bread by piling up riches for Mann are in terror at his approach. Because his cashier is ten minutes late, he is discharged, and Mann's severity grows until one thousand of his workmen rebel.

He refuses to grant concessions to them and when the union men march from the factories, they encounter a mob of would-be strike breakers and a terrific conflict ensues in which the police are summoned and with difficulty quell the rioters.

Mann is shot by one of the rioters. During his illness, Conscience appears before him in his delirium and also Death. He overcomes Death, but is unable to repulse Conscience. Conscience shows the Man with the Iron Heart the scenes of suffering which he has occasioned. Conscience-stricken, Mann's heart is softened and his reformation is complete.

"THE FOUNDLING" (Famous Players).

Quite inexhaustible, it appears, is the peculiar artistic faculty of Mary Pickford, the world's foremost motion picture star, for creating characters that are idealized and yet wholly true to life. In rapid and uninterrupted succession, this inimitable star has provided a series of individually distinctive and collectively astonishing film successes. Following her triumphant appearences in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow" and "Rags," Miss Pickford will next be presented in another unusual role, as 'The Foundling," the Famous Players' release on the Paramount Program September 6.

Scene from "The Foundling" (Famous Players).

"The Foundling" is a characterization of tender appeal and wistful pathos. Molly O, the foundling, is the daughter of a struggling artist at whose birth her mother dies. Because of his wonderful love for his wife, the artist hates the child that caused her death, and gives the baby girl to a mothering heart that cares for it. How the threads of destiny unite these parted souls, bringing to each its first genuine happiness, is absorbingly unfolded in the photoplay—not, however, until a number of tense dramatic situations and a series of novel incidents have been developed.

Miss Pickford's masterly ability to melt pathos with humor is strikingly displayed throughout this entire five-part feature. She plays so effectively on the heart-strings of her spectators that the smile and tear pursue each other constantly.

A capable cast, including Frank Mills, Harry Ham, Gertrude Norman, Donald Crisp, and Edith Chapman, renders the star adequate support. "The Foundling" may be said to present Little Mary at her best in her most captivating mood, her most triumphant ability and compelling power.

"THE SALAMANDER" APPROACHING COMPLETION.

"The Salamander," a visualization of Owen Johnson's widely read and discussed novel, which in play form had a metropolitan hearing last season at the Harris Theater, New York City, is rapidly approaching the completed stage under the guidance of Arthur Donaldson, conceded to be a master producer of the shadow stage. B. S. Moss, president of the Moss Motion Picture Corporation, which stands sponsor for the new feature, recently remarked in an interview, "We have adopted as our slogan, 'Quality, not quantity.' As we have not contracted for any definite date release of 'The Salamander,' we are therefore in a position to take our time in preparing our screen offering; thus, the production will not be rushed as is invariably the case with quite a number of feature films. Our director, Arthur Donaldson, has been given a free rein with ample currency at his command to turn out a feature that will bear all the ear-marks of a master film. I feel confident that I will be in a position within the next two weeks to set a definite release date for 'The Salamander.' On the completing of this film, we will place into rehearsals, a gripping, thrilling photoplay of particular moment, dealing in unusual manner with politics. Last, but not least, it is the intention of the Moss Motion Picture Corporation to conduct a coast-to-coast advertising campaign in behalf of the many features we intend giving production to within the very near future."

"JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOR" PICTURED.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation has just completed a five reel photo-play, entitled "John Glayde's Honor," written by the great English author, Alfred Sutro, which was produced and played in this country by James K. Hackett, and in London by Sir George Alexander. Judging from the great success of 'The Builder of Bridges," which was also written by Alfred Sutro, "John Glayde's Honor" will be a very popular attraction. It is not yet decided how this picture will be released.

"Guarding Old Glory"

F. O. Neilson Finally Decides to Handle His Feature on State Rights Plan.

"Guarding Old Glory," F. O. Neilson's feature, was first advertised in the June 12th issue of the Moving Picture World and also reviewed at length in that same number. Negotiations were delayed until full endorsement of the films could be had from the Naval and Military authorities.

After seeing the films Secretary of War Garrison writes: "I wish that every citizen could see them," and Secretary of the Navy Daniels writes: "I trust that thousands will see these pictures." Officers of both the Army and Navy, including Major Generals Wood and Scott and Rear Admiral Benson have expressed their keen appreciation of the films and their value in increasing the pride and interest of the people in our Army and Navy and especially in demonstrating at this particular time the value of military preparedness. Certainly no subject is being more seriously considered and discussed at present over the length and breadth of the land.

The skill with which the scenes have been selected from the different branches of the service met with instant approval on the part of both the naval and military experts. Whether we are for or against larger military forces for the United States, these films present every branch of both our land and sea forces in an inspiring, thrilling, instructive and graphic portrayal of the efficiency and preparedness of the "man behind the gun."

Mr. Neilson has been in New York for the past few days arranging territory, publicity campaign and other details with Mr. Rudolph, his New York representative and expects to return to Chicago before the end of the week.

SEPTEMBER V-L-S-E FEATURES OUTLINED.

For release during the month of September, the V-L-S-E has so far scheduled five productions, three five reel subjects and two six reel features. These five subjects form a perfectly balanced program in which will be seen a galaxy of stars, including Marie Dressler, Robert Edeson, Richard C. Travers, Stella Razeto, Guy Oliver and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

The first release of the month will be Robert Edeson in "Mortmain," a five part Blue Ribbon feature, that will go into screen evidence on September 6. "Mortmain" is an intensely tragic drama, that is as sensational as it is unique and weird.

On September 13, the Essanay Company will release the six part feature, "The Man Trail," in which Richard C. Travers plays the leading role. "The Man Trail" is a story of the lumbering camps and the principal scenes were taken in the lumber country in Tennessee.

The Selig Company's contribution that will be released September 20, is a six part visualization of Anna Katherine Green's celebrated novel, "A Circular Staircase," in which Stella Rozeto and Guy Oliver will be presented.

On September 20, the second Blue Ribbon Feature of the month will be released. This is a five-part production, "Playing Dead" in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew will make their first appearance on the V-L-S-E program. This is a comedy-drama of the type that has endeared the Drews to picture play patrons. On September 27, Marie Dressler in "Tillie's Tomato Surprise" is scheduled for release by the Lubin Company. Exhibitors have stated that they look for this Dressler comedy to be a smashing big success, and according to reports from the Lubin studio, Miss Dressler has given to the camera the greatest comedy of her career.

MAY WARD, CONTINENTAL STAR.

The "Dresden doll comedienne," May Ward, deserts vaudeville for the screen and is the star in a five part production of the new Continental Photoplay Corporation of Germantown, Pa., entitled "A Continental Girl."

Director Joseph Adelman wrote it as a four-act play back in the days when he was alternately actor and stage director for Charles Frohman. Now he has made it over into a scenario calling for 180 scenes, and carrying its characters from a score of spots in the beautiful Lake George country to the Battle of Saratoga and final happiness in old New York City.

May Ward in "A Continental Girl" (Continental).

Thirty-five of the earlier scenes depicting the love of Flossie Burgett and Allen, a captain in the Continental army, were taken in the garden and against the walls of a two-hundred-year-old house at 9100 Germantown Road.

In the hedgerows and byways of the neighborhood, Director Adelman posed a succession of scenes showing the arrest of Allen by a jealous British officer, one Staunton, and the march of his captors towards the headquarters of America's enemies. Roads still further out of Germantown, and a 250-acre farm and rock-girt lake furnished the setting for Allen's rescue by Deerfoot, an Indian brave, and for glimpses of the final battle of Saratoga, in the course of which the Indian and Staunton engage in a death struggle and Flossie brings the American army to victory by waving the stars and stripes from the top of the flag pole at the British headquarters.

BURNS AND STULL IN "POKES AND JABS."

"Bobbie" Burns and "Walt" Stull and their "Pokes and Jabbs" comedies made for the Wizard Motion Picture Corporation and released through the World Film are proving so popular that they are booked up for a solid month in advance. "Juggling the Truth," which was recently shown at the Strand and at the Grand Central Palace, and "Two for a Quarter," released some time ago, are the most popular. Proctor's circuit have signed up for Wizard pictures, agreeing to show every one which appears. The Grand Central Palace, Feltman's at Coney Island, the Arverne Pier at Arverne, Nevelis theater at White Plains, the Strand at Bradley Beach, the Heights and Dyckman theater in New York have all agreed to show all the "Pokes and Jabbs" series.

The two funny men are now at work on another "big suit" picture, in which two men occupy the same set of clothes and cause a lot of merriment over the fact. With them are working the four pretty girls, Helen Von Huben, Pearl Shepard, Ethel Burton, and Betty Holton.

Equitable Plans

Proposes to Accumulate Ten Subjects Before It Begins Releasing—Producing and Distributing Forces Busy on Preliminaries.

THE Equitable Pictures Corporation, now in the seventh week of its actual existence, is following a plan heretofore unattempted—before one release sees the light of screen day will have in its possession ten pictures of which there can be no uncertainty of their quality and calibre. Six directors, men of tradition in the trade and men whose work have created places for them in an overtrodden field, have been actively engaged in productional activities for the past seven weeks and will continue for the forthcoming five weeks, and the result of their efforts, if their efforts reach the standard Equitable has set itself, will be seen in the pictures that reach the market. There will be no costly and heart-breaking "failures" released owing to the lack of releasing material.

Four of the first ten pictures to be released have already been selected by the examining board of the Equitable. The initial release, although unseen as yet by the trade reviewers, is said to be a magnificent production of "Trilby" with a powerful combination of noted players, headed by the queenly Clara Kimball Young and the distinguished actor, Wilton Lackaye, and having in support a cast of players, unsurpassed in point of histrionic ability.

"Trilby" in its cinematized form, according to the authorities who know, will be, when seen, one of the greatest surprises in the history of features and another feather in the cap of Director Tourneur. "Trilby" will be released Sept. 21 and then, consecutively, will come the work of Ince, Seay, Cullison, Golden and McNamara.

Among the directors already at work and completing or having completed their first efforts are John Ince, of the famous Ince trio and lately of the Lubin forces. Mr. Ince has long harbored a desire to concentrate on pictures big enough to require thought, time, knowledge and supreme attention to the all important matter of atmosphere and environment and has been allotted a series of serious vehicles which will require the every resource of this prolific creator.

Webster Cullison, whose masterful creations on the vigor sapping sands of the Arizona deserts in the interest of Eclair, is grinding slowly toward the completion of "The Bludgeon," in which Kathryn Osterman will be seen. This feature will characterize the Equitable contribution to World Films about Oct. 26.

Joseph Golden, a pioneer producer whose rise in filmdom marks every milestone from property man, salesman, director, executive, manager and film deliverer, in the early days when even the star put on his "overalls and helped out," is devoting his knowledge to the efforts of the Equitable and is featuring Hilda Spong in "Divorced," his first work.

Charles Seay, known to men throughout the trade from his long and ardent attention to production with Edison, is handling the company, at present headed by Thomas Wise in "Blue Grass" by Paul Armstrong, and is a permanent valued fixture with Equitable.

Walter McNamara, whose "Traffic in Souls" and "Ireland a Nation" attracted such widespread attention, is busily engaged on "Human Cargoes" for Equitable. "Human Cargoes" promises to exceed any previous McNamara creations. He is permanently with Equitable.

Beloved by all and heading, to the minutest detail the every productional effort of Equitable, comes "Bernie." Isador Bernstein is too well known to require anything here, save a bare outlining of his activities, is one of the angles of the powerful organization which comes into the field now, when the methods and manners and means or production are revoluting. Mr. Bernstein is directing genius of the Equitable, and while his specific duties are manifold, the exhibitor who contemplated dealing with Equitable need but know that Isador Bernstein will be present, in spirit, on every screen showing an Equitable product.

The executive staff of the Equitable Corporation boasts a number of men of precedent in filmdom and the commerces.

Arthur H. Speigel, whose flourishing merchandising plants through the middle west denote him a man of acumen, success and more than a fair share of judgment, is the guiding spirit at Equitable and shares the suite of General Manager Felix F. Feist.

The entire exploitation department is in the hands of Harry L. Reichenbach, whose method of aiding exhibitors and exploiting features in the manner most beneficial for the buyer of films, was so effective while with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and the Metro Pictures Corporation, that this method is the standard now throughout the country. Mr. Reichenbach will install at the Equitable offices the most far-reaching system of dissemination ever attempted by a producing and distributing company.

Among the principal features to be adopted by Equitable is the idea developed by Mr. Feist and Mr. Selznick, of using the leverage of local exhibitors' advertising without expense of trouble to the exhibitor. This system has been used to advantage by several large national advertisers and will be adopted just prior to the first Equitable release.

Not one dollar of Equitable money will be squandered in publications with waste circulation. The news service will begin within the week and the money saved on this direct method will, according to General Manager Feist, be guided into local channels with immediate results to any exhibitor on the regular Equitable roster.

INTERESTING BIG FOUR PUBLICITY STUFF.

For the showing of the Blue Ribbon feature, "The Island of Regeneration," the Liberty Theater in Seattle, Wash., advertised for one hundred parrots. This advertisement was placed in the "help wanted" columns of daily newspapers in very attractive copy, and it was specified that the parrots must be able to talk. If they bore this qualification, an endeavor was made to have them say, "Edith Storey," "Antonio Moreno," and "The Island of Regeneration."

When this feature was shown at the Star Theater, Meridan, Conn., a beautiful display was arranged in the lobby of the theater that caught and held the attention of transients, and caused a big boost in the box office receipts. The display was in the form of a life-size statue of Miss Edith Storey in a scene from the play, and was a splendid example of plaster of paris modeling.

"THE WOMAN NEXT DOOR" (Kleine).

"The Woman Next Door," the initial release on the new Kleine-Edison program, September 8, is founded on the stage play of that name by Owen Davis. Miss Irene Fenwick plays the leading role of Jenny Gay, a part unusually well suited to her abilities and one in which she does exceptionally clever work.

How Jenny Gay, a theatrical star, is driven from home and stage career by the mad infatuation and continued persecutions of Jack Lake, a confidence man, and is finally discovered in a quaint New England village where she has taken refuge, is the central theme of the story which is familiar to theatergoers the nation over. Tom Grayson, a construction engineer who has made the acquaintance of Lake in Mexico, returns home and is visited by Lake, who soon finds that the gentle little stranger next door is none other than the former object of his affection. Tom and Jenny Gay promptly fall in love and Lake, in a fit of jealous rage, reveals her identity as the notorious actress whose scandalous divorce suit had dragged her name through the mire a year before. Tom immediately takes a hand in the controversy and, in a series of intensely interesting and spectacular scenes, forces a confession from Lake showing how he had arranged every detail of the divorce.

A Strange Crime

Balzac's Extraordinary Story of "The Country Parson" as a Three-Reel Biograph.

Continuing its policy of introducing to motion picture patrons the best of classic fiction, Biograph Company announces for early release a three-reel production of Honore de Balzac's extraordinary story, "The Country Parson." Ever since the successful production last winter, of the same author's "Cousin Pons" and "Pere Goriot," in the list of two-reel Biographs, Biograph has received many requests for more of Balzac's work, and "The Country Parson" has been selected as furnishing material for an unusual three-reel subject, under a title yet to be determined upon.

The plot has remarkable picture possibilities. It is the story of a girl who, at once strongly sensual and strongly devotional, is thrown into the arms of a husband physically repulsive. She has been deprived of her good looks by illness. After a time her husband's demeanor forces her to take refuge in the substantial, if not ennobling, consolation offered by a good-looking and amiable young fellow of the lower class. Out of this situation develops a strange crime, in the solution of which Balzac achieves what many critics regard as his masterpiece.

"BLOW FOR BLOW."

"Blow for Blow," the three-act drama by Henry J. Byron, which bears the reputation of having been the vehicle that brought success to many stage stars, is scheduled for early release as a two-reel Biograph. It is a melodrama of the higher type, and bears an interesting history. The famous Fanny Josephs first produced it at the Holborn theater, London, and Annie Clark duplicated her success in this country at the old Boston Museum.

SOME UNUSUAL CHILDREN'S PICTURES.

Two of the most unusual children's performances in motion pictures will be seen in the work of Frank Longacre and little Ethelmary Oakland, the children stars of "School Bells," the tremendous children's five reel feature picture which is being produced by Perry N. Vekroff for the Charles K. Harris Feature Film Company at the Kinemacolor studios at Whitestone. Frank plays the part of "Hans Wagner," a little Dutch boy who comes to America to go to school, where the children make fun of him for his foreign ways, and Ethelmary plays the part of "Amy Parson," the daughter of a rich soap manufacturer, who takes the little stranger's part. Both children are very young. Frank is nine, and already he boasts the honor of having played with Phyllis Neilson Terry (as the little Jestor in Twelfth Night), and with Nazimova. Ethelmary appeared in "Fads and Fancies" with Madge Lessing last season as "Belgium" and she also played in the film "Always in the Way." They are stage children and attendants of the stage children's school at the Rehearsal Club. Three other stage children, Nicholas Long, Florence Foley and Jack McCawley, are also in the picture. Two hundred Whitestone children are also in the picture.

"THE GHOST WAGON" (Universal).

Edythe Sterling plays an interesting role in "The Ghost Wagon" (Universal). As a mountain girl she is the friend of all the wild animals which come for miles around and haunt her cabin in search of food. Coyotes frisk at her feet, wolves whine about for her to appear, while even the bears are as playful as big dogs while she is feeding them. In the photo reproduced herewith Miss Sterling is shown with her two pet bears, "Ostrich" and "Hungry." (Rex De Roselli calls them "the Austria-Hungary gorillas.") Both cubs got their names from their tremendous appetites.

Some remarkable triple exposures occur in "The Ghost Wagon" and this feature gives the photoplay its title. Ghost figures of a prairie schooner and of horses running furiously with a ghostly driver urging them on flit across the screen at pivotal points in the play and give an eerie illusion which the legitimate stage would find impossible to attain.

"The Ghost Wagon" was written by Bess Meredyth and produced by Joseph Franz. Besides Miss Sterling, Sherman Bainbridge, Rex Roselli, Warren Ellsworth and A. Edmundson enact other principal roles. The story centers around a silver mine. In order to be revenged upon a mountain lass who spurns his advances, a Yaqui Indian betrays the secret of the mine and leads an attack of his tribe upon the girl and her father, and later upon a young Easterner who comes west to develop the property.

"THE PHANTOM HAPPINESS" (Lubin).

This is a three-act Lubin comedy-drama depicting the adventures of a man and two women, one his wife. While it is a story of the so-called eternal triangle, it differs in that the Scene from "The Phantom Happiness" (Lubin).

"other woman" is not essentially bad but merely tempted by her great love for another woman's husband.

As a photoplay, it is intensely strong, well acted and well photographed. The leading roles are played by Ormi Hawley, Earl Metcalf and Rosetta Brice.

From the War Zone to the Cycle

Alice Inwood, English Authoress and Actress, Comes to Join Lincoln Cycle Cast.

AFTER an exciting and heroic career in the fields of battle in Southern France, Alice Inwood, daughter of Lord Inwood of England, is now in America after a stormy trip aboard the St. Paul out of Liverpool. She has come to play an important part in the Lincoln pictures and as such she will become a worthy support to Benjamin Chapin, the eminent Lincoln characterizer.

The artistic strength of the cast chosen by the Charter Features is remarkable—each new comer is a star worthy to sparkle alone. Miss Inwood has had a varied career. The daughter of one of the oldest families of aristocratic Britain, she early found herself drifting toward the arts. Her books have been among the best of their kind to appear in Europe. She has been in these lands before and has been known to motion picture lovers through her work with Thomas Ince and in the Reliance, Majestic and other motion picture companies. Miss Inwood scored successes with the Weston Feature Film Co. of London as Queen Elizabeth, and in the Battle of Waterloo she was the one big outstanding figure. As Ann Hathaway in the "Life of Shakespeare" she made that fine figure of history take on new proportions.

She has been noted for her wonderful emotional characterization among which her Florence Nightingale stands perhaps supreme. Nor are Miss Inwood's English pictures unknown to America. "Through the Clouds" had a sensational American run and brought big prices for American rights to the Weston Feature Film Co.

Recently the English and French press devoted laudatory comments on Miss Inwood's courageous and noble service to the wounded soldiers. One of her most original ideas in connection with her aid to the sufferers was her "egg begging campaign." Rushing around from farm to farm in the rural districts she asked for eggs and it is said that one day alone she collected 8,000 eggs.

Miss Inwood carries with her a scar of a wound received while in the trenches. She has always been a lover of Lincoln and her addition to the cast which is playing the Lincoln Cycle is a striking tribute to the artistic intentions of the Charter Features Corporation. The Cycle has its first release on September 13—"Old Abe," the first production, being all ready for the theaters.

Notes of the Trade

Mr Joseph Partridge, manager of the New York Branch of the V-L-S-E, reports that the advance bookings for "Tillie's Tomato Surprise" with Marie Dressler are phenomenal. Mr. Partridge says that without exception all of the leading exhbitors in the New York territory who are booking this feature are preparing big special advertising in anticipation of running the feature for extra long engagements.

Jack Conway, Reliance producer, who had charge of the filming of "The Old High Chair," "The Mystic Jewel" and various other important photodramas produced at the Hollywood studios, recently completed the screening of "The Way of a Mother," an exceptionally strong drama, in which Marguerite Marsh has the principal role. It will be released August 14.

Commencing in October, the Vitagraph Company will release a Sidney Drew picture every Friday, inaugurating what will be known as a "Sidney Drew Day." Mr. Drew will direct all the pictures in which he appears, playing opposite his wife.

Fay Tincher is playing the part of a chauffeur in "Father Love," a Komic release for August 8. Frank Darien, Olga Gray and Chester Withey are members of the cast. Producer Edward Dillon is staging the piece.

The Essanay company has begun the erection of a complete lumber camp for a realistic setting in "The Man Trail," the six act photoplay written by Henry Oyen. This is a red blooded story of the rugged, primitive types of the logging country. The camp will be complete in every detail. It is being constructed under the supervision of Captain E. H. Calvert, who will direct the picture. Fifty lumber jacks have been secured from camps in the north woods especially for this picture. Richard C. Travers, who was born and raised in the Canadian woods, will take the lead in the play, while June Keith will take the role of heroine. This feature will be released in September through the V-L-S-E, Inc.

Canadians Fight Censorship

British Columbia Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association Working to Ameliorate Condition Becoming Intolerable—Nine Out of Twenty Mutual Features Rejected in Toto—J. R. Muir to Distribute World Film.

By E. C. Thomas, Correspondent for Western Canada.

ALBERT E. VINCE, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation's Vancouver exchange, a few days ago furnished the writer with a statement which illustrates forcibly the lengths to which censorship has gone in British Columbia. Twenty Mutual Masterpictures have so far been brought into this Province; of these, the following nine were rejected in toto by the censors: "On the Night Stage," "Strathmore," "The Failure," "Ghosts," "The Devil," "The Outlaw's Revenge," "The Darkening Trail," "Man's Prerogative," "The Reward"—45 per cent. of the total number submitted! Other subjects were not brought in on account of the conviction that they would not be passed. As import duties must be paid on these films, and as a picture rejected in one Province is very apt to be banned in perhaps 50 or 75 per cent. of the Canadian territory, the hardship worked on every branch of the industry is quickly apparent.

A short time ago an active campaign against this iniquity was inaugurated by the British Columbia Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association. The aid of the newspapers was enlisted, and various appeals, of which the following is a sample, were handed to theater patrons along with their programs: "To our patrons: Believing after two years' experience the manner of censoring films in this province, as exercised by the present incumbent of the office, to be entirely too severe, thereby denying you the privilge of witnessing a large number of beautiful productions that otherwise would be shown, we proposed to the government as a remedy that it appoint an appeal board of three, composed of one representative each from the Province, the City of Vancouver and the Exhibitors' Association, to reconsider all films rejected or cut by the censor, their judgment to be final. In view of the fact that it is to our interests to provide good clean entertainment, do you consider this suggestion unreasonable? Yet the present government has refused our request. If you are in sympathy with our position and views in this matter, kindly sign name and address on the reverse side of this card, and leave in the box office.

"N. B.—Watch for literature pertaining to this question every week."

Nothing has been accomplished as yet, as the government is in complete accord with the censors, but an active campaign is contemplated at the coming election, and it is hoped that a change of party will bring relief from the present autocratic rulings, and that the Appeal Board will be established. Under existing conditions, it is useless to attempt to carry the matter to the courts, as permission to sue the government must be obtained from the government itself, and such permission cannot be secured. As is usual in censorship matters, consistency is a jewel which has been lost from its setting. A scene at the cemetery in connection with the burial of the Lusitania victims was cut out of the Pathe Weekly, while exactly the same scene in the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial was passed.

MUIR TO HANDLE WORLD FILM.

The Dominion Film Exchange, Ltd., with its principal place of business in Vancouver, B. C., has just been incorporated at Victoria. This is an enterprise of J. R. Muir, the well known local exhibitor, and is formed to handle the output of the World Film Corporation in British Columbia. Mr. Muir also controls the Dominion theater in Vancouver, and another house of the same name in Victoria, and has for some time been using World Film features, securing them from outside points—at first from Seattle, and later from Calgary. Offices of the new exchange are in the Dominion theater building in Vancouver, and E. R. Fauser, formerly in charge of the local Mutual and Pathe exchanges, is manager. Considering the season and conditions generally, business is reported good. Another enterprising undertaking by Mr. Muir is the importation of the V-L-S-E features, which alternate with the World productions at his houses every half week. As the licensed feature combine has not yet established an office in this territory, the films are brought in from Seattle (subject to a duty of about $26 per reel) shown for three days at each of the two Dominion theaters, and then returned.

THROUGH WESTERN CANADA.

Considering the present war-time conditions, says Manager S. B. Taube of the Vancouver Universal exchange, business is good. He attributes this in great measure to his policy of extending the utmost consideration to exhibitors, and giving them, as nearly as possible, exactly what they want.

Vancouver exchanges received a visit last week from R. H. Scanlon, manager of the Patricia theater at Powell River, B. C.—a house originally opened by L. D. Cosgrave. Mr. Scanlon has just had the entire theater renovated, and installed a new operating room, and made the trip to town for the purpose of arranging a change of film service.

The Rose theater, on Cambie street, which has been dark recently, has just started up again, under the management of H. Ball and W. Goddard.

What was probably the most impressive spectacle in the history of Vancouver took place on August 4, the anniversary of England's entry into the great war. Moving picture theaters, in common with all mercantile establishments, were closed all afternoon. Good pictures of meeting and parade were secured by Cameraman Kean, and these,together with other local happenings, were immediately booked by Manager Muir of the Dominion theater, who has first call on all local views secured by "Kean's Canada Films."

S. B. Taube, the Universal manager, reports that his first release, now five months old, is still doing well. This is a two-foot subject entitled Earl Irwin Taube, and is guaranteed to be without scratches. The World man saw his picture, and he's a reel baby.

Vermilion, Alberta, is to have a new moving picture show, equipped with every convenience for the comfort of the public. Messrs. Glanville and Falkins are the moving spirits behind the enterprise

The Opera House at Kelowna, B. C., formerly managed by R. Duncan, has been taken over by H. J. Raymer.

Charles E. Couche, who conducts the Rex theater at Salmon Arm, B. C., has reopened the Rex at Revelstoke, and intends to operate both houses, using Mutual Masterpictures and "The Diamond from the Sky."

The Johnson-Willard fight pictures opened at the Monarch theater, Calgary, on Aug. 7 for a week's run, instead of at the Allen, as originally planned. Ben Kronk is manager of both houses. Manager W. J. Allen of the Monarch theater has also booked these pictures for an early showing.

The La Salle Musical Comedy Company has left the Lyric theater, Calgary, and a straight picture policy is now in force.

Moving pictures of the uncapping of Canada's first really big oil well, which has just come in, about fifty miles south of Calgary, were taken by Mr. Errington of the Empress theater, and shown in that house the following week.

VANCOUVER.

Statistics recently issued by the Saskatchewan Board of Censors show that in the past ten months that body has examined a total of 5,913 reels, of which 227 reels were rejected absolutely as unfit for exhibition, while portions regarded as objectionable were eliminated from 155 other reels. Among scenes to which the censors have taken exception were those showing drunkenness, gambling, domestic infidelity, indecency, murder, suicide, insanity, burglary (where the actual theft is shown) and cruelty.

Francis Holley, director of the bureau of commercial economics of Washington, D. C., spent two or three days in Victoria this week. "The moving pictures of the industrial scenes of British Columbia which are being shown at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco," said Mr. Holley, "are the best I ever witnessed.

The Rex theater, of Rossland, B. C., recently featured three reels of Pathe Weekly on a single program. During another week Manager Prest showed three changes of Famous Players features.

H. L. Gage, manager of the Rex theater, Regina, Sask., is reported to be doing especially well with "The Diamond from the Sky."

On the evening of Aug. 3, under the auspices of Vancouver Lodge No. 888, Loyal Order of Moose, two short illustrated lectures were given in conjunction with the regular Orpheum show, dealing with Mooseheart, the Moose home and school, by Dr. Edward Morrell, vocational director of the institution.

Manager H. Quatliotti of the Colonial theater recently furnished a concrete example of the value of advertising. He was running, as usual, two weeklies (one American and one British) in conjunction with his program, and instead of "featuring a feature," played up the war items in the weeklies by enumerating the subjects on a large cloth stand in the front of the Colonial lobby. As a result, he had the lobby packed with people waiting for the second show. This plan has been used several times since, with good results.

STATE NORMAL SHOWING FEATURES.

The following letter was received last week at the Detroit office of the World: Sometime ago the Moving Picture World said that a Minusa gold fibre screen had been installed in a lecture room of the Michigan State Normal College at Ypsilanti. It should have said that Geoffrey Jefferson has installed a 12 by 16 foot Minusa gold fibre screen in the new Pease auditorium of the college. The building cost $150,000 and seats 1,965 people. Two Power 6A machines have also been installed and photoplays are being shown. A five-piece orchestra furnishes the music. Big features are shown. The college has been running the shows, but Mr. Geoffrey Jefferson was appointed to look after the photoplay work for them. The college simply wants to give the best possible—and the cheapest—amusement for students that is obtainable. Ypsilanti is only a small town, about an hour's ride from Detroit.

LYNCHBURG, VA.

Lynchburg, Va., Aug. 14.—The National theater, one of the biggest and newest houses in Lynchburg, is now under the management of Lewis Holt, a Lynchburg man, and controlled by O. B. Barker, head of the Barker-Jennings Hardware Company. The theater was taken by the courts from M. L. Hoffheimer, of Richmond, who leased the house and has been operated since this action by Mr. Barker under Holt's personal direction. Mutual Masterpictures are being shown at the National.

The straight picture program which has been presented during the heated term at the Trenton theater will be abandoned by Manager Trent on Aug. 16 to make way for the opening of the vaudeville season.

Negro Clergymen at Atlantic City Trying to Stop Exhibition of "Birth of a Nation"—City Authorities at Odds and the New Nixon Theater Continues Showing the Big Subject.

By Philadelphia News Service Correspondent Moving Picture World.

SENTIMENT is running high in Atlantic City, due to the exhibition of the film drama entitled "Birth of a Nation." More than one hundred negro clergymen have made burning appeals to officials of the city by the sea to use their influence in an effort to have the exhibiting of the film suppressed.

The production, which has been shown for several weeks at the New Nixon theater, a boardwalk playhouse owned and conducted by Philadelphia interests, deals with reconstruction times in the South and the Klu Klux Klan.

Acting under instructions from the City Commission, Director of Public Safety William H. Bartlett recently ordered the exhibition of the film brought to an end, but the motion picture people, backed by an opinion of City Solicitor Schimpf that Bartlett is without power to act in the case, have continued showing the drama and are prepared to fight the case to the finish.

Folks residing in Atlantic City are awaiting the outcome of the contest with remarkable interest due to the fact that the colored population have threatened to use force in causing the exhibitions of the picture to be discontinued.

HILDINGER, BISHOP & LAMONT EXTENDING.

Owing to a rapidly increasing business connecting Trenton and nearby towns, the moving picture firm of Hildinger, Bishop & Lamont has found it necessary to establish larger quarters. The firm for the past several years has been located on the first floor of the Alcazar building, on Factory street, where all of the rapidly expanding film trade was transacted. Now the company may be found at 135 East Hanover street, where it has a complete building affording more commodious quarters for all concerned.

In the new building all members of the firm, as well as employes filling important positions, have separate offices. The building has been newly furnished with office furniture and appliances and has been rewired for the installation of an indirect lighting system. Business is being transacted in numerous towns surrounding Trenton, including Princeton, Lambertville, Pennington, Hopewell and Bristol, Pa.

WARREN ASH DROWNED.

While swimming with George W. Terwilliger, director of the Lubin Company, Mrs. Terwilliger, and J. Allen Boone, Warren Ash, chauffeur for the Lubin Company of Philadelphia, was drowned recently while bathing on the Second Beach at Newport.

Ash, who was a powerful swimmer, was some distance from shore when seized with violent cramps. Before disappearing from view he called loudly for help, but there was no one within reasonable distance excepting Mrs. Terwilliger, who was herself in distress. Mr. Boone, hearing the cries of Ash and Mrs. Terwilliger, went to the assistance of the director's wife and finally brought her ashore after the greatest of difficulties.

C. B. LITTLE BUYS WEBER HOUSE.

H. R. Weber, who is known to thousands of Chambersburg folks because of his successful operation of the Star theater, Lincoln Way East, Chambersburg, Pa., has retired from the moving picture business in that place and has sold his establishment to Calvin B. Little, who has taken possession.

Mr. Little is a native of Chambersburg and prospered in business in Canada and Buffalo, N. Y. He owned the bakery on East Main street which is now known as the Chambersburg Baking Company. Later he bought and improved the Fulton House in McConnellsburg, which place he sold while negotiating for the Star theater.

PENNSYLVANIA HAPPENINGS.

B. N. Hofelich, well known moving picture exhibitor, has recently opened his new theater in Mahoney City, Pa. The new establishment is known as the Elk theater and is one of the most beautiful theaters in eastern Pennsylvania. Mr. Hofelich purchased practically his entire equipment from the Calehuff Supply Company of 1301 Race street, Philadelphia, including two No. 6A machines, a Wagner converter, frames and general equipment.

The Model theater, 423-25 South street, has been sold by Philip H. Doerie to Isaac Deutch and I. Gotlop, subject to a mortgage of $75,000.

Hildinger & LaMonte, proprietors of several moving picture theaters in Trenton, N. J., recently awarded the contract for the construction of the new Bijou theater, corner of South Clinton and Chestnut avenues, to James Morris and Fred Parker, both Trenton contractors. The new theater is to be finished by November 15 next and will cost in the neighborhood of $20,000. The plans for the structure were drawn by Frederick Slack, well known architect of that place.

T. W. Williams, proprietor of the Roman theater, Pittston, Pa., has recently made extensive improvements to his establishment including considerable new equipment such as machines and frames.

Doctor C. P. Henry, city physician of Reading, Pa., is about to start on an inspection of all moving picture establishments in that locality. Upon completing his task he will make a detailed report of conditions found to be existing in amusement places in the home of the pretzel.

LONG PINE (NEB.) HAS NEW HOUSE.

Eugene A. Upstill has leased the theater now under construction at Long Pine, Neb. The building, which will be 48 by 100 feet, will be finished November 1.

STILL FIGHTING FOR FIGHT FILMS

Both Sides File More Briefs in Contest Over Admission of Havana Negatives.

By John P. Flannagan, Bangor (Me.) Correspondent.

MORE briefs have been filed by United States District Attorney John E. A. Merrill for the government and by the exhibition company with Judge Clarence Hale regarding the refusal of Collector Willis T. Emmons to allow the negatives of the Johnson-Willard fight at Havana to go through the custom house from Canada.

The government urges that the statutory prohibition of such films applies whether the exhibitions are made in a hall or at a club, which must equally be regarded as "public exhibitions." The attorneys for the exhibition company say that in their present form the negatives could not be used for public exhibitions. The government insists that the making of the film is the first step in giving a public exhibition and that, once in possession of the film, there would no difficulty in producing positives from the negatives.

NEW THEATER FOR PORTLAND.

The Elm Theater Corporation was formed in Portland recently. It will erect a modern ground floor house to seat 1,400. The capital stock is $10,000, with shares of $100 each. The officers are: William S. Wolf, president and treasurer; John T. Fagan, clerk; Hiram Wolf, Joseph H. Wolf and William S. Wolf, all of Portland, directors.

Work will start at once on the erection of the theater, which will be thoroughly fireproof. The spot selected is admirable for a playhouse, located opposite the old Clapp houses and not a minute's walk from Congress street.

BUSINESS GOOD IN AROOSTOOK.

S. Schultz, representative of the Alliance Film Corporation in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, and a former exhibitor in Aroostook county, has just returned from a tour through that county, which itself is larger than the state of Massachusetts, and reports a remarkable business. Mr. Schultz says that there is a demand for high-class features which have plenty of action and are not too "high brow" as he expresses it—dramatizations of popular books are best, he says.

The Star theater, Millinocket, owned by J. Ferland, has contracted for one Alliance feature a week, commencing Aug. 16, and other theaters to contract for this service are the Pastime, at Brownville, and Chic at Milo, owned by Paul Peakes.

AROUND THE PINE TREE STATE.

A new theater, known as Leger's theater, and owned by A. St. Leger, was opened at Pittsfield, Me., on Aug. 14. It is one of the finest in the state, especially in regard to its stage decorations of fireproof artificial flowers. These are scattered all around the screen, and on each side of the stage. The ventilation is ideal and the situation of the theater leaves nothing to be desired. It will have an elevated floor and will seat about 1,600. Mr. St. Leger will use Alliance service, starting the opening week.

Following an illness of six months, Mrs. James O'Brien, wife of the manager of the Empire theater, Lewiston, Me., died at her home on College street last week.

Henry H. Moores has succeeded H. P. Townsend as manager of the Opera House at Woodland, Me. Mr. Moores is using General and Tinker-Phoenix service with good results.

An innovation in Maine moving picture circles is "profit sharing night," introduced at Music Hall, Lewiston. Friday night is thus designated, and souvenirs valued at $50 are distributed.

S. E. Wing, proprietor of the Star theater, Fairfield, has taken on General service, four nights a week, through Manager A. L. Ehrgott of Bangor.

The Pastime theater, at Davidson, which has been closed since July 1, has just opened, using General Film service.

Reports from Maine moving picture houses this week are to the effect that good business is still being enjoyed, and the present summer will probably go down in history as one of the best since the first rush of five years ago.

Rumors that cannot be confirmed at this writing have it that "The Birth of a Nation" is to be engaged by the Swimming Club at Bar Harbor, composed entirely of very wealthy people, and will be exhibited at a Bar Harbor theater one night privately to the club members, for which the club is to pay $1,000. It is understood that the owner will have the free use of the film in the afternoon for the use of his theater.

The Strand theater at Old Town is using the Alliance feature program two days in the week. In Hancock county, theaters now using the Alliance features are the Star, at Bar Harbor, Joseph Emery, proprietor; Bijou theater, at Ellsworth, and in other parts of Maine, Park theater, Dexter, F. D. Young, proprietor; and Graphic, Bangor, John Burns, proprietor.

NEW HOUSE FOR OREGON CITY.

Architect Aaron H. Gould of Portland has been commissioned by Charles Schram, present owner of the Grand theater, Oregon City, to prepare plans and specifications for a theater to be erected on the site of the old one. The size of the new building will be 48x110 and its cost will approximate $17,000. The class of construction has not yet been decided upon, but the building will be entirely fireproof and equipped with all modern appliances. The seating capacity will be 650.

THERE'S A REASON.

Second-run features in first-class houses were at first frowned upon by the staid exhibitors of Portland, but now many of them have fallen into line and there is a general demand for this class of shows. There's a reason. The advertising these features get during their first appearance seems to have a lasting effect upon the theatergoers and second runs have proved to be wonderful money-getters with very little outlay for publicity.

OREGON NOTES.

The It theater, Medford, Ore., was sold recently by W. J. Albert to Kay & Cook. It will be operated hereafter under the name of the Empire. Mr. Cook was formerly a road man for the World Film Corporation and Mr. Kay was formerly a resident of Ancortes, Wash.

B. J. Callahan, Critic theater, Seaside, Ore., reports a new theater about to open at that summer resort.

PORTLAND BREVITIES.

Arthur Kane, years ago connected with the General Film Company and more lately with the Eclectic, spent a few days in Portland passing the good word among the exchange men.

Mrs. S. B. Jay, of the American Photo Player Company's San Francisco office, passed through Portland on her way from New York. It is rumored that Mrs. Jay has her eye on one of the Southern Oregon theaters which she intends to buy for the company.

John Tompkins, of Kalama, Wash., was a visitor at the Service Film Company recently. Mr. Tompkins is totally blind. He has a team and wagon and moving picture outfit and exhibits films in the small towns in Southern Washington. Mr. Tompkins' fourteen-year-old son operates the machine and the blind man lectures on the subject being shown. He is always well received wherever he shows.

Willard Jones, Flavel, Ore., was a recent visitor in Portland. He is collecting equipment for his theater in Flavel.

A. W. Goff, district manager of V-L-S-E, with headquarters in San Francisco, spent a few days in Portland.

Lee Matlock, Pastime theater, Pendleton, Ore., was a visitor at the General Film Company's office. He reports business in Eastern Oregon very good.

The Standard Feature Film Company, F. M. Simonton, recently acquired 25 Charles Chaplin subjects from the Exclusive Features, Inc., of New York City.

MICHIGAN.

The Strand, at Battle Creek, was booked to open with pictures Aug. 12.

The Idea theater, on Monroe avenue, in Grand Rapids, has let the contract for a new front.

A motion picture show giving performances Saturday and Sunday nights has been opened in Fischer's Hall, at Frankenmuth.

E. N. Brown, the Grand Rapids exhibitor, has had plans drawn for another motion picture theater, one-story brick and tile, 38x90, at Fourth street and Stocking avenue.

Louis Richards has sold the Lyric theater, at Houghton, to George Lampero, and will engage in the photoplay business elsewhere in the copper country.

Censor Storm Breaks

Portland (Oregon) Film Men Lock Horns with Censor Board—Publicity Campaign Against Ordinance Inaugurated—Aid of Chamber of Commerce Sought—Mayor Hopes That Body Will Not Interfere.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE expected break between the municipal censor board and the Portland film men, the culmination of a feeling which has existed between them during the five months of the operation of the present censorship ordinance, has finally occurred and exchangemen and exhibitors have taken their grievances to the public by means of the Portland press. The break has become a regular storm in Oregon's film center. Exchangemen and exhibitors have organized to combat the censorship which they believe has overstepped sane bounds.

Just what precipitated the fight is not entirely clear. J. R. Cummock, of the People's Amusement Company, says it was the fact that the censor board held up the Eastland disaster pictures, which were billed to go on at his theater at 11 o'clock, until after 5 p. m., permitting a film of identical scenes, but under another brand to run at the Majestic during those hours, while other Eastland pictures were exhibited at the Columbia for a time without any permit at all. Edwin James of the Majestic says the straw that broke the camel's back was the barring of the "Cup of Chance," which had been permitted to run in Seattle and San Francisco and other real businesslike cities, after he had papered the town and arranged for his advertising.

Mayor H. R. Albee, who is also head of the department of public safety, of which Mrs. Colwell's office is a part, when interviewed by the writer upon the protest against the actions of the censorship board and the censorship ordinance voiced by the film men through the newspapers, discussed the city's side of the controversy very frankly.

"The basis of the protest against the existing ordinance is its seemingly no-appeal character," said Mayor Albee. "But the ordinance does provide for an appeal. The films are first exhibited to viewers; if the viewers do not pass them, there is an appeal to the censor board proper. We could, of course, create appeal boards ad infinitum. When the present ordinance was suggested for passage Mr. James and other film men expressed themselves as satisfied with it and with Mrs. Colwell as secretary of the new board.

"The accusations of unfairness made by the film men in the newspapers are refuted by the figures showing the work of the censor board during the five months of its operation under the new ordinance. Of the 2,003 pictures and 3,538 reels viewed, there were but 12 pictures condemned and 148 eliminations ordered. In cases of doubt I have requested Mrs. Colwell to give the picture men the benefit of that doubt, which she advises me she has always done.

"I sincerely hope the Portland Chamber of Commerce will not lend its support to this agitation against the present moving picture situation. I believe it has been incited by two or three individuals, and I do not think it is such a public issue that should be entitled to the support of our commercial bodies. The commission desires the co-operation of our motion picture interests and it is the purpose of our censor board to co-operate with and not to combat those interests."

Mrs. Colwell States Her Attitude.

Mrs. Colwell, in stating her views on the situation to the writer, said, as did Mayor Albee, that she considered the ordinance appealable and that the censor board of seven members was really a board of appeal.

"The agitation seems to be directed entirely toward me," says Mrs. Colwell. "And I am accused of dominating the board because a great deal of the censorship work has fallen to me. The accusations appearing against me in the newspapers are unfair and untrue, and if this agitation causes me to lose my position I will leave the office with a clear conscience and with a feeling that I have treated the film men a lot fairer than the circumstances have required.

"The members of the censorship board and the women who voluntarily serve as viewers are all people of refinement. Our experience has shown us that it requires people of refinement to be motion picture censors; patrolmen on the police force lack that sense of refinement necessary to motion picture viewers."

"News to Me," Says Metzger.

Apropos of the statement by Mayor Albee and Mrs. Colwell that there is a board of appeals, G. A. Metzger, general manager of the Film Supply Company of Oregon, said:

"That's news to me. We have never recognized any censorship board except the board of seven members of which Mrs. Colwell is the secretary. We have never recognized the forty odd women who serve as 'viewers' as any kind of a censor board and when a 'viewer' advises that she cannot pass a film we do not consider it an appeal to call in the regular censor board. The ordinance cannot be construed that way. The 'viewers' merely have those powers that the parent body, the censor board, delegates to them. There is therefore no appeal provided in Portland's censorship. We want both a board of censors and an appeal board appointed by the city commissioners."

Chamber of Commerce Aid Sought.

That matter has been taken up with the Portland Chamber of Commerce, and a committee of picture men will meet with a committee, of which S. D. Vincent is the head, from the Chamber and a draft of what the film men consider a fair ordinance will be laid before the trade body. Many of the women's clubs in the city have directly and indirectly signified that they are opposed to the present censorship policy and have pledged their aid to the film men in their fight.

"A sane censorship with the right of appeal," is the film men's slogan.

CENSOR BOARD REPORTS.

The report of the censor board for July, recently compiled, shows that the board viewed 351 subjects comprising 663 reels during the month and that four pictures were condemned and thirty-six eliminations ordered. At the reading of the report Sol Baum initiated a motion, which was carried, that the exhibitors be again given notice by registered letter that films passed under the old ordinance must be reconsidered by the board, Mr. Baum's motion being to the notice and not to the construction of the ordinance, which is clear on this point.

CALIFORNIA JOTTINGS.

William Tamblyn, of Nevada City, Cal., has added a new Simplex projection machine to the equipment of his theater.

Articles of incorporation of the Film Producers, Inc., have been filed at Los Angeles, with a capital stock of $1,000,000 by R. E. Nathansohn, H. A. Parker, F. C. Hill, A. Levy, G. J. Smeby, G. C. Watson and M. Brooks.

Howard Clark, a moving picture operator of Oakland, Cal., suffered the loss of his right eye recently when the carbon in his machine exploded and a piece struck him.

Five Houses in One Block

That Will Be the Situation in Cincinnati When Intended Building Is Completed —M. A. Neff Advises Exhibitors to Go Slow in Voting on the Referendum— Proposal to Establish Exchange for Handling School Films.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspo ndent Moving Picture World.

THE scarcity and the resulting value of first-class locations for moving picture theaters in the downtown district of Cincinnati, not to mention the suburbs, was never better illustrated than in the latest Fifth street deal involving a picture house. That in connection with the construction of a handsome new house in the block between Vine and Elm was recently referred to, and showed in itself not only the desirability of the block, but the high value of the property used for this purpose. The new deal, however, concerns the property now occupied by the Sun theater, at present the nearest to Vine street of the four theaters on the block.

I. Frankel, one of the leading moving picture magnates of the city, by virtue of his interest in the Sun and other houses, holds a lease on the building in which the theater is located, which does not expire until January 1, 1920. The three upper floors of the building are unoccupied.

These floors have been leased by Frank W. Huss and Thomas A. Riley, associates of Mr. Frankel, and they have also entered into an agreement to take a ten-year lease on the part of the building occupied by the theater beginning on January 1, 1920, thus extending the lease on the entire building to January 1, 1930. While the exact terms have not been given out, it is understood that after 1920, under the terms of the agreement entered into, the property will pay a net return of 5 per cent at a valuation of $5,000 per foot; and it is thirty feet in width. It is also intimated, largely on the strength of the long-time arrangements referred to, that the lessees are planning to construct a moving picture theater on the property which will compare favorably with any in the city, and will give this block five handsome houses—the Colonial, the Lubin, the Alhambra, the Sun, and the new house to be built by Charles Schaengold. It is hardly necessary to point out that arrangements of such permanence as these prove strikingly the far from ephemeral character of the business, as well as its firm financial foundation.

M. A. NEFF ADVISES EXHIBITORS.

The wide interest excited by the proposed referendum on the amendments to the Ohio moving picture censorship law, and misunderstandings which are said to exist as to the effect of the referendum, have led M. A. Neff, former president of the national exhibitors' league, to break into print on the subject. In a recent letter to a Cincinnati paper Mr. Neff pointed out in vigorous language that in his opinion the exhibitors have nothing whatever to gain by the referendum. He states that the repeal of the new sections of the law, which are all that are involved in the referendum, would mean a restoration simply of the old conditions, under which the exhibitor alone was held legally responsible for the exhibition of uncensored films.

Mr. Neff believes that many exhibitors are favoring the referendum under the impression that it will have the effect, if successful, of removing the board of censors entirely, but he points out that this is not the case. It is a fact, however, that many exhibitors favor the referendum and are working for it with a full understanding of its limited effect at this time, but in the belief that it will be the entering wedge for the ultimate elimination of the State board; and it is also true that many of the public take the same view. A paper at Lima, O., has been running a contest, with cash prizes, offered for the best letters on the general subject of moving picture censorship, and elicited a wide difference of opinion, with decided views on both sides of the question. Curiously enough, however, there has been comparatively little interest taken in the referendum campaign in Cincinnati, the really warm part of the fight being confined to the smaller cities and towns.

CINCINNATI IN NEWS FILM.

Cincinnati is to be one of the score of leading cities which will participate in the production and exhibition of the new national news series of pictures to be distributed by the World Film Corporation, according to a recent announcement in the Cincinnati Enquirer, which is the paper which will co-operate in the plan here.

EXCHANGE FOR FREE FILM.

The spread of free moving pictures, both educational and purely for amusement, especially in connection with their exhibition in the schools, has had the logical result of a proposal for the establishment at Columbus, under the supervision of the State department of public instruction, of an exchange to handle films intended for free exhibition by schools or other local authorities. As far as now outlined, the plan contemplates only that the department shall act as a sort of clearing house for the sale and purchase of film.

It is understood that if the proposal meets with the approval which is looked for an exchange may be arranged by which the department may be able to exercise a fuller initiative in securing films proper for school and other free exhibition, especially along educational lines, and in facilitating their distribution to and use by the proper persons. The success which has attended the national collegiate organization handling educational and industrial films, of which the University of Cincinnati is a member, is pointed to as showing the entire practicability of a similar plan for operation within State limits. The matter will be taken up with local school authorities in September. Exhibitors, naturally, have not been consulted in this connection, but they are probably doing a good deal of thinking on the subject.

LOCAL PICTURES POPULAR.

Either Dayton people have not had the opportunity of seeing as much of their city in moving pictures as they like, or they are a remarkably patriotic lot, as far as their own town is concerned. At any rate, all reports from the Gem City agree that the two Dayton pictures recently taken have drawn better in Dayton houses than any of the dramatic features, which is saying a good deal. One, "The Maid of the Miami," a "local" drama of the usual sort, has gone remarkably well, as heretofore reported, at prices higher than usual, and showed last week at the Victoria at the reduced figure of 5 cents to big crowds.

A newer picture, taking in industrial and business concerns of the city, under the name of "The Heart of Dayton," in 3,600 feet, as a part of the World company's "Famous Factories" series, seems to be making even more of a hit, possibly on account of its direct appeal to Dayton pride. It is stated that on Saturday of last week, when it was first shown at the Lyric, it was seen by 9,712 persons, while the total for Saturday and Sunday was over 16,000. Other local houses, including the Mecca, the Elite, the Comique, the Muse-U, the Lakeside and the South Park, are showing the picture this week, with excellent results; and Urbana and Franklin, Ohio, have made requests for bookings, which have been promptly complied with. In a word, Dayton as a moving picture star seems to be doing very well.

THEATER IMPROVEMENTS.

The Lyric theater, at Urbana, has been purchased by Grant Wooley, and will hereafter be managed by Elmer Fritz, a theatrical man of wide experience. Mrs. Snodgrass, the former manager, will remain with the house as pianist. Manager Fritz announces that he has made arrangements to secure the Paramount service shortly, and in connection with his plans will remodel the house completely, with a new front, installing an incline and other improvements.

The Exhibit, of Portsmouth, Ohio, is rejoicing in an excellent job of remodeling and redecorating, which the management believes will pay for itself in several ways. The retinting of the ceiling and walls add much to its attractiveness, which should help some in drawing patronage, while the room has been lengthened, giving additional seating capacity, which speaks for itself.

EXHIBITORS AIDING MINERS.

Carroll Behymer, proprietor of the Ariel airdome, at 2923 Eastern avenue, Cincinnati, with the co-operation of the Mutual and Pathe exchanges, did a good turn for the distressed coal miners in the Hocking Valley on Wednesday evening of last week, joining the honor roll of exhibitors who have given all or a part of their receipts to that cause. The exchanges gave the films used that evening, and Dr. Behymer gave all of the proceeds, less expenses, for the use of the miners. Extremely threatening weather hurt attendance somewhat, but that has been so much the regular thing this summer that a good audience turned out.

ST. LOUIS THEATERS ROBBED.

The Royal theater, 1629 Market street, was entered by robbers from the rear, on Saturday, August 7, between midnight and 10 o'clock Sunday morning. John Karzin, proprietor and manager of the Royal, came to the theater and found the knob of the safe that is kept in the office of the theater had been broken off, but the door of the safe had not been opened. There were several hundred dollars in the safe, including the receipts from Saturday afternoon and night. Nothing else was disturbed in the house, but the safe was ruined, even though the burglars did not get the money.

Herman Milestone, manager of the airdome at Eighteenth street and Chouteau avenue, reported to the police on August 10 that all the musical instruments belonging to his orchestra except the bass drum, which was nailed to the floor, had disappeared. Earlier in the day a man giving his name as Walter Brown had been arrested in a pawnshop when trying to pawn a number of musical instruments, including a snaredrum, tambourine, cymbals and other orchestral appurtenances that he carried. He said he had bought the things six months ago, but as no one of his name or description could be found at the address he gave he was held. Milestone identified the instruments.

DETROIT DOESN'T NEED AIRDOMES.

There are no airdomes in the City of Straits. Nearly every year someone has built one, but none of them ever proved successful. The reason is that it is not sufficiently hot in Detroit to justify people sitting in the open air when the modern theater has ventilating and cooling devices giving a temperature no greater than that on the streets. In fact, the newest theaters are even cooler than the streets. Another thing, the weather in Detroit is too changeable. Seldom is there a spell of extreme warm weather lasting more than several days. Otherwise the evenings are exceedingly cool.

BREVITIES FROM SPOKANE.

C. A. Clegg, of the Universal Company, Instituting Changes in Western Offices—Swanson & Nolan to Build in Butte.

By S. Clark Patchin.

C. A. Clegg, of New York City, special representative of the Universal Film Company, is making a business and inspection tour of the branches of the company in the Northwest. He spent a week in Spokane in conference with G. A. Hager, manager of the local branch, which is the Film Supply Company.

Previous to coming here he held a conference in Butte with G. A. Metzger of the Portland office and H. T. Nolan of the Denver office relative to some important changes in the territory which connects Spokane with Butte and makes them both release offices, while heretofore Spokane has been a branch of the Portland and Seattle offices of the company. It will be a buying office effective August 23 and on September 1 the office will move to more commodious quarters at First avenue and Washington street. It is now situated in the Arthur D. Jones building on Lincoln street and Main avenue. The move was decided on during the visit of Mr. Clegg.

Mr. Clegg is visiting branch offices of the Universal in Washington, Oregon, Montana, Nevada, Wyoming, South Dakota and Colorado. He said: "I am finding the film business good in practically all the sections and there is a good demand for the Broadway productions of the company. The new arrangement in Spokane and Butte will be an advantage for these sections and give them better service."

James McConahey, manager of the Best Show, has just closed a contract with P. L. Carroll, local representative for the Pathe company for the past several months, for the Pathe service to supplement the service he has been running, which has been a mixed service, with occasionally some Pathe films. He will start immediately with "Who Pays," which will be run in addition to the other releases. He will also run the Pathe news service with the Pacific Coast edition and will show cartoon comedies from the Bray studios. Mr. McConahey contemplates trying daily changes for a time.

William H. Swanson of New York City and H. T. Nolan of Denver have closed a contract for a picture house to be constructed on Park street, Butte, to cost $250,000, including equipment, according to word received in Spokane. The projected new picture house is to have a seating capacity of 3,000 and will be modern in every respect, including machines, decorations, seats and other equipment. These men are now interested in thirteen other picture houses in Montana, Colorado, Wyoming and Utah. They have three houses in Salt Lake.

George Buzzell, of Moscow, Idaho, spent a couple of days in Spokane on a business trip. While here he reported that he will build a new picture theater in Moscow to seat 450 persons.

J. W. Bertleson, of the Casino theater, reports that Betty Nansen in "Should a Mother Tell," a William Fox release, has been one of his best drawing cards. He also announces that changing from a mixed program to features has been a good move from a box office standpoint.

E. Clarke Walker of the Pantages theater has just signed a contract for a Keystone comedy, two reel service, to run with his vaudeville program.

Sarah Truax, recent star in "The Garden of Allah," who is the wife of Charles S. Albert, local counsel for the Great Northern Railway Company, has gone to Los Angeles to appear in D. W. Griffith productions.

Lee S. Forbes of the Class A theater showed William S. Hart in "The Darkening Trail," as his first Mutual picture on trial this week. It is drawing good. Mr. Hart is a favorite here since his appearance in "On the Night Stage."

National Purifiers Refuted

Oakland Citizens Deny Charges That Undesirable Characters Frequent the Theaters of Their City—Original Power Projector Attracting Much Attention at San Francisco Exposition—San Francisco and California News.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent Moving Picture World.

DURING the past few weeks several so-called purity societies have held national meetings at San Francisco, and practically all of these have gone out of their way to take a fling at moving pictures, screen artists or the manner in which moving picture theaters are conducted. A member of the National Purity Congress started the attacks on moving pictures when he made the statement that screen artists made no pretenses of being virtuous, and each succeeding body has had something to add along this line.

At the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science held at Berkeley this week the imputation was made that in cities where there was no segregated district for unfortunate women the moving picture theaters were overrun with these undesirable patrons who went there to meet those looking for their company, the city of Oakland being pointed out as an example. Moving picture men in that city hotly denied that such was the case, and many of the leading public men in the East Bay community took their side of the question.

Dr. Susan J. Fenton, past president of the Child's Welfare League and a prominent social worker, said: "Bosh and nonsense. There are as many of these women to be found in moving picture theaters anywhere as there are in Oakland. I do not think the statement is true."

Mrs. Helen Swett Artieda, secretary of the Public Welfare League, said: "There have been no complaints from moving picture theaters and the arrests that are being made are not being made at these places of amusement."

Mayor John L. Davie disagrees with Acting Chief of Police Petersen, who made the report before the association, and declares that any word against the purity of Oakland's moving picture houses is a slander on the city. He said: "Anyone who cares to look about will find that the moving picture theaters are patronized by Oakland's best and most respectable families. The class of people who frequent the moving picture houses here is as good as in any other city of the country."

"THE CLANSMAN" STOPPED

The presentation of the Griffith masterpiece, "The Clansman," at the Macdonough theater at Oakland, Cal., was stopped on the evening of August 9 by order of Mayor John L. Davie. When this picture was released the colored population of the trans-bay city protested against its being shown there, but in vain. Since the original presentation there has been a change in city administration, and the new officials took a different view of the production than their predecessors did.

It is charged the exhibition of the film is a violation of city ordinance 815, in that it tends to corrupt public morals. A misunderstanding as to whether certain parts of the picture should be eliminated or whether the show should be closed resulted in the arrest of F. A. Giesea, manager of the theater, and Operator John Ford. This was not only the second engagement of this production in Oakland, but the second week of the final engagement and just why the Mayor should have delayed in suppressing it if it did not please his fancy is not apparent.

ORIGINAL MACHINE ATTRACTS ATTENTION.

The first motion picture projection machine designed and made by Nicholas Power, and which saw much service in several New York houses when the industry was in its infancy, arrived recently at the Power booth at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition and has attracted much attention from exhibitors and the general public. This machine weighs but nine pounds, as compared with the latest model, which weighs 250 pounds, and is a pigmy in comparison. On the original model the film is placed at the top and tied with a string, there is no automatic shutter and no lower magazine, a bag being used to catch the film, which is afterward rewound on the machine. The machine is being preserved as a valuable relic and was brought to the Coast in Wells Fargo & Co.'s "valuable wagon," rather than being intrusted to the regular service.

NORTH BEACH HOUSE CHANGES HANDS.

The Washington Square theater, the largest moving picture house in the North Beach district of San Francisco, with a seating capacity of fifteen hundred, has been taken over by Sam Gordon, who already has heavy interests in that section, controlling the Broadway and Liberty, in addition to the Lincoln theater in another part of the city. The change in the ownership of this house will doubtless have a marked effect on business conditions there in that it will tend to make permanent the policies recently adopted by exhibitors on North Beach. After a long and disastrous siege of price cutting, during which extremely long programs were featured at a very low admission price, the owners of the six houses operating in that district have come to an agreement whereby not more than four reels of pictures will be shown for 5 cents. In case any of the members see fit to break this arrangement the others have agreed to give admissions to all of their houses for the price of one. Conditions here promise to change for the better at once, with the friendly feeling now prevailing among exhibitors and ruinous competition brought to an end.

PENNANT CRAZE STRIKES THE CITY.

Since the opening of the exposition the demand for pennants of all kinds has been greatly on the increase here, and many exhibitors have taken advantage of the interest in these souvenirs to give them away on certain days to stimulate business. To meet this popular demand Davis Brothers have just brought out an interesting Charlie Chaplin felt pennant, six by three inches in size, with a picture of this screen favorite on one side. The convenient size of this pennant enables it to be worn on the lapel of a coat and it is offered at a price sufficiently low to permit of its being given out in quantities.

GOLDEN GATE NOTES.

The Cozy theater on Fillmore street has been re-opened by F. Skibo, who formerly conducted a dance hall on Pacific street.

Al. Lichtman, of New York, has been here during the past week, making his headquarters with the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc.

W. G. Warren, of Tonopah, Nev., has been here for some time attending the exposition trap-shooting contests, and incidentally annexing some of the valuable prizes offered. He is one of the leading exhibitors in that famous mining camp.

The Board of Education of San Francisco has purchased a Power Cameragraph No. 6A for use in the Polytechnic High School, the purchase being made from G. A. Metcalfe.

Davis Brothers are now handling all the mounted posters for the William Fox Film Corporation, the local branch of this concern having given up the mounting of advertising matter. This supply house is also handling the Big Four mounted posters on a large scale.

Use Films in Charity Work

Mercy Hospital in Kansas City Employing Pictures of Its Crippled Children in Order to Raise Money to Build Them a Larger Home—Exchangemen Meet—Labor Union to Build Theater.

By Kansas City News Service, Correspondents Moving Picture World.

DR. KATHERINE RICHARDSON, head of Mercy Hospital, explained to a large audience at the Tenth Street theater the night of August 6 just how Mercy Hospital saves the littles ones of Kansas City and other cities, while before them on the screen passed scenes enacted in the hospital. Mercy Hospital is now campaigning for a fund to build a new and larger home. It is maintained by charity in Kansas City and only children are taken care of there that have no means of paying for scientific medical treatment. Porter Graves, principal of the Manual Training High School at Kansas City, is secretary of the campaign for $200,000, which will be used for the new building and also a maintenance fund.

The film is being booked in all the theaters in Kansas City by the Advertising Film Company, and the film company gets 50 per cent. of the proceeds and the hospital 50 per cent. After it has been shown in the Kansas City theaters it will be sent to those in the surrounding towns. Three and four single reel pictures are being shown in connection with it.

Long lines of crippled little children, waiting for their turn at the institution's clinic; long rows of little beds with oftentimes too many occupants by far; surgical operations and treatments—all these things are shown that Mercy Hospital and its mission may be known to the public. "For eighteen years I've been trying to get people to visit Mercy Hospital," said Doctor Richardson. "At last we decided to have the pictures taken in order to bring Mercy Hospital to the people. We are not showing these pictures because we think they are pretty. One look at the crowded rooms should convince one of that. But we are showing them that you may see and help us in the fight to save the little ones."

The hospital program consists of two reels—the reel of the "Pied Piper Pageant" given recently on the lawn of the W. S. Dickey home, which shows the children of the healthy, happy homes of Kansas City at play; and the reel of Mercy Hospital, showing the institution with its countless lessons and morals. The two are sharply contrasted, and the beauty of each is only surpassed by the great educational lessons which the films teach.

KANSAS CITY EXCHANGEMEN MEET.

The Exchange Men's Association of Kansas City met at an informal luncheon at the Valerius Cafe August 12. After the luncheon the various committees made reports on their investigations. It was said that the charge of 10 cents a reel for censoring the films was working well and paying the exchanges for this trouble. At the same time no show in the State of Kansas had yet to close because of the direct charge on them. However, a great number of them are contemplating increasing the rates of admission to their shows. The meeting was almost entirely a social one and no new questions of vital importance were discussed. At the first meeting of the association it was found that the managers of the various exchanges were almost total strangers to the other managers and the opportunity made many friendships between them.

UNIONS TO BUILD THEATER.

The labor unions all over the country have more or less indorsed moving pictures, but the allied unions at Hiawatha, Kan., are the first to establish and operate a moving picture show on the co-operative plan. They now have a building fund of $400 and the work will soon begin on the new theater. The unions believe that this will open up a source of revenue for them, and at the same time help to bring the people to a better understanding of their cause. The theater will be patronized by the union men of that city. The men operating the show and the machine will all of course belong to the union and all will receive union wages.

WICHITA TO HAVE BIG HOUSE.

The Southwestern Amusement Company, having in its directorate such men as L. M. Crawford, of Topeka, Kan., Arthur Pauline of Wichita, Warren E. Brown of Augusta, and others well known in financial circles, has begun the erection of a large theater at Wichita. The building contract calls for an expenditure of $78,000. It will be the largest and finest theater in Kansas. The frontage will be 115 feet.

NOTES.

R. W. J. Bettis, is a new man on the road for the Picture Playhouse. Mr. Bettis has had a great deal of experience in this territory and has been sending in some good bookings on his first week out according to the company.

C. A. ("Kid") Nichols, is now selling pictures on the road for the George Kleine Company. He is traveling the Southern Missouri and Northern Arkansas territory. "Kid" Nichols was formerly a member of the celebrated baseball battery for the Boston Nationals years ago—the Nichols and Bennett battery. Mr. Nichols and Joe Tinker built the Diamond theater at Fifteenth and Prospect several years ago, when Nichols declared himself to be through with baseball.

Announcement has been made that A. Juda, manager of the Grand theater at Kansas City, one of the best playhouses here, will open the theater September 1 with a high class program of moving pictures. This takes away one more of the Kansas City playhouses.

W. F. Lynch, special representative for the Essanay company, was in Kansas City recently and spent several days at the V-L-S-E office. Mr. Lynch says that business has shown a good increase during the past month and that he is sure it will do much better as soon as the censorship is a little older.

E. H. Wachter recently joined the traveling force of the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Wachter has had a wide experience in the business.

C. L. Hull, special representative for the Selig Company, was in the city recently visting Manager Pearson at the V-L-S-E office. He says business has been very satisfactory everywhere he has been.

William Parsons recently joined the staff of the World Film Corporation here in the capacity of assistant to Manager Max Levey.

C. A. Jones, traveler for the Mutual Film Company, has announced his intention of joining the sales force of the Metro Film Company.

G. E. Akers, traveler for the Mutual Film Company, says he will join that of the Kansas City Feature Film Company.

Miss Pearl White has sent word that she will spend a brief vacation with her parents at Springfield, Mo. Miss White, star of the well known "Perils of Pauline" and "Exploits of Elaine" stories, is traveling overland in an automobile. A public reception at one of the moving picture theaters in Springfield has been planned for her.

The Heer Dry Goods Company, which is building a large department store in Springfield, Mo., will open September 15. The company will have a moving picture show for display of fashions and general advertising purposes on the sixth floor of the big building.

Improvements representing an expenditure of $3,500 or $4,000 are to be made in the Jefferson theater at Springfield, Mo., according to an announcement made by S E. Wilhoit, manager of the theater. One of the principal renovations will be increasing of the seating capacity from 1,200 to 2,000. Among the remodeling features will be the removal of the two large iron columns which support the roof from the top. They will be replaced by iron girders which will be hid from view. The theater will have a lobby space of 13 feet wide and 46 feet long.

Negotiations are expected to be completed within the next ten days whereby the lower floor of the Elk's arcade at Springfield, Mo., will be leased to a company which will establish a moving picture theater in the space. Approximately $6,000 will be expended in repairing the lower floor to meet the requirements of the hall.

The Iris theater at Caney, Kan., was recently opened by Mr. Temple.

G. A. Helm is busy in White City, Kan., putting in a new show.

Chenney and Baker, moving picture men, have announced that they will open a show at Milan, Kan., in the near future.

CLARION FEATURE COMPANY TO MAKE PHOTOPLAYS.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

THE Clarion Features Company, Inc., with headquarters in the Keystone Bank building, Pittsburgh, at present engaged in the manufacture of industrial and domestic films and stereopticon slides, is about to launch into the photoplay field. The company has established its studios and plant at Bellevue, a suburb, and the enterprise is said to be the largest of its kind in western Pennsylvania. The new work will be under the supervision of Arthur W. Bamford, president of the concern, whose entire career has been devoted to theatrical producing, managing and acting. Mr. Bamford has been identified closely with the film industry from its inception. Heretofore the Clarion Features Company has confined itself to producing educational films and achieved considerable success in turning out work on Government contracts. In his latest undertaking Mr. Bamford is supported by a strong board of directors, made up of prominent business men of this and other cities.

TWO ERIE PICTURE THEATERS DONATE HALF RECEIPTS.

The Victoria and Venice theaters, State street, Erie, Pa., aided the sufferers in the disastrous flood that swept that town recently, by giving one-half of their net receipts last Friday, Saturday and Sunday to the relief fund. Pictures of the Erie flood, 500 feet of film, were shown in addition to the usual good bill. Manager Jack pronounces the flood films particularly fine, and says he wants to help the good cause of relief through their exhibition.

PITTSBURGH.

The Liberty Film Renting Company of Pittburgh reports that they have received a copy of "The Man Who Vanished."

The Industrial & Domestic Company studio of Pittsburgh is working overtime on a copy of the United States Steel Corporation film exhibit, showing at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Most of the original film was made in the Smoky City by the same company.

The Metropolitan Booking Offices of Pittsburgh report a most satisfactory line of bookings on their new Chaplin comedies.

Messrs. Friedberg & Adler of the Alhambra theater in East Liberty, Pittsburgh, are putting up an elaborate and expensive electric sign in front of their house. It is in the shape of an eagle and at night will give an effect of flapping wings which should prove very attractive.

The Keystone theater, Natrona, Pa., has been sold by John Hafner to a company composed of Natrona people, who will take over the house in the near future.

The Star theater, Arnold, Pa., has been sold by George Kyros, who will now be able to devote his undivided attention to his Colonial theater at New Kensington. The new owner of the Star is George Barreau, who assumed charge at once.

Paul Qualtrough, formerly of the General Film Company, Pittsburgh, is now acting as traveling ambassador for the local office of the Picture Playhouse Film Company.

The Metro Pictures Service, 212 Fourth avenue, has demonstrated in a striking manner the increasing trend toward big features everywhere. The small town exhibitors are beginning to take on Metro service more generally. Last week Cresson Smith, road man for the Metro, placed the service in Franklin, O., a town of 3,500, and also in Mechanicsburg, O., which has only 1,600 inhabitants.

Manager Davis, of the Pittsburgh Metro offices, recently paid a short visit to Cleveland, Dayton, Hamilton and Newark, O., to close some important deals.

E. S. Porter, who purchased the Dawson Opera House, Dawson, Pa., several months ago, has installed a Wurlitzer Orchestra Piano, Style C. Both films and music have been now raised to a standard that Mr. Porter says is giving him the patronage of many Dawson people who formerly went to theaters at the larger towns of Uniontown or Connellsville, nearby.

A new theater, The White, has been opened at Meyersdale, Pa. The house is modern and complete and is showing a high grade of pictures.

An open-air moving picture theater has been opened recently at Oakford Park, situated between Jeannette and Greensburg, Pa. The enterprise is being operated by the traction company, on whose line the park is located.

Pete Demas, proprietor of the Minerva theater, 319 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, is spending several weeks' vacation at Atlantic City. Sam Fazzizo is acting as manager during Mr. Demas' absence.

The Utopian theater, Sheffield, Pa., has heightened its prestige in that place by the installation recently of a Wurlitzer Orchestra Piano, Style CX. George Frank, the owner, states that business is good and welcomes the increase in patronage of late.

CHANGES IN HARRISBURG THEATERS.

Official confirmation of the previously reported plan of the Wilmer, Vincent & Appell interests to make important changes in the methods of operation of the three largest theaters in Harrisburg, was recently given out by C. Floyd Hopkins, local manager, who announced that for the coming season the "legitimate" will hold forth at the Orpheum theater, formerly a vaudeville house; vaudeville at the Majestic, which has been the home of the "legitimate," and high class moving pictures at the Colonial theater, formerly d voted to both vaudeville and moving pictures. Coupled with the announcement was the statement that Herman V. Yeager, who for years had been the leader of the orchestra in the Orpheum tneater, ill preside at the new Moller organ which is being installed in the Colonial theater.

LIBERTY FILM CO. CLOSES CLEVELAND OFFICE.

The Liberty Film Renting Company, of Pittsburgh, will hereafter handle all of its Ohio business from the home office, having closed its Cleveland branch. The films were removed to this city last week. Manager Mayer Silverman states that many good subjects are open for bookings in the Ohio district, and they will be released as soon as the censors given them the "once over."

Dallas to Have Censors

Control of Subjects in Texas City Theaters Will Be Lodged in Appellate Body of Seven Rather Than One—City Commission Takes Question from Welfare Board.

By S. G. Parker, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE censorship bug is again in prominence in Dallas. Saturday, August 7, the Board of Public Welfare met in the Municipal Building, with about a hundred visitors present. The film exchanges were represented by Messrs. Depinet, Hudson, Peter, Russell, Reed, Byrd, Meade, Hill, Levison, Dembow, Peebles and Lowe. The exhibitors were represented by Messrs. Lewis, Blissinger, Nevills, and Jorgenson.

The proposed ordinance was read, among its features being "a censor shall be appointed by the Mayor from the applicants nominated by the Board of Public Welfare. The censor may condemn and prohibit a film, etc., and if the exhibitor thinks that he has been unjustly treated by the condemnation of the production, he may appeal to the Censor Board of Appeals, to consist of three people, from applicants nominated by the Board of Public Welfare."

Judge McCormack, a member of the Welfare Board, then introduced a substitute recommendation, in which he asked that inasmuch as "censorship is a war measure" and it should be treated as such, that no action be taken with reference to censorship of motion pictures, leaving the matter to the mothers and fathers to censor pictures for their children, etc. He did not secure a second to his motion, although he made a very brilliant talk against censorship of any nature.

The Rev. J. Frank Smith, a local minister, prominent in fights against the picture shows, then arose to tell why censorship was needed. In his talk, he said he had visited a theater at the manager's request, with other pastors, to view a picture that was to be shown later. He said that he talked with another preacher when they were leaving the theater. The other pastor thought the picture was simply "rotten." Mr. Smith said: "And I really thought the picture was a very fine one."

Judge MaCormack then arose and said, "Here is an instance where two preachers saw the same picture, one with the opinion that it was good and the other that it was rotten, and yet Dr. Smith asks for censorship to be left in the hands of any one or half dozen person, for our city of 130,000 people."

The different film men urged that the standard for pictures in Dallas be the standard of the National Board of Censorship at New York, and that their rulings be accepted.

Mayor Lindsley said that when Orrin G. Cocks, Advisory Secretary of the National Board, was in Dallas during May, in the talk he and Cocks had regarding the question of censorship, Cocks advised that they have a local board, and even went into the question of the personnel of that body. Cocks said that there were oftentimes when the National Board and the producers were at "outs" and that during that time the producers would not submit film for review. He said also that there were many productions that while they might be good to be shown in some towns, in others, they should not be shown, and that some pictures were permissible in the North, while they should not be shown in the South, and vice versa. Mayor Lindsley said that Cocks told him that the National Board was very lenient in using its stamp of approval on film, and that local sentiment should govern the use of various productions, etc.

Mr. Babcock, the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, recited the facts concerning the amount of business done by the exchanges and supply concerns in Dallas, comparing it with other business lines. He said that to hamper the film business in Dallas, the center of the Southwest, by local ordinances was a grave action, indeed. He said the Chamber of Commerce had seen fit to do what it could to help make the film business better, and that the city might do likewise. He said it was a mistaken idea altogether that the majority of the patrons at Dallas picture shows were children. He said the managers had told him the percentage was about 80 per cent. grown-ups and 20 per cent. children.

Mr. Scott, chairman of the Welfare Board, suggested changes making the ordinance as follows:

The standard of the local board shall be that of the National Board of Censorship, with any particular provisions that may be necessary to fit local conditions.

Instead of the censor-inspector condemning and prohibiting a picture, this individual may ask the theater manager to refrain from showing it, and if he persists in so doing the censor-inspector may appeal to the three members that constitute the Board of Appeals. If they say the picture cannot be shown then it is final.

The film men are glad that the "one-person" censorship has been done away with in the ordinance. The Welfare Board recommended the ordinance to the City Commission.

Later word from Dallas is to the effect that vital alterations in the proposed ordinance aimed at censorship of moving pictures have been made by the Board of City Commissioners. Censorship of pictures has been taken from direct control of the Board of Public Welfare and lodged in the City Commission.

The board of appeals, to which the censor of motion pictures will report—or rather the inspector, as the name censor may be changed—will be increased in number from three to seven members. The ordinance provided originally that the members of the board of appeals should be appointed by the Mayor from names submitted by the Welfare Board. As the ordinance has been amended, the Mayor will make the appointments subject to confirmation by the Commission, without suggestions from the Welfare Board, and the appeals body will be answerable direct to the Commissioners. This change is regarded as a complete victory for the moving picture men. Mayor Lindsley said he could not tell when the ordinance would be finally passed.

ST. LOUIS' LAFAYETTE UNDER A. W. WARNER.

A. D. Rauschkalb, who assumed management of the Lafayette theater, at Lafayette and Jefferson avenues, and the Russell Garden two months ago, has resigned, and his place has been taken by A. W. Warner, the son of S. Warner, proprietor of the Lafayette. Young Warner formerly managed the property when his father, who has been ill for several months, was first forced to quit work. Warner senior is one of the pioneer exhibitors in St. Louis, and under his management the Lafayette theater and the Russel Garden, where the program is transferred in the hot weather, was built up into one of the most popular places in town. A. W. Warner says that his father is about to undergo a second operation, which it is hoped will result in his restoration to active amusement circles in a few weeks.

The New Strand is rapidly nearing completion in Denver, Colorado. The management of this theater has announced its intention of entering the field with only the very best pictures, and has, at this early date, contracted for the principal future releases, notably the "Kleine-Edison Attractions."

Change License Method

In Illinois, the Bloomington City Authorities Have Changed Their Plan for Calculating License Fees for Picture Theaters—Will Take Account of Seating Capacity and Not of Admission Price—New Schedule of Fees.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BLOOMINGTON CITY legislators changed their minds and made seating capacity and not admission fees the basis of the new license ordinance. Theater men will play as follows: Where the seating capacity is 200 or less, $60 per year, more than 200 and less than 1,200, $60 per year plus an additional $15 for every 100 seats or fraction thereof in excess of 200 seats; 1,200 or more, $200 per year.

SHOWMANSHIP CLOSE-UPS.

The Gem, at Edwardsville, in emphasizing the value of its time table tells patrons: "You wouldn't start to read a book in the middle, would you?" Antone and Walter Padavic of the Gem and Savoy theaters, at Quincy, have given a season ticket to the children of the Detention Home. Glenn Reynolds had a good quartet to mark the second anniversary of the Princess, at De Kalb. A special feature every night is the new policy at the Olympia, at Tuscola. A tailor in Belvidere, gives tickets for the Majestic to boys and girls who take parents' or friends' clothes to his shop. A combination of snap shots of local persons and a baby show contest was a recent stunt of the Playhouse at Staunton. The two-reel Vitagraph "The Red Stephano" was featured two days at the Orpheum, in Rockford, as Charles C. Lofquist, the author, is a resident of that city. The Lyric, at Hoopeston, is giving its patrons travel certificates with tickets. Chaplin contests were conducted by the Palace, at Aurora, and the Grand, at Morris. "Jane Eyre" was shown at the Apollo, in Ottawa, and the entire proceeds given to the Red Cross Eastland relief fund.

The overcrowding of motion picture theaters is receiving attention from municipal officials in Illinois. The Majestic, at Streator, was warned against continuing to sell more tickets than its seating capacity. The commissioner of public health and safety in Marseilles served notice on two exhibitors who had overcrowded houses during Eastland disaster picture shows.

TRYING TO GET G. A. R. UP OVER "BIRTH OF A NATION."

A state-wide fight on "The Birth of a Nation" is urged by Col. J. M. Snyder, of Canton, Ill., who is department commander of the Grand Army of the Republic in Illinois. Three reasons are offered for its suppression, one of which is that it is not fair to the Union soldiers.

A copy of a resolution passed by a Chicago post has been sent to every post in Illinois with a request from the state commander that a similar resolution be adopted. The resolution is as follows:

"The George H. Thomas Post, No. 5, Department of Illinois, G. A. R., protests against the exhibition called 'The Birth of a Nation.'

"First. Because it contains slanderous representations as to the soldiers who fought to preserve the Union, and caricatures the history of the war.

"Second. It represents the infamous Ku Klux Klan as a society of patriotic and chivalrous men.

"Third. Its whole influence is to excite and intensify hatred of the negro race and to perpetuate sectional bitterness."

ODD FELLOWS NIGHTS.

Odd Fellows nights at motion picture theaters throughout Illinois are planned by the state organization. A 1,000-foot film has just been made at the Odd Fellows' Orphan Home, at Lincoln, and life at that institution will be demonstrated to the Illinois members.

APPLE GROWERS MAKE FILMS.

Senator H. M. Dunlap, of Savoy, a big applegrower, took a reel of pictures showing his extensive orcharding operations to the meeting of the International Apple Shippers' Association, at Chicago. He was not alone, as W. B. Douglass, of Trevlac, Ind., and J. J. Castellini, of Cincinnati, also had some interesting apple films.

ILLINOIS JOTTINGS.

Announcement has just been made by Charles Quiggle, assistant manager of the Elite theater, in Waukegan, and Miss Fannie Connell, of that city, that they were married April 14.

Acceding to requests from patrons, the Princess theater, at Canton, cancelled its booking of the Eastland disaster films.

Colored people in Alton, who were appointed to censor "The Nigger," deemed the picture just as discrediting to the white race as to the black and made no recommendation that it be forbidden.

George K. Spoor's boyhood haunts, the Big Dead River bottoms near Kaukegan, are to furnish the setting for a big lumber camp picture to be made by the Essanay Company. A big raft of lumber was towed to the scene and construction of nine buildings was started.

Manager C. H. McIntire and operator Lyman Moore, of the Amuse-U, at Carbondale, were burned in a film fire. The doors automatically closed the operating room and Moore was almost stifled before he was rescued by McIntire. Four reels of film were destroyed and two saved.

The Palace theater, at Rockford, reopened Aug. 16.

James Wingfield has taken a lease on the Chatterton Opera house, at Springfield.

E. J. Henderson and Earl Underbrink have opened a motion picture show in Literberry.

"Reelplay's Corporation," of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000. The incorporators are: Theodore P. Murphy, N. C. Lochemes and Eugene H. Goodrich.

The motion picture theater at Latham has been closed.

J. I. Davis has opened a motion picture show in the opera house at Oakford.

H. M. Goodrich, of Roberts, has opened a motion picture show at Buckley, operating two nights a week.

M. McDonnell has opened his new motion picture show in South Pekin.

Gerald Scully and Harry Elsaas have opened the Garden theater in the old Coliseum, at Harvey.

"Graustark," the Essanay production, is credited with making a new single day business record at Dreamland, in Kewanee.

Charles Fox is in charge of the Haish theater, at De Kalb, which has opened with vaudeville and motion pictures.

W. M. Doake and D. M. Primm, of the Bon Feature Company, of Springfield, were at Jacksonville, where they made a local romance for the Scott theater and the Chamber of Commerce.

The motion picture airdome which was constructed at Ottawa by Edward Ball, of Centralia, and ran for only three nights, has been torn down. Ball disappeared and left no address.

The Polram Motograph Bureau, of Chicago, has been furnishing the picture shows at Grace M. E. Church in Elgin while the pastor is absent. E. C. Leffingwell, with his travel pictures, is booked for the church Sept. 2 and 3.

R. V. Mallory, formerly manager of the Empress theater, in Decatur, has been made manager of the Orpheum, at Champaign.

Business men in Somonauk are giving free out-of-door motion picture shows on Saturday nights.

The Columbus Theater Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000. The incorporators are: Nathan Ascher, Max Ascher and Lewis F. Jacobson.

The Vitagraph "Sins of the Mothers" played a return date at the Illinois theater in Rock Island.

Free motion picture shows and band concerts are being given on the streets at Minier every Saturday night.

Huffman & Phillips have named their new theater at Delavan the Colonial.

The Auditorium, at Galesburg, which has been playing some pictures, has been taken over by O. T. Johnson, and will be devoted to theatrical attractions.

Manager Levine has opened the Washington theater (the rebuilt Coliseum) at Chicago Heights. It seats 800. The front on West End avenue is of white tile, and the Otto boulevard entrance is of stucco with tile trimmings. The walls are done in old gold, rose and white, and the ceiling in cream, olive and gold. A $9,000 orchestrion is a feature.

The De Luxe theater, in the Beidler building, at Mt. Pulaski, has succumbed to lack of patronage.

The Oakland Square Theatre Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $40,000. The incorporators are: Nathan Asher, Max Asher and Louis F. Jacobson.

Manager Will Olson fixes Thanksgiving Day as the opening date for the to-be-constructed Orpheum theater in Galesburg.

R. F. Gabbert has given up the management of the Amuse-U theater, at Carbondale, and returned to Springfield. Proprietor McIntire is now in charge.

Jackson Brothers have opened the Bushnell airdome, at Bushnell, for its eighth season, unseasonable weather causing a delay. They are running the serial "The Diamond from the Sky" and Paramount and Mutual Masterpictures.

F. A. and F. T. Braley are erecting a new building at Harvey which will house a motion picture theater.

AVOIDING SOUVENIRS IN ST. LOUIS.

PAUL STEFFEN, manager of the Mackland theater, 5415 Arsenal street, has made a valuable discovery in regard to souvenirs and other attendance-enlargers that is worthy of passing on to other exhibitors. He has found that souvenirs in the shape of glassware is very expensive, as anything worth giving will cost not less than 30 cents a dozen, and by the time the breakage is figured and the tendency of small boys to appropriate a piece or two occasionally, when the attendant is looking the other way, there is no profit left. The attendant himself is an item of expense, but absolutely necessary in the giving of souvenirs. Mr. Steffen, after trying all sorts of inducements to get "more" people (for he really has a very good average attendance) into his place, is giving out coupons on certain dull nights, which are redeemable in trading stamps on certain other nights. So many coupons, so many stamps. There is no waste or breakage to be considered in giving trading stamps. This is the second summer that the Mackland has remained open all the season. Before that the theater had closed for the hot months or had been transferred to an airdome. But Mr. Steffen's house is in a strictly residential community and when his neighbors get into the habit of going somewhere else to see a show, it takes several weeks to get back to normal when the theater opens in the fall

Referendum Warming Up

Attorney of Cleveland Exhibitors Exchanges Letters with Ohio's Governor—Executive Declares Films Should Be Censored Solely with View to Public Welfare—Lins Freed on Sunday Charge.

By J. D. Raridan, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BY exchange of letters, Governor Frank B. Willis has become involved in a discussion of the movement launched in Cleveland by the Motion Picture Referendum Leage to put to a vote this fall the state law providing moving picture censorship by an Ohio board.

Attorney B. J. Sawyer, president of the Cleveland exhibitors' league and chairman of the referendum division, received from Governor Willis an answer to a communication in which Mr. Sawyer asserted the slogan of the Willis campaign, "Let the people rule," was being violated under the administration. Mr. Sawyer charged politics had a part in the conduct of the affairs of the board, and denied the truth of a statement reported in newspapers to have been issued by the censors.

Upon receipt of the governor's reply, Mr. Sawyer sent the governor another letter, inclosing an affidavit to the effect that the movement for a referendum originated with the exhibitors in Cleveland, and denying statements attributed to the board that the movement was promulgated by the national board of censors and by exchangemen. Governor Willis, in the letter received by Mr. Sawyer, said he "certainly did not approve of any statement that has been issued by any department of the state government if it is not true."

"In order that this matter may be brought to the attention of the state board of film censors," continues the governor's letter, "I am taking the liberty of transmitting your letter directly to the chairman of the board. I also agree with you that politics ought not to enter into the conduct of the affairs of the board and my own opinion is that it does not enter into the work of the present board. In my judgment films ought to be censored solely with a view to the public welfare and not with reference to political considerations."

LINS FREED ON SUNDAY CHARGE.

Exhibitors at Ashtabula are continuing their fight on a Sunday closing order promulgated by the city officials. A jury in the police court acquitted A. A. Lins, proprietor of the Airdome, of violating the law in a second trial. Lins was arrested and fined, but demanded retrial by jury. Lins contributed the receipts of his Sunday shows to a charity organization and claimed this as exemption, in view of the fact he did not operate his theater for profit.

Affidavits were filed in police court against Ward Johnson of the Casto theater, A. A. Lins of the Airdome, John Freeman of the Lyric and George Smith of the C-It. When Lins demanded a jury trial, Police Judge Parker, Solicitor Shaylor and Attorneys Starkey and Dunlavey for the exhibitors, drew a panel of twenty names for the jury. In the drawing the names of B. S. Bliss, safety director, and Samuel Clint, policeman, were suggested but stricken because Bliss had instructed police to arrest the exhibitors and Clint helped make the arrests.

The exhibitors pressed their threat that if theaters were to be closed on Sunday all other places of business must also be regulated in such manner under the "blue sky laws." Private detectives were engaged and evidence secured against cigar stores, park stands, confectioneries and others, to be used if the city persists in its attitude against the theaters.

FOUR MORE CLEVELAND HOUSES

Four more moving picture theaters will be added to Cleveland's list of nearly 200 by construction this fall. Theodore Schmitt, architect, has concluded a ninety-nine-year lease on property at the southeast corner of Detroit avenue and West 116th street, taking title from John Kling. Mr. Schmitt will erect an $80,000 block, to contain besides the theater a dance hall, eight stores and office suites on the second floor. Mr. Schmitt's lease calls for an average rental of $25,000 a year, covering an area 150x200 feet. He has already prepared plans and will start construction at once.

The Thompson-Schactel Company, recently incorporated with C. G. Thompson and S. M. Schactel, of the Victor Film Service as owners, will erect a theater and store building at Altoona avenue and West 35th street, in a rapidly growing section of Brooklyn. The theater is designed to seat 800 people. Seven stores will flank the lobby entrance. The building will cost about $50,000.

Plans have been prepared for a $35,000 theater for W. A. Barnes, to be erected in Hower avenue, near Superior. Bids will be taken soon.

The Yale Realty Company contemplates construction of a $50,000 theater and store block at East 82nd street and St. Clair avenue.

CLEVELAND NOTES.

The Plain Dealer-Duchess theater picture stars, after completing the "Love Chase" and exhibiting the picture at the Duchess theater, Cleveland, organized to school themselves in motion picture lore and within thirty days will incorporate under the laws of Ohio for $10,000. A constitution for the organization was laid before those who made up the "Love Chase" cast at a meeting in the Young Men's Business Club. L. O. Sprosty, president of the club, will handle the affairs of the picture company.

Commencing September 5, Joseph Grossman, manager of the Standard theater, Cleveland, announces one big feature a week will be offered. The Standard previously had three changes a week. It is the first theater in the state to adopt the long run idea.

The Eclipse Amusement Company has leased the Duchess theater, Euclid avenue and East Fifty-seventh street, Cleveland, to the Lee Amusement Company for fifteen years at an average rental of about $11,000. Fred A. Lee, of the Miles vaudeville circuit, is president of the company which will operate the Duchess, and it is understood the policy will include vaudeville and feature films.

C. K. Fauver, receiver for the Metropolitan theater, Cleveland, has received permission to lease the house for three years at an aggregate rental of $25,000. Mr. Fauver told the court he had an opportunity to lease the house to Emmanuel Mandelbaum, president of the company operating the Knickerbocker theater and at the head of a syndicate erecting a theater adjoining the Statler hotel. Upon conclusion of the lease negotiations it is understood Mr. Mandelbaum plans to run pictures at the Metropolitan.

Sam E. Morris, owner of the Home and Crown theaters, Cleveland, has been engaged by the World Film Corporation as manager of the Cleveland exchange. Mr. Morris is a former president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. W. W. Kulp, former manager of the World branch, is now associated with Paul C. Mooney in the branch office of the Fox Film Corporation.

General plans for a recreation pier in Lake Erie at the foot of East Ninth Street, Cleveland, with a moving picture theater and other amusement novelties are to be prepared by the City Architect at the request of Park Commissioner Alber. The auditorium with a seating capacity of 2,000 will be arranged for summer conventions as well as pictures.

The Majestic theater, at Bucyrus, has been sold again. The Bucyrus Amusement Company purchased it about six weeks ago and through the company's board of trustees has transferred the house to Tom Chacopulos.

Fine civic spirit was shown recently by the management of the LaMax theater, at Wilmington, O., when the proceeds of an evening's business were donated to the local Civic League, which needed the money for its summer work. The ladies interested in the league worked hard to get a big crowd for that particular evening, and to good purpose, and their treasury showed substantial improvement in consequence.

AMONG BUFFALO FILM MEN.

By Billy Bison.

A. J. Knortz, manager of the Gem moving picture theater of Honeoye Falls, N. Y., is a stickler for good order at his playhouse, as evidenced by the following notice which he issued recently: "The management of the Gem theater feels called upon to remind its patrons that the house caters to ladies, gentlemen and children, and unless one comes under one of these classes and deports himself or herself with due consideration for the rights of others he will be an unwelcome visitor to the house. Loud talking, boisterous noises, rowdyism tending to create disturbance or riot, will not be tolerated, and the management, while disliking to do so, reserves the right to eject participants indefinitely."

Moving pictures of scenes at Crystal Beach, a summer resort near Buffalo, were shown last week by Manager Moon of the Happy Hour theater in that place.

A Victrola which played classic and popular airs was placed in the lobby of the Strand theater, Buffalo, this week. The purpose was to amuse the crowds waiting their turns in the lobby. For the first half of the week the attraction was Pauline Frederick in "The Eternal City" and for the last half Walker Whiteside in "The Melting Pot." To attract attention to the Pathe picture, "The Bombardment of the Dardanelles," Mr. Edel placed in his lobby a rapid-firing Maxim gun obtained through the courtesy of the Buffalo naval militia. To draw crowds to moving pictures of the Eastland disaster Mr. Edel at the time secured photographs of the tragedy from a local newspaper and placed them in his lobby. E. L. Hyman, assistant manager of the Strand, has returned from his vacation.

The Family theater, Buffalo, which played moving pictures and vaudeville for years, has reopened with Gus Arnold's musical comedy company as a permanent attraction.

Opening of Buffalo's regular dramatic season: Star, P. C. Cornell, manager, "Just Outside the Door," Aug. 26; Teck, John R. Oishei, manager, Walker Whiteside in "The Ragged Messenger."

Harold S. Franklin, representing New York capitalists, has taken over the Lyric theater, Washington street, Buffalo. A new ventilating system, new decorations and 500 additional seats have been added to the house. The policy of the theater will be announced later.

Recent moving picture attractions in Buffalo theaters: Shea's Hippodrome, "The House of a Thousand Candles;" Strand, Fanny Ward in "The Marriage of Kitty;" Palace, "The Girl with the Mask;" Elmwood, "The Boss," in one scene of which Police Chief Regan of Buffalo appears.

George A. Keating, manager of the Jubilee moving picture theater, 1882 Niagara street, Buffalo, issues weekly a neat program, which he terms, "Bulletin of Coming Attractions."

THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE

"THE Battle Cry of Peace" is difficult to describe; impossible to compare. It is difficult to describe because the adjectives that fitly apply to it have, by long misuse, lost their meaning; impossible to compare because in its conception and realization J. Stuart Blackton has shattered all established ideas as to the possibilities of motion pictures.

In every field of achievement progress is made by slow degrees—when of a sudden some genius appears with a big and revolutionary idea.

Before the advent of "The Battle Cry of Peace" motion pictures were a pleasant diversion, a means of recreation; a few sought to teach. Their power as a vast, far-reaching medium of publicity—more encompassing even than the great power of the press—was never realized. J. Stuart Blackton saw this latent power and harnessed it to a great national propaganda.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" will find its way into the history of motion pictures as an epoch-making achievement—in the magnitude of its production, in the novelty of its appeal, in the idea that is behind it.

But—of vastly the greater significance—"The Battle Cry of Peace," as the exponent of a great national idea, will find its way into the history of our nation.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" is a call to arms against war. It is written and produced under the personal supervision of J. Stuart Blackton with acknowledgment to Hudson Maxim for facts contained in "Defenseless America."

During the present month it is being shown at the White House, before Army and Navy organizations, Governors of States and Mayors of the larger cities. It will be released early in September.

"THE MAN TRAIL"

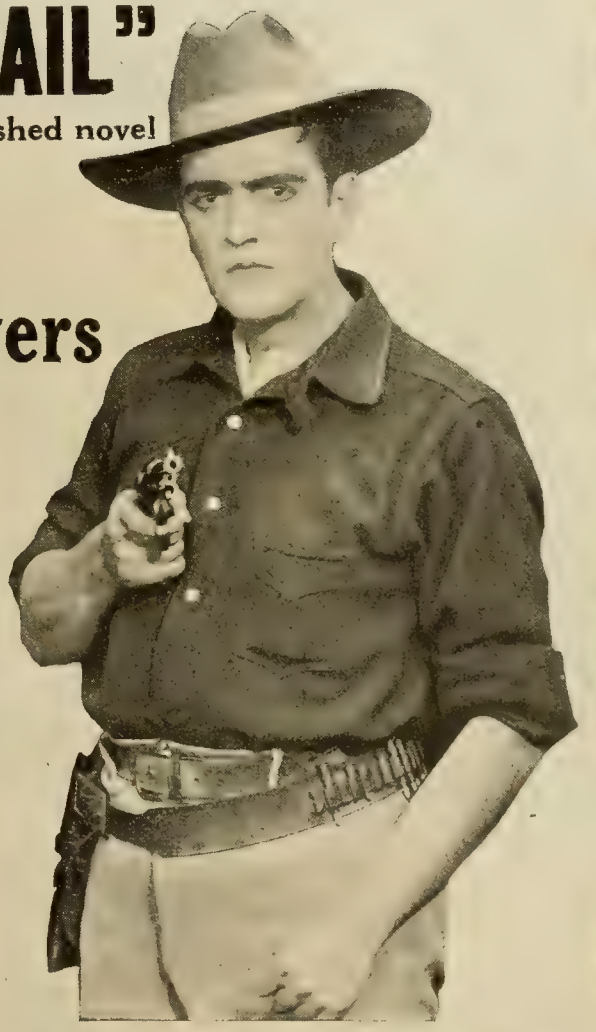
Adapted from the recently published novel

By HENRY OYEN

Featuring

Richard C. Travers

Produced by E. H. Calvert



This is a thrilling red blooded drama of life in the raw.
It deals with the rugged, primitive characters of the logging camps.
It is a story of man battling with man; a fight to the death for supremacy and the love of a maid.
It is a man hunt, a savage, pitiless pursuit to kill, that stirs the blood and thrills every fiber of the human heart.

Crowding in Louisville

Public Policy Committee of City's Commercial Club Has Complained to Mayor Buschemeyer That Local Theaters Are Overcrowding—Says Ordinance Is Not Heeded—Building Inspector Has Sent Letter on Matter.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

COMPLAINTS of overcrowding of moving picture theaters have ben lodged with Mayor John W. Buschemeyer, of Louisville, by the Public Policy Committee of the local Commercial Club. This body stated that it had ben making inquiries which showed that although the situation was covered by ordinance, this ordinance had not been enforced strictly enough to keep chances for danger away. Orders had been issued by the authorities on several occasions, the committee stated, forbidding people to stand in side aisles or other main passageways, but they were not always lived up to. The committee explained its action by saying that it hoped to see the ordinance put into literal enforcement before a serious panic or disaster should occur to awaken the city authorities to their duties. Instances of overcrowding, the committee stated, were to be noted in Louisville motion picture theaters nearly every day.

The Mayor thanked the committee and took the matter under advisemnt. He is expected to make some announcement shortly. W. J. O'Sullivan, city building inspector, under whose department enforcement of the ordinance falls, recently issued a ruling to the theater proprietors on the subject of overcrowding, and the exhibitors have ben paying more attention to the proposition since that time. So far, no overcrowding has been attended by any serious consequences.

BUILDING INSPECTOR WARNS CHURCH FILM SHOWS.

W. J. O'Sullivan, city building inspector of Louisville, has sent out letters to the pastors of the various churches of Louisville, advising them that it is unlawful to give or operate a motion picture show in any building other than those which comply with the regulations relative to fire protection as laid down by the city building code. In connection with lectures and entertainments, films have been shown in several of the churches.

"No moving picture show, where inflammable films are used, may be given in any theater, assembly hall, church or school hall or room unless such place is constructed and equipped according to the requirements of the building code regarding moving picture theaters. Such theaters must be on the ground floor and shall front on a public way. There shall be no means of connection to any other building, nor shall any other business be conducted in such theaters or halls. All exterior walls shall be of some incombustible material. The floor shall be fireproofed or the joists fireproofed. There shall be two five-foot exits in the front and two similar exits in the rear.

"All doors must open outwardly and shall not be locked or bolted while the room is open to the public. Exits shall open directly into the street, alley or courtyard. No aisle shall be less than three feet in width. All seats shall not be less than thirty-two inches from back to back and not less than twenty inches in width. Seats shall be firmly secured to the floor; no camp stools or chairs shall be used in such rooms except chairs fastened together in a manner approved by the building department. There shall be three chemical fire extinguishers of the type approved by the Board of Fire Underwriters, one in the operating booth, one near the curtain, and one near the main entrance.

"All moving picture machines must be in a fireproof booth or compartment, and all machines, booths, and all wiring shall be constructed in conformity with the rules and requirements of the ordinance governing electrical wiring in the city of Louisville The booth shall have a ventilating pipe extending to the outside air and must have the approval of the building department before being used. All such theaters or halls with a seating capacity of 500 or more must be fireproof throughout.

"No movable signs, baby buggies or other obstruction shall be placed in the way of the entrance or exits. All aisles and passageways in said buildings shall be kept free from camp stools, chairs, sofas and other obstructions, and no person other than an employe, policeman or fireman shall be allowed to stand in or occupy any of said aisles or passageways during any performance, service, exhibition, lecture, concert, ball, or any public assemblage. All violators of this ordinance hereafter found will be prosecuted in the manner provided by the building code."

KEITH MAY BUY THE NOVELTY.

A deal is on whereby the Keith interests may acquire the Novelty theater of Louisville, which is owned and operated by the Kentucky Amusement Company. George W. Stockton, formerly of Cleveland, O., has been operating the theater for the past few weeks under a lease granted by the Kentucky company. This lease recently expired and the theater is now being operated by the Kentucky Amusement Company, of which M. Switow is president.

Mr. Switow stated that a partnership agreement, similar to that under which the National theater is being operated by the Keith interests, was under consideration. No deal has been closed as yet, however, as several matters have not been arranged Lee Goldberg, of the local Keith house, confirmed the report that such a deal was under way, but was unable to throw much light on the subject. Mr. Goldberg said that if the deal was consummated all pictures shown at the Novelty would be booked through the United Booking Office's feature picture service department.

The Novelty was erected about five years ago by M. Switow and others, who obtained a long lease on a part of the Parr block. The theater has changed hands several times during the past two or three years, and was operated for about two years by D. Levenson, who returned to Shelbyville, Ind., a few months ago.

PRIZE WINNERS IN INSURANCE FILM CONTEST.

The Life Insurance Educator, the monthly edition of the Insurance Field, a paper published in Louisville, has just announced the winners in its photoplay contest in which several prizes were offered for the best scenarios for motion picture plays on the general theme of insurance. Students of advertising have been profoundly impressed with the possibilities of motion-picture drama to impress on the public the needs and advantages of life insurance. It is proposed to cultivate, stimulate and develop the field by the use of special plays.

The prize winners in this contest were led by Louis M. King, whose play was "The Man Who Missed It." The second prize went to E. E. Kirkpatrick, who wrote "The Love That Never Faileth." The third prize went to Mrs. H. R. Hubbard. Her title was "The Lost World." Fourth prize award went to Hortense Kaufman. Her scenario was entitled "The Mission of John Sunnyside." The fifth prize was given to Earl G. Manning for the play, "A Difference in Legacies." The prizes were all in gold and amounted to $50. Several of these plays will later be produced and used. It is understood, in boosting the insurance business.

HEARD AT THE KEITH OFFICE.

Keith's theater, of Louisville, recently closed its summer moving picture and light vaudeville season, and will remain closed for the next few weeks. The house will be remodeled to some extent, and will open in the fall with vaudeville and moving pictures as usual. James L. Weed, manager of the Keith theater, has relieved Lee L. Goldberg, of the Mary Anderson theater, while the latter is on a two weeks' vacation trip to Chicago. Mr. Weed just returned from a vacation spent at Lake Wawassee, Ind.

Melvin Derber, treasurer of the Mary Anderson theater, the Keith picture house of Louisville, was married on August 18 to Miss Celia Bass. The wedding took place at the Galt House. The young couple will spend two weeks at Baltimore and other Eastern points.

LOUISVILLE BREVITIES.

The Alamo theater, the property of the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, has just completed installation of a new $10,000 Wurlitzer Hope-Jones-Unit orchestra. The new instrument is of the one-man type, and is giving universal satisfaction. Several of the local theaters are now using Wurlitzer instruments. The Alamo theater is also serving iced tea, free of charge, to all patrons of the theater. The Heeken's Tea Company has placed a demonstration stand in the theater, and is handling the proposition. Individual glasses are used.

Henry Peltier, manager of the South End Amusement Company, has returned from a vacation trip to St. Louis, Mo., where he spent two weeks.

Edward Bingham, manager of the Empress Feature Film Company, of Indianapolis, Ind., was recently in Louisville, where he called on a number of the exhibitors.

Oscar Mitchell is in charge of the new moving picture show, which was recently started at Magnolia gardens, Third and Avery streets. Only comedy pictures are being shown at the open air garden, and they are taking very nicely. Fontaine Ferry Park, which also started free pictures recently, is also finding that the pictures are adding to the evening attendances.

The Owl Feature Film Company, of Louisville, reports that it is getting a good deal of business at quite a distance from Louisville. Equipment has recently been sold for installation in two new houses being established by J. C. Jones, one at Canton, Ga., and the other at Andrews, S. C. These two theaters will both have a seating capacity of 200. Other equipment was sold for W. D. Black's new theater at Clarksville, Va., which seats 350 people; a new theater at Vevay, Ind., seating 300 people; R. C. Crantall's Bonita theater, at Summerville, Ky., seating 300 people, and S. P. Sterling at New Salisbury, Ind., who will operate a road show. A good deal of business is also coming in from Tennessee just now, and a strong demand is being experienced for comedy reels.

A. J. Wagner, who recently took over the management of the Germantown airdome, has closed the show for the rest of this season. Mr. Wagner stated that several improvements has to be made, and that the season was so late that it was decided to wait until next year to do anything with the proposition. The airdomes have had a very hard season due to numerous rains. Kentucky has experienced a heavier rainfall this summer than for many, many previous years, and while crop conditions have been excellent, and the outlook for fall business is good, the airdomes have not been the ones to profit by the doings of the weather man.

CABARETS AND THEATER TAXES.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

MOTION picture men and theatrical men of Minneapolis do not think it fair that cabarets are not taxed, inasmuch as they get a certain price per seat and give shows which hurt the legitimate amusement business. The exhibitors want the cabarets taxed or the license fee for photoplay houses reduced.

MINNEAPOLIS GOSSIP.

The Auditorium at the State Reformatory at St. Cloud has been reseated. The following recent motion picture program shows the kind of films popular with the young prisoners. "Mutual Weekly," "Ethel and Bill at the Ball," "Unseen Vengeance," "A Hatful of Trouble" and "The Anglers."

The Grand theater, at Mankato, and the Daily Review, in that city, have taken on the Northwest Weekly service.

The new Majestic theater, at Ellsworth, booked the Dietz "Cameron Dam" pictures for Aug. 15.

The Grand theater, at Mankato, showed films of the auto tour made in that city by presidents of the auto clubs of the twin cities and Gov. Hammond and party.

Green & Strecker, of Edgerton, have purchased the Majestic theater at Worthington from Eugene Smith, of Fulda.

The opera house at Tower was destroyed by fire and the Motion picture show operated by S. Sandberg, of Aurora, was a total loss.

Oliver Whaley, manager of the Rex theater, at Bemidji, has opened another show at Nymore. Orville K. Titus will be in charge of the projection at the new show.

The Princess, at St. Peter, showed motion pictures of local people and scenes which it had made.

Motion pictures demonstrating the manner in which stricken Belgians receive American supplies were shown at the University Club in St. Paul.

O. H. JACOBS BACK HOME.

O. H. Jacobs, of the Jacobs Film Booking Offices, Manhattan building, Milwaukee, on his return from a six weeks' trip in the East announces that he has secured a number of notable film attractions for his company's territory, which includes Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, as well as upper Michigan.

"Silver Threads Among the Gold," with Richard Jose, the famous tenor in the leading role, is one of the big attractions secured, and will be shown to the Milwaukee public sometime in September, at one of the leading downtown theaters, for a week's engagement, after which the picture will be put on tour through the state.

WISCONSIN.

Manager Adler will make Thursday feature night at the New Odler opera house in Marshfield.

Moving pictures were used by W. J. Merrill of the Chicago Tribune to show the Advertisers' Club of Milwaukee how manufacturers co-operated with newspaper advertisers.

August 10 was fixed as the tentative date for the formal opening of the handsome new Grand theater at Green Bay.

F. A. Leavers has sold his half interest in the Neenah theater at Neenah to A. A. Green, his partner.

"The Boss" was shown on Beaver Day at the new Colonial, in Oshkosh under the auspices of Oshkosh United Colony No. 637.

The Crystal theater at Manitowoc has been sold to S. B. Roach.

The Redgranite Theater Company of Redgranite has been incorporated with a capital stock of $7,000. The incorporators are John Piechowskie, John Marshal, L. Decker and Joseph Piechowskie.

J. A. Anderson has sold the Princess theater at Green Bay to Eli Brien of Lena.

Credits Worry Film Men

Washington City Distributors Taking Up Question of Deposit by Exhibitors to Cover Coming Service—Some Theater Men Complain—Showing of "The Battle Cry of Peace."

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent Moving Picture World.

THE matter of credits in this territory is becoming a serious problem with the exchangemen of Washington and is leading them to seek protection by demanding prepayment for service. Some of the exhibitors, it is said, feel that they are being made to undergo a hardship through the adherence of the exchange men to a newly adopted regulation requiring a deposit equal to the amount of from one to three weeks, and in some cases of four weeks' service.

To ascertain the amount of discrimination involved, the World correspondent made a little investigation of his own and found that all of the managers were the custodians more or less of worthless pieces of paper designated as checks for which there is no money in the bank to cover, sent in by exhibitors in payment of rental charges; that it was becoming the custom of these same exchange managers to place upon the bulk of the checks received a rubber stamp imprint "No Protest." It costs considerable in the way of protest fees to find out sometimes that a check is N. G. The writer also ascertained that it was impossible by this means to steer off the exchange man for nearly a week before he is notified by his bank that payment cannot be made.

The manager of a buying office has this to say: "We do not get one dollar's worth of credit from those from whom we buy. All of our material—films, paper, slides, heralds, etc.—come to us C. O. D., and we pay the price before we can get the goods from the express offices. Not only that, but when we pay for films it runs up into hundreds rather than a few dollars as charged for rental. With this before us, if we do not get our money from the exhibitors using our films, where are we going to get funds to meet these C. O. D. payments? But the exhibitors do not care.

"The exhibitor has no credit worries—every person entering his theater pays before he can get by the door—he always gets his money in advance. If he is good pay, he remits for his show on a specified date; if not, we have to worry. It resolves itself into the fact that we must finance the business of the exhibitor for him. To do this in many cases would require an almost unlimited capital. It is to be seen that we stand between two cash propositions—the manufacturer and the exhibitor, both of whom deal in spot cash propositions.

"All of us believe that the average exhibitor is willing to abide by our regulation that a deposit be made in advance as outlined above. Two of the large exchanges already have this plan in operation and seem to have met with few objections on the part of exhibitors. If the finances of an exhibitor are not great enough to meet this requirement, he should look to other sources for funds and in some manner increase his working capital."

AGRICULTURAL FILMS SEEN AT CRANDALL'S THEATER.

During the past week there has been shown at Crandall's theater a number of exceptionally fine films illustrating the activities of the various branches of the United States Department of Agriculture. This is the first time any of these films have been shown in a place of public amusement, and it was only that Mr. Crandall had extended so many courtesies to the Department that he was able to obtain them.

The facilities of the Agricultural Department are not such as to enable the widespread loan of their productions, but it is hoped that at some future period Congress will enact legislation providing funds for the manufacture of additional negatives for commercial use. The films exhibited by Mr. Crandall were highly educational and depicted cattle grazing in the national forests, large forest fires and on Friday and Saturday there was shown the wonders of the National Zoological Park. The various exhibitions were attended by a large number of Government officials, and the pictures were well received by the regular patrons of the house.

MANAGER JOHN KEENAN MARRIES.

Manager John Keenan of the Avenue Grand theater last week took unto himself a mate, the former Miss Julia Speiden of this city. The young couple left for Wilmington, Del., the former home of the bridegroom, after which they will visit Philadelphia, New York and Atlantic City. Mr. Keenan has been managing the Avenue Grand for the past three and a half years and in that time he has made a host of friends.

FILM MEN IN WASHINGTON.

Jake Wells stopped over in Washington last week while on his way to Richmond, Va. From that place he will make a tour of the southern cities where houses in which he is interested are located.

George Karanicholas visited a number of the local exchanges on business connected with his theaters in Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va.

BIG VITAGRAPH SUBJECT SHOWN

Government officials, officers of the United States Army, Navy and Marine Corps and Washington newspaper correspondents last week gathered at the National Press Club to see the first presentation of "The Battle Cry of Peace," written by Commodore J. Stuart Blackton and made by the Vitagraph Company.

ABOUT THE CAPITAL CITY.

The fence and the screen at Scheutzen Park, on Georgia avenue, Northwest, blew down in the storm of last Tuesday night. This damage, however, was quickly repaired and the airdome put in condition to finish out the season.

The heavy rainstorm of Tuesday last did considerable damage in a number of open air theaters in this vicinity as the heavy torrent of rain washed holes in the gravelled walks, overturned settees and did other minor damages. Where the parks are on low ground the water accumulated to quite an extent. Water also entered the lobbies of several of the theaters but this occasioned no loss, although the wind created havoc with the posters.

After viewing the pictures of the Eastland disaster which formed a part of the Keith theater bill on Monday afternoon and evening last, Manager Robbins directed that the picture be eliminated from the program for the remainder of the week. Mr. Robbins took this action because, as he says, the pictures bring out too vividly the horror of the disaster and he does not believe they have a place in a vaudeville entertainment. Several people who had seen the picture stated that they patronize the theaters to be cheered up rather than depressed and, in their belief, morbid pictures should be eliminated from the programs of all theaters.

The Senate theater, on Pennsylvania avenue, Southeast, has been closed.

Films to Help Recruiting

In Ottawa, Canada's Capital City, Recruiting Officer Uses Moving Pictures to Stimulate Patriotism and Advertise Army's Need for Men—Has About 300 Reels of Clear Up-to-Date Pictures—Shows Are Free to All.

By Carl J. Ketchum, Ottawa Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE motion picture was originally conceived as a means of entertainment, has been employed as an educational feature, and as time goes on many a new and unique use has been found for it. It is reported that the ever-efficient German military authorities have been employing it to teach the war game to budding officers, and now the Canadian military men are using it to stimulate patriotism, as expressed in enlistment figures.

Whether Ottawa, the capital, is setting a precedent or not has yet to be learned, but it is safe to predict that recruiting officers in other parts of the Dominion will soon adopt its scheme of using the moving picture to attract recruits. Capt. A. H. Thoburn, well-known recruiting officer of Ottawa, has been the first, as far as can be ascertained, to give this method of advertising for men, a trial. He has secured in the neighborhood of three hundred reels of the best available war pictures, which he is to show on the side wall of his recruiting office. There will be no charge whatever to the public, the pictures to be shown on a great screen where thousands can see them. The machine has been set up in an office of a building on the opposite side of the street and nothing but the most up-to-date and clearest pictures are to be shown.

The attitude of the provincial authorities towards this plan of stirring up patriotism in the men, has been indicated in its decision to grant Capt. Thoburn, of Ottawa, a special free license to show any pictures he may bring here. Moreover, the police who are otherwise very adverse to allowing the operation of any attraction which might in any way interfere with traffic, will not object to the showing of the pictures on the recruiting office wall, providing people do not block the main thoroughfare.

ANOTHER OTTAWA HOUSE.

With the Regent theater costing, with the property, in the neighborhood of $180,000, now under construction, another grand moving picture house is to be opened to Ottawans on September 15. The new theater, situated on Sparks street, the capital's busiest thoroughfare, will cost approximately $60,000.

The building will extend through to Queen street, over property valued higher, at the present time, than nearly any other property in the city. The theater itself, not including the large entrance, will cover one hundred feet by fifty-three feet on Queen street. The entrance will be on Sparks street and will be twenty-five feet wide by ninety feet long—probably the largest lobby in any theater in the city.

The new theater when completed will accommodate fourteen hundred people. It will have a large gallery with about twenty boxes of chairs, and the most comfortable seats on the market are to be secured. The building will be semi-fireproof, constructed of iron, concrete and brick, to be finished in stucco and marble. The interior is to be elaborately decorated and with spacious parlors for ladies and gentlemen's waiting rooms, nothing is to be left undone for the comfort and pleasure of patrons.

The new theater is being constructed by Mr. Benjamin Stapleton, a well-known business man of Ottawa. He will personally take charge upon its completion and will run a program of strictly high-class moving pictures, without vaudeville. He is installing a huge American Master Organ at an expenditure of $15,000, and expects, when his house is completed, that it will rival the very best in the city.

Mr. H. P. Beck, building contractor, is putting up the theater, while the contract for plastering and other finishing work is in the hands of T. H. Kabakov.

QUIMBY GOES TO COAST.

Pathe's Denver Manager to Have Charge of Four Offices—Other Changes.

By Muriel Lee.

F. C. QUIMBY, who, since the first of the year, has been manager of the Pathe Exchange, is to leave in a few days for the Pacific Coast. There he will have charge of the Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles offices. When Mr. Quimby came to Denver there were three people working in the office of the exchange. Now there are seventeen. The offices are so crowded that by September 10 Pathe will be in its new quarters, one feature of which will be a splendidly equipped exhibiting room.

The Triangle has leased spacious office rooms here for an exchange. Definite plans are not as yet made.

Harry Leonhardt, general western representative of the Fox Film Corporation, who is in Denver for a few days, finds a puzzling situation. He says that he has always been at a loss to account for it. He says it is his observation that no matter whether or not a picture is of unusual merit, it will bring approximately the same crowd. Furthermore an exceptional subject will not draw the price that is asked and given in other cities.

The Times, one of the newspapers of Denver, has started a moving picture department. In its work of giving the public unbiased and expert criticism of photoplays it is endeavoring to make the moving picture public more discriminating in its patronage.

The president of the Wurlitzer Manufacturing Company stopped off in Denver last week for a few days to inspect the new Wurlitzer-Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra which has just been installed in the Isis theater. Mr. Wurlitzer was duly proud of this wonderful instrument, and said it fulfilled his every expectation. Mr. and Mrs. Wurlitzer had just returned from a trip through Yellowstone Park.

W. E. Knotts, who has been manager of the World exchange here but two months, has been transferred to San Francisco as general western division manager.

Loew's Empress theater, which belongs to the same concern as the Princess, is drawing big crowds by vaudeville in conjunction with pictures. The Empress is giving a lot for the money, 10 and 20 cents. Denver theatergoers welcome vaudeville, for during the summer no other house has been running it. The Empress theater is under the management of G. H. Greaves and the Princess under that of H. E. Ellison. Both men have been in the picture business in Denver for many years.

TENNESSEE FLASHES.

It is reported that F. H. Dowler, Jr., manager of the Lyric theater, of Chattanooga, is contemplating improvements at the Lyric shortly, which will include a stage, proscenium arch and balcony.

G. L. Frazier, of Montgomery, Ala., has purchased a second-hand Power's machine and other equipment with which to operate a traveling road show, which will travel Tennessee and Alabama.

At Mohawk, Tenn., the United Zinc & Mining Company, has purchased a new Power's 6A machine and other equipment with which to operate a large closed theater for the benefit of the many employes of the large mining company. The theater will have a seating capacity of 600.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

AN industrial picture that probably will take rank among the educational films has been finished at Muscatine, Ia., by the Warren Film Company, of Chicago. The two reels show the pearl button industry from the time the fish are inoculated with the spawn of the mussel or fresh water clam until the buttons are sold over the counter. Shell fishing on the Mississippi and its tributaries is a big industry and the banks of the streams are lined with factories sawing out the buttons. The pearl finds, which have brought big prices to the lucky fishermen, have awakened popular interest in the industry.

One reel of the picture was made at Fairport, Ia., where the United States government maintains a mussel hatchery or biological laboratory. This experimental work is caught by the camera men. The other scenes show the lazy method of "musseling" or fishing, sorting, cutting, polishing and carding the buttons. W. T. Warren, of the Warren Film Company, personally supervised the making of the films, the party travelling aboard his big boat the La Salle.

WHERE AGREEMENT HELPS.

Instead of senseless competition, Ben Baher, of the Majestic, and H. A. Wishard, of the Wishard, at Bloomfield, have decided upon a "Live and let live" policy. The houses will alternate nights, one closing every evening. When there is a special attraction which will leave business for the other both will open. Both will operate on Saturday nights. A 10-cent admission will be secured for the regular shows.

STRICT SUNDAY SHOW RULE.

The City Council at Eldora has passed an ordinance making it illegal to show anything except educational, religious or patriotic motion pictures on Sunday.

"LOCAL" FILM A FLIVVER.

A press report from Denison says: "Sleepy Sam, the Sleuth," the home talent feature film presented at the opera house, proved to be a disappointment to many who had supposed that the characters [illegible] without would be of local talent, but this was not the case. The pictures in reality were taken away from Denison and but a few feet of film was taken of local people and inserted at different places in the picture. That part of the film showing the Denison people was very good, but there was not enough of it to be of much interest."

BRITAIN TO MAKE COMPLETE SET OF WAR FILMS.

American film producers will find interesting the following despatch from the representative of the Candian Press Association in London:

London, Aug. 10.—Under the authority of the war office, arrangements have just been completed for taking a complete moving picture record of events of the war in the British lines, both at the front and along the lines of communication. The leading film producers and exhibitors, it is announced, have been brought into a co-operative scheme, so that no single firm shall have a monopoly of the pictures. The first will begin in about a week. A set will eventually be placed in the British Museum, and the board of education here is expected to co-operate in a plan for the use of the films in English public schools.

PICTURE THEATERS PROSPER.

Neither the war nor the warm weather are having the anticipated effect of decreasing attendances in Ontario. True enough, the legitimate theaters are, with few exceptions, in the dark, but the picture houses everywhere are thriving.

BALTIMORE HAPPENINGS.

Considerable interest is being manifested in "Making a Movie Maid," a beauty and $500 prize scenario contest, operated by the Baltimore News and the Essanay Company. The film will be shown at the various motion picture theaters of the city for not longer than eight weeks, during which time the patrons of these places will have the opportunity of voting for the prettiest or most competent of the twenty-one young women who participated in the production. The picture is the preliminary film to the $500 scenario picture. The young women will be voted upon by numbers which will appear on the screen with each of them, no names being used or announced other than that of the winner at the conclusion of the contest. The voting will be conducted at the several theaters as the patrons leave at the conclusion of each exhibition. The winner of the contest will receive $100 in cash, a round trip ticket to California, with all expenses paid, and the opportunity of appearing in the winning scenario. The film was made by Harry Lewy.

The Patterson theater, on Eastern avenue, near Patterson Park, of which N. J. Ropka is the manager, is being remodeled and enlarged.

Jake Shaab, of the Peabody theater, is said to have been seen on the road leading to Washington in his new automobile. Rumor also has it that Mr. Shaab narrowly escaped having to pay a fine for going over the line into the District without having a Washington license.

L. D. O'Toole, of the Opera House, in Thurmont, and F. L. Smith, of the Opera House in Frederick, were recent visitors to Washington.

The Berman Motion Picture theater, at 913 East Baltimore street, Baltimore, was sold last week by Isaac Berman to the Co-operative Industrial Corporation for $25,000.

Philip Miller expects to open his new theater in Annapolis on or about October 1. Its seating capacity will be about 600. Its construction and equipment is to be of the best and the house bids fair to take its place among the most attractive in the state. Mr. Miller spent several days in Washington last week arranging for a feature service for this theater.

The Royal theater, 1940 West Pratt street, Baltimore, will reopen on September 1 after having been redecorated and additional seats installed. The house will remain under the management of Frank Hornig.

The Mount Royal theater is scheduled for opening on September 15. This house is located at 619 West North avenue. It is to be equipped with all of the latest improvements for the comfort and convenience of its patrons and will have a seating capacity of about five hundred. Arthur B. Price will manage this theater for the Mount Royal Amusement Company.

The Colonial theater will be reopened on September 1, after having been newly decorated and renovated throughout. The house will be conducted as before by Frank Durkee.

NORTH CAROLINA.

In commenting upon the showing of "The Ordeal" at the Piedmont theater in Charlotte, the Observer states that "after a consultation with Assistant Secretary of State Phillips and Manager Goldburg, of the Life Photo Film Corporation, of Washington, Secretary of State Lansing declared that the State Department would not prohibit the exhibition of 'The Ordeal' or entertain any formal complaints against it."

F. C. Carroll is reported to be arranging to purchase and reopen the Palace theater in Clayton.

The Carolina Amusement Company, of Wilmington, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000, of which $500 has already been subscribed. The incorporators are G. C. McIntyre, C. B. Newcomb, and E. P. Hale, all of Wilmington.

Edison Players at the Hub

Prominent Bostonian Gives the Use of His Home to Mrs. Fiske for a Setting in "Vanity Fair," Stipulating Only That He Be Allowed to Portray a Coachman —And His Request Is Granted.

By Edwin H. McClosky, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LOUISBURG SQUARE, in the exclusive and historical Beacon Hill district of Boston, was the scene of eighteenth century festivities during the past week, when a company of Edison players, under the direction of Eugene Nowland, was making a moving picture of Mrs. Fiske in her interpretation of Becky Sharp. The scenario was written by Charles Sumner Williams, Jr., formerly of Boston, and a student at Technology and Harvard. He was a member of the No. 6 Club, which was formerly located in Louisburg square. He had chosen this spot as the best fitted to represent the famous Russell square in London, where the houses of Mr. Sidley of Vanity Fair fame were located.

Henry Hurd, a prominent Bostonian, whose family has lived in Louisburg square for generations, loaned Mr. Nowland the use of two houses in the square to obtain artistic effect. In return, Mr. Hurd stipulated that he be given the part of a coachman. This request was granted to him. It was necessary to have several police officers on the scene to keep a large throng of curious individuals out of the range of the camera.

The picture will be released in September. Among those in the cast besides Mrs. Fiske are Leonie Flugrath, Helen Fulton, Bigelow Cooper, William Wadsworth, Charles Sutton, Mrs. Austin Brown, Richard Tucker and Frank McGlynn.

REPORTED SALE OF "CLANSMAN" RIGHTS.

It has been rumored around Boston that the New England rights to "The Birth of a Nation" have been sold for the sum of $52,000. This sum is probably the largest ever paid for the New England rights to a single moving picture production. Interested persons are said to be Coleman Levin, William Mann of Boston, Samuel D. Kerr of Salem and Louis B. Mayer of Haverhill. It is stated the film will be shown in all New England cities, including Providence, R. I., where it was once rejected. It has been stated that the censoring authorities of that city are now willing to allow the film to be produced there. It will not be even subject to the expurgations which were oruered when it played the Tremont theater, Boston. It closed its Boston run on August 21.

TO SHOW HEALTH FILMS.

Professor Selskar M. Gunn, chief of the publicity bureau of the Massachusetts Health Department and a member of the faculty of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, is preparing for a great moving picture health campaign to be conducted during the coming winter. Two films, telling realistic stories illustrative of hygienic principles, have already been secured and will be exhibited before public and private organizations. A lecturer will explain each picture as it is being projected on the screen. This service is supplied free of charge by the Health Board.

The scenarios to be used are entitled "Bringing It Home" and "In His Father's Footsteps." Each teaches a forceful health lesson, in addition to telling an interesting story, thereby making the lesson more vivid to the observer of the film.

A FAIR EXCHANGE.

Electric cars bearing the sign, "The World in Motion, Hearst-Selig News Pictorial," has caused considerable comment among the residents of New England during the past week.

Recently the Boston Elevated Railroad began using their old cars for advertising summer parks and beach resorts in which the corporation is interested. Large posters were placed on the sides of the cars and they have been traveling through the New England territory.

As soon as "Dick" Sears, the New England cameraman for the Hearst-Selig weekly, saw this, he communicated with the railroad officials, informing them that he would like to film their novel advertising scheme for the news pictorial.

In addition, he informed them that they must place a sign advertising the weekly the top of these cars. This was agreed to and Sears went through the downtown district with his camera on the rear platform of the car. He ground off several feet of film.

Since these signs have been displayed, New England exhibitors have received many requests from the patrons to include the Hearst-Selig in their program.

BRADLEY GOES TO TRIANGLE.

Winfield Bradley, who has been the manager of the New England Mutual Film Exchange, has resigned his office and in the future will look after the New England interests of the Triangle Film Corporation. Manager Buttner of the New Orleans office will succeed him.

NEWS FROM NEW ENGLAND.

H. A. Chenoworth, manager of the Comique theater, New Bedford, was a visitor to Boston during the past week, booking up features. He reports that business has been very good at his playhouse during this summer. Mr. Chenoworth is known as the live wire manager in New Bedford.

William (Bill) Gray of Lewiston, Me. was also a Hub visitor during the week, booking several features for his chain of theaters in Maine and New Hampshire.

Earle B. Tinker, who directs the destinies of the Phoenix Film Corporation in the Maine territory, was a visitor to the Boston office of that concern last week. Mr. Tinker reported business in his territory as far better than usual and believes that this season has been most prosperous.

J. Francis Drinon, who built and opened the Empress theater at Windsor, Vt., has sold out and purchased the Premier theater at Littleton, N. H. Mr. Drinon is now fast building up a business at the Littleton playhouse. He is using Pathe and Phoenix service, with Big Four features.

Ledger's Theater Beautiful has been opened at Pittsfield, Me., by A. St. Leger, a well known Pine Tree State exhibitor.

William E. De Croteau, formerly manager of the Auditorium, Taunton, was married during the past week to Miss Mae M. Carey, a well known vocalist. After a short honeymoon, the couple will reside in Lynn.

Fred B. Murphy, proprietor of the United Film Service of New England, spent last week in New York City. During his absence, Sam Moscow was in charge of the company's business.

The new Providence Keith house, the Empire, will be opened Aug. 23. Manager Owen Reddy has contracted for the new Fox policy of the one-a-week features.

The Olympia theater, Lynn, Mass., which has been closed for the past few weeks, during which time many alterations have been made, has been reopened.

Bernard Corbett, of the Corbett Theater Equipment Company, has opened the New England Kriterion Film Exchange at No. 205 Pleasant street, Boston. Workmen are now constructing two fireproof vaults, with a capacity of 500 reels each and a large exhibition room. Mr. Corbett will also conduct his equipment business from this office.

Charity Tax Stands

Montreal Justice Refuses Injunction Restraining the City from Collecting It—Local Exhibitors Undecided As to Course of Action, but Sure Something Must Be Done—Brock Now Controls Ten Theaters.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent Moving Picture World.

IN last week's Montreal news it was announced that the Dominion Park Company, Ltd., had made application for an injunction restraining the City of Montreal from collecting its charity tax. The case was duly heard, and Justice Maclennan refused to grant the desired injunction. The verdict has thrown local amusement people into gloom. For the present things are at a standstill. Action on the part of moving picture exhibitors is inevitable, as affairs cannot continue in their present path. No decision, however, has been reached by the local association.

None of the legal contentions raised by counsel for the petitioner is sustained in the judgment. His lordship finds that the tax is a direct one, and not indirect as claimed by petitioner; that the Legislature, under the British North America Act, had been within its rights in delegating to the City of Montreal the necessary authority for imposing the tax; that the city by-law is in order, and further makes it clear that there is no doubt that the balance of inconvenience would be on the side of the city, and especially the hospitals, should the injunction be issued. As to granting injunctions, his lordship points out that this power should be used sparingly. The allegation that the tax interferes with trade and commerce is not allowed.

A local paper, after summarizing the situation, asks: "Is this going to end in the bleeding to death of exhibitors, or in the showing up of these high-handed nincompoops? Will this tax be run like the censorship question? Will it be a question of giving the friends of politicians jobs at handsome figures? We've all heard of the power of the press; what about that of the screen? Have these 'bleeders' ever thought of how the screen may thwart their electoral ambitions, and have the exhibitors ever thought of the same idea? It would be well for them to do so."

BROCK ASSUMES CONTROL.

J. H. Brock was in Montreal last week and announced that ten houses now are under his control, viz., Scala, Family and Francais theaters, Montreal: Imperial, Francais and Family, Ottawa; Strand and York, Toronto, and Academy and Regent, Buffalo.

"LEGIT" SEASON OPENS.

The local legitimate season is now open. The Orpheum, His Majesty's, Gayety, and Francais are in full swing. The Princess is dark. The fare to be offered this year will consist mostly of stock and vaudeville. Very few road shows will pay us a visit. The outlook for the picture houses is good, considering present conditions.

The latest serial to be released in Montreal is Vitagraph's "The Goddess." An extensive advertising campaign has been indulged in, and the Daily Star will publish the fiction version. The Imperial and the Strand theaters have first run; both houses show it on the same days, the Imperial two days and the Strand running it an extra day.

The Francais theater opened its season on August 16, under the management of W. H. Foster. Mr. Foster has been connected with the Mark-Brock houses for thirteen years. The policy at the Francais will be musical comedy, vaudeville, and pictures. On Sundays a special concert will be given consisting of pictures and music. Three shows a day will be staged, there being two performances at night. Prices will range from five cents to a quarter.

MONTREAL NEWS NOTES.

The Independent Amusements, Ltd., has completed arrangements for the erection of a new theater on Park avenue, and ground will have been broken by the time this is published. The plans call for a sumptuous house. The theater will be called the Regent. The management is considering the idea of building a giant electric sign on the top of the new structure, and it is claimed that the name will be read at Sherbrooke street, a mile and a half away.

The last of the "Who Pays?" series has been released by the local Pathe office. The series has been very popular, and did good business.

Manager McCollum, of the local Universal exchange, reports that excellent returns are being brought in by the new Broadway Features. "The Broken Coin" is very popular in Montreal and is going big.

Messrs. Broy and Whitehead have left Montreal for Winnipeg in the interests of Selig's "The Spoilers." "The Spoilers" will be shown throughout Western Canada.

George Rotsky is back from Toronto, where he had been pushing "The Diamond from the Sky." He reported big doings. One house in the Queen City had such a crowd on "Diamond Night" that the manager was summoned to court for blocking the entrance.

Harry Kaufman, local Famous Players manager, has been out on the road through this province and reports satisfactory results.

B. Wineman, recently connected with the London theater, is now managing the Prince George, Mount Royal avenue.

The Casino, after having been closed for repairs, is now open under a new management.

ST. LOUIS NOTES.

The new theater building on Thirty-ninth street and Shaw avenue, being built by Meyer Brothers & Pracht, owners and managers of the Knickerbocker theater and airdome on Park avenue, is well under way, and will be completed in good time for the fall opening of the regular theatrical season. The new theater will be strictly a moving picture house, without even a stage, or arranged in any way that anything but moving pictures may be shown in the theater.

Moving pictures in the evening formed one of the main features of entertainment at the St. Louis Retail Grocers' Association's picnic, which was held at Priester's Park on August 19th. Although the attendance was good all during the day, the crowd was nearly doubled at night.

The New Grand Duchess, at 15 South Sixth street, opened on Saturday, August 7, with two sets of pickets passing out handbills. One faction gave out bills declaring that the theater was unfair to organized labor, and the other squad's bills affirmed that the theater was fair to organized labor. S. D. Bromley, manager of the house, claims that his employes are union men and that the trouble is between the different unions. Business has been good since the opening night at the New Grand Duchess, notwithstanding the pickets, Mr. Bromley says.

A new local weekly film is being introduced to moving picture patrons by the St. Louis Times, an evening newspaper. The Times has joined the National News Weekly service, which is supported by a combination of twenty-five newspapers in as many different cities. In St. Louis the film will be known as the "St. Louis Times World Weekly," and will be managed by E. W. Dustin, manager of the World Film Exchange. The first release will be on August 9th, and will be shown in local theaters, as well as those in surrounding towns

NOTES FROM PRAIRIE STATES.

In the Dakotas.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE milkman's or morning matinee moving picture show is the modern substitute for one of the evils of some circuses. The aim of the concession men (often grafters) was to lure the crowds to the circus lot early and get all the money possible before the show started. It was for this reason the men on the animal cages shouted through their megaphones: "Don't forget the grand free exhibition at the show grounds immediately after the parade!" A circus was in Devil's Lake, N. Dak., the other day and the Grand and Unique theaters had strong programs, which started immediately after the pageant had passed. Managers in other cities have a still better plan which relieves people of the long, tiresome wait on the sidewalk. Picture shows are started about 10 o'clock. Patrons are notified when the parade is coming and are given pass-out checks so they can return and see the rest of the pictures.

The new Dream theater at Viborg, S. Dak., will be open for business about Sept. 1.

A. D. Torfin of Aneta, N. Dak., is the new manager of the Spoonheim Opera house at Northwood, N. Dak. Picture shows will be operated at 10 and 20 cents admission.

H. E. Poole has sold the Grand theater at Enderlin, N. Dak., to R. C. Harper, and has gone to Alexandria, Minn., where he has purchased another motion picture theater.

The new Pearson theater in Belle Fourche, S. Dak., is slated to open early in September.

Otto Neilson has opened a motion picture show at Wessington, S. Dak.

In Nebraska.

THE city commission at Omaha has passed the ordinance recommended for the regulation of motion picture operators. It requires all operators to pass an examination before a board of examiners, to be created.

W. L. Bennett sold the Jewel theater at Beatrice to I. C. Hansen, of Los Angeles, Cal., and Al. G. Nelson, of Beatrice. The new proprietors plan a new front and other remodeling.

Fairbury is in line for a new $65,000 motion picture theater to be constructed by T. A. Van Leich, W. S. Weertser and T. E. Secrest of Chicago. C. W. Bartlett, of Fairbury, probably will be manager. The theater, which will be of stone, concrete, brick and steel, will seat 610 on the main floor and 280 in the balcony. It will also be equipped for road shows. The interior will be finished in a color scheme of old gold, rose and ivory. Mural paintings between the pilasters and floral designs on the ceilings of the lobby and the auditorium will harmonize with the general plan of decoration.

W. E. McKinney has sold his motion picture shows at Kimball to Harry Felpe.

W. D. Fisher and W. P. Bennis, of the Western Amusement Company at York, purchased the Empress theater at Grand Island.

The Joy theater at Florence is under new management.

The Overland Theatrical Company, of Nebraska City, has been incorporated with capital stock of $2,000, to do an amusement business. The incorporators are G. T. Aldrich, W. Y. Dow, H. D. Wilson, W. A. Hughey and C. M. Aldrich.

Stine & Helden have opened a motion picture show at Thayer.

E. S. Hornier will be manager of the Garnet theater at Blair, which has been sold to J. M. Crippin, of Omaha.

The two motion picture shows at Nehawka have been consolidated and will be operated by M. D. Pollard. The town will support but one show.

Robinson & Cauffman have sold their motion picture equipment at Kenesaw to the Kenesaw band, which will operate a show.

The Detective

"JERRY"

was hot on his trail. He had been elusive but the sleuth's net was growing taut—little hope for escape remained, when—

"Mister, please, just a moment!" excitedly begged two pretty girls of the pursued Jerry. "We have been annoyed by mashers and we—er—want you to be our protector. You'll dress in a maid's outfit, escort us around and thrash the rowdies when they speak to us again."

"Fine! I'll take the job," eagerly exclaimed Jerry. And aside: "That detective won't know me in a maid's uniform." So Jerry became a maid and unwittingly jumped from the frying pan into the fire.

That's part of the story of "Making Matters Worse," a screaming one reel Cub Comedy, with George Ovey, the funniest man in America, playing "Jerry," which is to be released Thursday, September 2, on the Mutual program.

Every audience will howl at Jerry's efforts to extricate himself from the situations into which he is thrown. "Making Matters Worse" is funny—very funny—one of the best productions ever turned out at the David Horsley studios, which is recommendation enough.

Every exhibitor should book it.

BIOGRAPH.

A TRIPLE WINNING (Aug. 30).—Tom Brown, a young deputy sheriff, is in love with Mary, the sheriff's daughter. She tells him that he must win his spurs before talking of marriage. Manuel Lopez, a bandit, holds up the stage coach, and a reward of $1,000 is offered for his arrest. Brown determines to try for the reward. As the posse sets out he receives a note from Mary asking him to meet her at a rendezvous in the woods. Hesitating between love and duty, he decides on the former, and goes to the broken oak. Mary is not there. Brown's absence is noticed, and the sheriff, following him, accuses him of cowardice and confiscates his badge. Sick at heart, he is wandering in the forest when he strikes the bandit's trail and, in a hand-to-hand encounter, captures him. Wounded in the struggle, he faints at the girl's door, and she prevents the outlaw's escape. Thus he wins not only the reward but also the badge and the girl.

THE MYSTERY OF HENRI VILLARD (Special—Two Parts—Aug. 31).—Everybody in the old levee town knew that Henri Villard was a shrewd man. So, when the beautiful De Bevoise girls, Grace and Frances, were left orphans, it was not surprising that they should seek Lawyer Villard's aid in managing their investments, especially after he had become engaged to the younger sister. What everybody did not know was Villard's fondness for gambling and low company. In a cheap tavern he lost the girl's money at cards and conducted an affair with the host's daughter. Uncle Darby, faithful negro servant of the girls, discovered Villard's crookedness and told Grace about it. She thought only to hide the truth from Frances, but Villard himself revealed it. Frances died of a broken heart, and Grace, embittered, insisted on Edgar Calhoun, her fiance, avenging her sister.

Next morning Henri Villard was found dead on a lonely trail. Tavern loungers recalled Uncle Darby's threat to kill the scoundrel, and he was arrested. Grace, meanwhile, had received from Edgar a note reading: "Frances is avenged." To save Darby she accused herself of the killing, in spite of the old man's plea that he had shot Villard. While they were examining her at police headquarters, Edgar learned what had happened. When Grace saw him enter the room she guessed his purpose and insisted more vehemently than ever that she had killed Villard. But the empty shell found on the ground fitted Edgar's pistol. Grace was in despair when suddenly a third witness forced his way in—a tavern lounger—who told this tale: Villard, challenged to a duel by Edgar, had bribed the lounger to attend the meeting and secretly to shoot Edgar in the back. But he had lost his nerve, and the duel proceeded, Villard firing first and missing.

DORA (Special Three Parts Sept. 1).—Farmer Allan quarrels with his brother and, on the death of the latter, takes his orphaned daughter, Dora, into his house. He plans a match between Dora and his own son, William; but the girl has fallen in love with Luke Blomfield, a neighbor, and William is secretly betrothed to Mary Morrison, a servant in his father's household. Farmer Allan's announcement of his plan is William's justification for eloping with Mary. They confess their secret to Dora, and shortly afterward are forced to reveal it to Farmer Allan, who at once disinherits William and orders him from the house, despite Dora's pleadings. When she implores him to help them, he threatens to treat her in the same fashion if she ever mentions their names to him again. Secretly Dora places baskets of food outside the door of William's cottage, for her cousin is ill and in want. Mary believes it is Luke who aids them; for she is bitter against Dora, thinking it is she who keeps William and his father apart. Luke, too, is wroth with Dora; for she refuses his suit. Farmer Allan makes a will leaving all his property to her, despite her protests. Just before William dies Mary discovers that Dora is her benefactress. Dora breaks the long silence and is disowned by Farmer Allan. Going to live with Mary, she schemes to bring William's child to the old man's attention, and through the child the man of stone is softened.

THE STRANGER IN THE VALLEY (Sept. 2).—Mabel Burton arrives in the valley town with her little girl, and the local sewing society takes a lively interest in her affairs. Her meeting with the mill owner's son, through the agency of the child, furnishes a rich morsel of gossip. Time passes, and the man declares his love for Mabel. Sadly she tells him that she can never marry him; she is the wife of another. Doctor Burton had won her heart, but with success he had become unkind, and she left him.

Her story shatters the man's hopes. A few days later, during the absence of the village doctor, the child of the arch-gossip is taken seriously ill. Mrs. Burton goes to nurse it and, realizing the gravity of the case, telegraphs for her husband, the great specialist. He, misunderstanding, believes his own child's life is at stake, and hastens to the valley. On the way he is killed in an automobile accident. Mrs. Burton's care saves the child's life; the village learns to love her; and eventually she consents to wed her faithful suitor.

THE WANDERER (Sept. 13—Reissue).—Turning from the perpetual strife for gain, the young idealist in a Spanish village takes to the open road with his flute. Lovers quarreling hear an old familiar strain and are hushed into happiness. A self-willed little girl then hears the still, small voice and is humbled.

Years pass, and still the Wanderer makes music; but now his note is too true to please the crowd. Time has wrought a change in others besides himself. The lovers of old are now astray in bitterness and sin. The woman has another lover, and for his sake is willing to rob and slay her lord. Together they steal into his sleeping room; the dagger is poised, the gold clutched; then they hear the flute and stand appalled. The little girl, now grown, abhors the crafty merchant to whom her people would sell her. Fleeing, she meets the Wanderer and is again comforted by his music. Together they go down the road, with love ahead, and behind them the happiness which the Wanderer has brought to others.

THE WHEEL OF THE GODS (Sept. 4).—Young Mrs. Bagley, wife of a middle-aged doctor, starts a flirtation with Falkner, whom she meets at a friend's house. Falkner takes it seriously and proposes an elopement. She treats the proposal lightly, and is horrified when, at the appointed hour, he bursts into her boudoir. The doctor returns from a professional call, and Falkner is trapped. To save the situation he pretends to have come for medical advice. The doctor, who is aware of the flirtation, determines to use the force of suggestion. "Your heart valves are worn out," he tells the astonished man. "The hand of death is on you." Terrified, Falkner leaves the house and, convinced that he is doomed to a horrible end, fulfils the doctor's vengeance by committing suicide.

ESSANAY.

THE BANK (Special—Two Parts—Aug. 9).—Charles Chaplin is employed as a janitor in a bank. He falls in love with a stenographer and one day finds a necktie on her desk with a note reading, "To Charlie, With Love." He buys a bouquet and puts it on the stenographer's desk. In the meantime, the cashier, whose name is Charlie, receives the necktie and goes to the stenographer to thank her. She, in turn, thanks him for the flowers, but he denies sending them. She learns that they are from the janitor and throws them into the waste basket. Chaplin is watching her through the door and his heart is shattered. He goes to the basement to sulk and finally falls asleep. He dreams of an attempt to hold up the bank. The cashier hides under a desk while he grapples with the robbers. He hurls them into a vault and holds them until the police arrive, then rescues the stenographer who has been gagged. The cashier is discharged for his cowardice, while the president of the bank showers his praises on Chaplin. The girl throws herself into his arms. Chaplin wakes up to find that he is hugging and kissing a mop. He wanders to the foot of the stairs and sees the stenographer in the cashier's arms.

THE MARKET PRICE OF LOVE (Aug. 16).—Mrs. Rodney, a young wife of an aged millionaire, realizes that her marriage is a failure. Her husband heaps presents and money on her but does not realize that she wants love and companionship. One night when he goes out to the club, she sits dreaming of what might have been and recalls how, when she worked for Rodney, she sacrificed her love for George Calvin, another employe, for money in marrying the aged millionaire. She dreams that she had married the youth she loved and that there had been a baby born to them, thus sealing their life happiness. And then her aged husband returns home, and, intoxicated, throws a lavaliere on the floor and she buries her face in her arms, sobbing.

DOES THE WOMAN FORGET? (Aug. 23).—Wilton Barth, a young society chap, lacking in principle, tires of society and steals away from home to live in the poor section of the city. He meets Janie Dixon, a pretty factory girl, who falls in love with him. He works at her factory and Jerry, her old sweetheart, is jealous. He wearies of his labor and returns home. Later Jerry and Janie see his wedding announced to Shirley Mitchell. Jerry vows to kill him and is only stopped by Janie in the bride's home. Jerry weds Janie. Both couples appear happy, but—does the woman forget?

HEARTS AND ROSES (Special—Three Parts—Aug. 24).—Ruth Willard scorns the honest affection of Dr. Norton, a respected friend of the family, and accepts the proposal of marriage made by a shallow, good-looking youth, John Baxter. Her father dies and leaves the girl poverty-stricken. Baxter then jilts her. Dr. Norton assumes the responsibilities of Willard's bank at his death and later pleads with the heart-broken girl to marry him. She listlessly agrees. Time passes and the girl ignores the doctor's affections. Baxter returns and visits the girl while her husband is away. Dr. Norton learns of this and decides to go away. At a station a wraith of the dead father appears and Dr. Norton goes back. The girl has awakened to the fact that she loves the doctor when she finds he has gone away. When he returns she joyously throws herself into his arms.

THE FABLE OF THE ROYSTERING BLADES (Aug. 25).—Out in the celery belt there is a stunted flag station whose leading citizens still wear gum arctics. In this lonesome kraal two highly respected money getters marched at the head of the women and school children during dry movement day. As a result liquor was not to be obtained in town except at the drug store or in cellars of well conducted homes. For eleven months and three weeks of every year they battled to uplift the community, but every autumn they went skylarking in the Windy City. Every night of their week of hilarity they turned in with daylight tickling their noses and awoke entirely surrounded by towels. The fourth morning their bodies were taken to the Union Station. Two weeks later, at the Union revival services, when the Rev. Mr. Poindexter gave out, "Yield not to temptation," Milt and Henry sang their heads off. Moral: One who would put Satan on the mat must get inside information at his training quarters.

THE DRUG CLERK (Aug. 20).—The new drug clerk watches the store while the proprietor is getting married. When the husband takes his bride to their new home, he received a letter from the rich uncle, who says he is coming to see the five-year-old boy. The maid coaxes the drug clerk into assuming the role, and, dressed as a baby, he makes quite a hit with the rich uncle. The husband bribes a fruit peddler to kidnap the baby and write a letter demanding $5,000. The uncle gives the $5,000, but the husband gets it back and thus makes the uncle proud of him. The uncle wills him all his money.

RULE SIXTY-THREE (Special—Two Parts—Aug. 28).—After Tremayne is divorced from his wife, he calls upon a systematic disentangling agency to prevent his falling in love with Amelia Benton. She also calls in a disentangler. When the two disentanglers fall in love, and when Tremayne and his wife are brought together through "Rule Sixty-Three," Smith, president of the disentangling agency, regains his fiancee, Amelia, who has jilted him, and the adventures of the three couples end happily.

THE WOMAN HATER (Special—Three Parts Aug. 21).—Jack Warder, woman-hater, is kidnapped by his friend, Dick Wainwright, and taken on a yacht cruise where Mabel Willing makes the bashful bachelor miserable. As time passes he learns to care for her companionship and decides he loves her. He proposes but later repents. Twice he is led to the altar and runs away. In his panic, he runs to the station and is there arrested as a desperate bandit. Dick and Mabel discover him and he is released. Mabel induces him to go to the altar a third time, she agreeing to say "no." She says she doesn't want to marry him but wants to get even. At the wedding she says "yes," dumbfounding Warder. However, as he is married there is nothing else to do but accept married life and they depart happily on their honeymoon.

KALEM.

THE MASKED DANCER (Special—Three Parts—"Broadway Star Features—Aug. 30).—Alam, in love with Hera, his employer's daughter, is severely beaten when Mustapth catches him in the act of peering into the harem. Wright, an art dealer, visits the Orient and purchases goods from Mustapth. The American accepts an invitation to join the Persian and his friends in a game of cards. A quarrel occurs between Mustapth and Wright and in the course of the battle, the lights are extinguished. When the lamps are relit, Mustapth is found dead. The knife with which the deed was committed is found in Wright's hand. The American flees. Hera, heart-broken, vows to slay the murderer and she follows Wright to New York. Discovering him to be in the habit of patronizing a certain restaurant, she obtains a position as a dancer in the cabaret. The fact that her face is always veiled while on the stage ar considerable curiosity. Wright is delighted when the masked dancer invites him to her home.

Alam follows Hera to America. It is his intention to wed the girl after she has fulfilled her vow. The man hides himself in a closet in her library. Wright falls in love with Hera. After leading him on, the girl suddenly turns upon the man and attempts to slay him. Disarming Hera, Wright learns her story. He vows that he is innocent. Alma breaks out of the closet and viciously attacks Wright. A frightful struggle ensues. It ends when Alam mortally wounds himself. With death near, the Persian confesses that he had stabbed Mustapth in the dark and then thrust the knife into Wright's hand. Comforting the victim of Alam's villainy, Wright takes her in his arms.

LUBIN.

A ROMANCE OF MEXICO (Aug. 30).—Jim French, a young mining engineer, loves Carmen, sister of Pablo Cortez. Juan, a cowardly rascal, also loves Carmen and entertains against Jim a jealous hatred without, however, the courage to personally harm the engineer. He determines to make use of a third party to vent his fury upon Jim. Pablo, high tempered and jealous, loves Nita Garcia, with whom Jim is on friendly terms, and by a trick Juan convinces Pablo that Jim is in secret Nita's lover, and that his attentions to Carmen are merely a blind. Pablo seeks Jim, determined to kill him.

In order to save a detour of a couple of miles, Jim has hung a rope down the face of a cliff, and it is near this point that Pablo comes upon the engineer. Jim is entirely at a loss to account for Pablo's rage. Pablo is armed with a knife only and Jim, with his gun, prevents the other from closing in upon him. As he can get no explanation from Pablo, and as he does not wish to harm his sweetheart's brother, Jim deems it best to retreat from the field, and prepares to climb the rope, holding off Pablo with his gun. When Jim has climbed a little way he drops his gun, which falls out of Pablo's reach. Pablo at once begins to climb the rope after Jim.

It happens that Carmen has been roaming in the neighborhood, and witnesses the affair between Jim and her brother. The girl sees that in a few minutes Pablo, a better climber, will get at Jim with his knife, and she begins to shoot at the rope between them, Pablo not yet being high enough to be seriously injured by a fall. She at length succeeds in cutting the rope, and Pablo is rendered temporarily helpless by the fall. Carmen and Jim go to Pablo's assistance, and it is soon conclusively proven to Pablo that they have been victims of a trick. Later it is apparent to Carmen and Jim that Juan is the guilty person, but in the completeness of their happiness they are indifferent to all else, and Jim does not seek revenge.

AVENGING BILL (Aug. 31).—Lucy is a slight young thing and she is so used to being stormed at by the Grouches that she doesn't mind it any longer; but when Grouch blackens the eye of Bill, the grocer's boy, Lucy becomes a fury and gets after Grouch with a knife. While Mrs. Grouch is telephoning for a policeman, Grouch is dodging Lucy all over the house. She finally catches him in the back yard and compels him to apologize to Bill. About this time the policeman arrives with drawn revolver, but he refuses to believe that the weak and clinging Lucy could attack a husky brute like Grouch and goes on his way. Then the trouble breaks out afresh and Lucy licks Mrs. Grouch, while Bill does up the boss and they stroll off to get married, for Lucy can imagine that she is fired without being told.

THE HAUNTED HAT (On Same Reel As Foregoing).—If the kittens were white, it wouldn't be so bad, but the cat is black and that makes a difference. So the little black rascal gets under the boss's discarded straw hat, and, being unable to extricate itself, goes on a jaunt, hat and all. The simple town folk had never before seen an auto-hat and seeing this one travel about think it is a "spook." Finally the whole town is up in arms, police and fire departments included; they capture the hat after many hairbreadth escapes and rescue the little black cat.

MILE-A-MINUTE MONTY (On Same Reel As Foregoing).—"Mile-a-Minute Monty" is the first of a series of cartoon comedies by the noted artist, Leon A. Sells. This one depicts the adventures of Monty, who is driven from his home by the squawking of his baby, and escapes by a flying machine. He has weird and wonderful adventures in the clouds, in the desert, and other outlandish places.

THE WILD CAT (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 1).—When Sargent met Mary he was attracted to her principally by the little frills, the little false curls, etc., that the girls wore. And so, after marriage, she kept this up to please him. A surprise visit from a wealthy uncle of his, results in uncle catching Mary at this primping. His disgust excited, the uncle leaves a note and promises to leave his fortune to them if they will christen their first girl child Vanity. Mary is angered, but Sargent, with avarice, insists that the child be so christened, and she is. The uncle, arriving, laughs. It was a joke, a bit of sarcasm, and his own son is his heir. The shock is too much for Sargent, and he becomes mentally unhinged on the single subject of women's dress.

Vanity, grown, finds that life is made miserable for her because she is compelled to overdress to an extent attracting every possible undesirable attention. John, a country fellow, in particular likes to attempt to hug her since she will struggle like a little wildcat and cause great amusement for himself and his cronies. In final rebellion, Vanity goes to a favorite nook on the stream and strips off all the finery. Here she meets Dick, tramping for his health. He learns her story and persuades her to resume all the frills for the sake of her crazed father.

Into Vanity's life now comes Carr, a man of the city, and she sees him effectually handled by a haughty air on the part of a girl in his auto party. Vanity tries the haughty air on John and it works. Elated, she is doubly crushed when it fails to work a second time. To escape it all she hurries to Dick. "Marry me!" He takes too long to gather his wits and she is gone. Carr meets her and proves the tempter. Fleeing Carr, she runs into John, and then, as a choice of evils, the poor harassed girl turns to Carr and he starts off with her. But Dick discovers that he wants her, follows her, and rescues her from the man of the city.

THE PHANTOM HAPPINESS (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 2). In the garden of his seaside cottage, Don Emerson, novelist, writes contentedly on his latest book manuscript. Not far away sits his wife, Alice, devoted and true to him, yet possessing subconsciously the opposite temperament—the longing for the luxury and joy that accompanies wealth. With his mind fresh on his notes, there crosses the garden a stranger, Mary Allison. Don realizes the embodiment of his fiction character in the girl. Mary pleads to trespassing, attracted by Don's roses. More and more attracted to her, he explains his startled glances toward her, and shows her the fragment of his manuscript containing the apt description of her. This leads to an exchange of names and addresses.

Alice enters, excited over the sudden receipt of a letter telling of an inheritance of magnificent proportions just bequeathed to her by a relative. Somehow Don cannot wax enthusiastic over the announcement. Another day. The likes and dislikes of Don and Alice are quickly emphasized by her suddenly acquired wealth. His first novel has been successful enough, but he finds himself losing his power of creation. Then comes an adroitly written little note from Mary. She is still waiting for the autographed copy of the novel promised her by Don. On this day, Alice's entire house is given over to a bridge party. Don, on the spur of the moment, answers Mary's note by calling upon her—the first time he has seen her since the day in the country. The marked contrast in Mary and her quiet, peaceful home, and in Alice, with her changed nature and her noisy, social-ruled house acts as a powerful magnet upon Don, who subordinates everything else to his desire for inspiration and successful writing.

One day she finds herself in his arms. Alice's extravagance and social activities continue. He leaves in a fury, telling Alice to remain with her happiness, while he seeks his. The days pass. Alice, repentant and sick, waits, broken-hearted for Don's return. Finally in despair she calls in her lawyer. He tells her the only way she can win Don back is through the same agency by which she lost him—her money. He finds satisfaction in frequent trips to a charity children's hospital which is run largely through large donations of his own. In this Mary also finds interest. Then comes Alice's lawyer, with a check of $5,000. It is Mary's for the asking, provided she will relinquish all claims upon Don and use her influence to persuade him to return to Alice. Mary's reply is the check itself—returned to Alice, torn in half.

Reluctantly Alice goes to Mary's home. At the same hour Don, in Alice's absence, visits her home to obtain valuable notes needed immediately. He enters the study to find everything unexchanged—except that the vase of roses close to his photo are fresh. Slowly he returns to Mary's home, a germ of misgiving in his mind for the first time. About to enter the living room at Mary's home he hears Alice offering Mary money if she will only step out of their lives. Mary remains impassive. Don enters Mary's room and she realizes he has overheard all. He tells her that soon they would have discovered their happiness to be a phantom. She tries to detain him, but he returns to his own home. He finds Alice, racked by sobs, in his study—and there where their differences were born, their final understanding is made complete.

IN SPITE OF HIM (Sept. 3).—Nathan Biddle cannot understand the little whims of woman's vanity or realize why his wife needed new gowns so often. The question of a new one comes up and Elsie, his wife, tells Nathan that she needs it badly. She shows him the gowns she has been wearing for the past year. Nathan looks them over and seeing no worn spots concludes that they are still good and refuses the request. Elsie gives up in disgust and writes her mother for advice. Her mother writes her that men are the same the world over, Elsie's father was the same. She concludes by telling her to be patient and enclosing money for a new gown as a present. That her mother should have to send her money to buy gowns that her husband should provide galls Elsie and she resolved that she would not make use of the money her mother sent.

On that morning Nathan tells her that he will bring Mr. and Mrs. Kirk with him to dinner and be sure and look her prettiest. How could she look her prettiest in gowns both the Kirks had seen so often? Then it is that she remembers her mother's letter and resolves to use the money. She makes a quick reply to Nathan's refusal, that "there is another who will buy it for her then." Nathan fiercely demands to know what she means, but Elsie will not say anything more. After he has gone she goes downtown and buys the gown her heart is set upon so that when Nathan and his guests arrive she gains the admiration of the Kirks and her husband's displeasure.

After the guests have left Nathan gives away to the suspicion and doubt he has held back and demands to know where she got the new gown. Elsie, seeing an opportunity to tease him, makes the most of it and Nathan losing his temper makes an accusation against her. That he should dare to doubt her hurts worse than anything else and she concludes that there is but one thing left to do—leave him. When she is leaving he again pleads to be informed, but she turns from him and in his hot temper he tells her to go and never see him again. Later he begins to realize that he was wrong. He goes to her room, finds the mother's letter, and he hastens to Elsie with a penitent heart and receives the blessing of her forgiveness.

AN ARTFUL ARTIST (Sept. 4).—Angelo, a portrait painter, is a society fad. To be painted by him is to be admitted as one of the social elect. Jane Smith has money and ambition, but no standing in society. Her husband is jealous. It is Jane's great aim to be painted by Angelo and she writes demanding that he name a price. Angelo receives the letter just as he is leaving town for a week. When Jane comes to argue her case on appeal, she encounters Bill, the janitor, who has put on the artist's painting togs just to see how he looks in them.

Jane thinks that he is the artist, disguised, so that he can turn her away without being recognized, so she bids high. Bill would be willing to paint her picture for $1.50, but he offers no objections to thousand dollar bills, and tells her to come the next day. The detective hired by the jealous husband learns that Angelo is out of town. More than ever the matter looks suspicious and hubby starts for the studio, too. There is a lively ten minutes, but in the end Bill, who is hiding on the roof, falls through the skylight. He loses his ill-gotten gains and some of the skin from his nose and shins, but he is rich in black and blue marks.

VITAGRAPH.

MR. JARR AND THE VISITING FIREMEN (No. 17 of the Jarr Family Series—Aug. 30).—Jarr grossly deceives the Smalltown Fire Company by pretending to be a "Smoke-Eater" from the Big City. His wife sees him leading the parade with a "chicken" on each arm. Things look bad for Jarr but a fake fire and rescue set him right again.

HEARTS ABLAZE (Broadway Star Features—Three Parts Aug. 31).—Malvini, broken-hearted over the elopement of his young wife, retires to a monastery. After 20 years he returns to find his daughter, Valeria, accused of killing the man with whom his wife eloped. Mario, the girl's lover, had shot the man in self defense and the victim's last words accuse Valeria. Mario goes temporarily insane, but at the last moment recovers and tells his story. The Priest then secures audience with the King and explains everything. Valeria is released and Mario pardoned. The Priest then unites them in marriage.

THE GIRL WITH THE RED FEATHER (Special Two Parts—Aug. 23).—Webster G. Burgess, the bank president, is friendly with Allan Hill, a detective. While Hill is in Burgess' bank, he spies Nellie Murdock, who wears a red feather in her cap. He tells Burgess that Nellie is the daughter of Julius Murdock, an ex-convict. Young Drake is Nellie's sweetheart, who has just been released from penal servitude. Burgess receives a letter from a friend asking him to help Drake and his sweetheart, Nellie, to be married and leave the country.

Burgess, that evening repairs to the home of Julius Murdock, the ex-convict, where he is to meet Nellie. When he enters the house, it is surrounded by police. Burgess, Nellie, and a young man, whom Burgess believes to be Drake, escape the house and Burgess is instrumental in providing for the escape of the young man from the police. After risking his life, Burgess is informed by Nellie that the man he aided to escape, was Bob Murdock, her step-brother, wanted by the police as a counterfeiter. Nellie then tells Burgess that Drake, her sweetheart, is waiting at a designated spot. Burgess finds the young man, and the three repair to his home where Bishop Gladding marries Drake and Nellie. The next morning, Hill, the detective, again calls on Webster G. Burgess. He tells Burgess of the police chase of the night before and Burgess says languidly that he is not interested in news of criminal escapades. Hill then gives to Burgess a silver card-case, saying. "I think this case must belong to you, although I found it near the home of the ex-convict." Then a glance of mutual understanding is exchanged between the two men, and Hill, the detective with a heart, leaves the bank.

THE DOUGHNUT VENDER (Aug. 24).—Mrs. Morley is the sole support of her grandchild, Otto. The circus comes to town, and she believes she can sell some doughnuts to the crowd. Mrs. Morley, however, is not successful in selling her cakes.

Pete Rose comes out of a saloon, and having sympathy for Mrs. Morley, resolves to make the men purchase the doughnuts. He conducts Mrs. Morley to a store where coffee and doughnuts command a ready sale. Pete tells Mrs. Morley to make all the doughnuts she can for tomorrow.

The next day while little Otto waits at home, Mrs. Morley, through the aid of Pete, disposes of her wares. With considerable money she leaves for home. She is pursued by a villain, but he is overtaken by Pete who forces him to leave. Pete conducts Mrs. Morley to her humble home.

THE STRANGE CASE OF TALMAI LIND (Special—Three Parts—Aug. 26).—Carl Lind is a collector and trainer of animals. Lind is a periodical drinker and when intoxicated is brutal and unreasonable. Lind, while intoxicated, enters an arena which contains an unruly lioness. He beats and curses the beast, until Hilda Lind, the wife, unable to longer stand the sounds of the tortured beast, rushes to the arena and begs her husband to desist. In a drunken rage, Lind grabs his wife and exclaims: "You want to come in, do you? Well, here, you will. If I can't tame this cat may be you can." He shoves Hilda into the cage with the lioness. Later Lind realizes what he has done. He rushes back to the arena and is surprised to find his wife unharmed. He promises never to drink or be brutal to animals again.

Not long afterwards a child comes to gladden the home of the Linds. As she gains in years, her character is found to be a strange one. Whenever the animals are abused, Talmai, the daughter, seems to also experience pain. Twelve years later Talmai is a beautiful tawny-haired girl, quiet and silent. She has no special friends except her father and mother and the lioness born on the same day as she. Amos Drew is engaged by Lind as assistant animal trainer. He falls in love with Talmai at first sight. However, Talmai does not return this love, and not only she but the wild animals seem antagonistic, sensing the inherent brutalness of the man. Drew tortures the lioness and this torture is almost simultaneously experienced by Talmai, who attacks Drew with all the savagery of a wild animal. This infuriates Amos, and he plots to torture Talmai through the mediumship of the lioness.

Talmai meets Paul Burnham, an artist. She is attracted to the young man, not knowing that he is engaged to Vera Stokes. In despair she appeals to her mother and says: "Mother, I am different. All my life people have shunned me. They are afraid of me. Even the man I love is afraid." Then it is that the mother tells Talmai what had happened in the wild animal arena the night before the girl was born. Talmai ascends a mountain peak. Below she spies Paul and his fiancee. At the wild animal arena, Amos Drew, in a drunken wrath, goes toward the lioness' cage. The animal springs at him. He torments her a minute or so, just to see her in a fury. Then he deliberately fires his gun. Talmai on the mountain peak screams in agony. She clutches at her dress, tears it open and falls over the rock. Paul Burnham and Vera hear Talmai's screams. They run to the spot where she is lying. Burnham quickly stoops over to lift her. He speaks her name, she recognizes him, smiles and then passes away.

THE MASTER OF THE BENGALS (Jungle Zoo Subject—Aug. 28).—Bruce Gordon, a young animal trainer, is sent to India for the purpose of organizing a hunting and trapping expedition. He is made welcome at the Rajah's palace, where he falls in love with the Rajah's daughter, Gaya. A native prince, Rankit Singh, learns of the Englishman's love for his fiancee and conspires to have the trainer killed.

The prince informs the Rajah that the real object of the Englishman's visit is to start a revolution among his subjects. Gordon is arrested and condemned to enter a den of maneating tigers, armed only with a whip. One by one the ferocious beasts are turned loos upon the defenceless man and as each tiger leaps into the den he is made to do the trainer's bidding. Rajah's daughter pleads with her father to spare Gordon's life. Filled with admiration at the trainer's bravery, the Rajah orders him removed to a dungeon. The Rajah is then informed that the prince is plotting against his throne. The prince hears of his danger and escapes the country forever. Later, Gaya becomes Gordon's bride.

THE LEAVING OF LAWRENCE (Aug. 31).—Lawrence and James Thornton, twin brothers, are left fortunes by their father. James invests his money in the west, while Lawrence remains at the old homestead and squanders his inheritance on wine, women and song. Lawdence exhausts his income, and is importuned by the butcher, the baker, and even the candlestick maker. Bessie Grant, a beautiful young girl, falls in love with Lawrence and gives him her photograph, writing his name thereon. As a last resort, Lawrence tells his creditors that he has expectations of marrying an heiress, and when he does so, all his bills will be paid. The servants in his home conjecture that Bessie Grant is the heiress, and the butler and others go to her home, accost her father and tell him of the bargain.

When Lawrence appears he is assaulted by an irate father, and Bessie demands the return of her photo, which Lawrence has not time to return, for he hastens away, pursued by many creditors. James Thornton, after losing his money in the west, strikes it rich. He returns to the old home. He is mistaken for Lawrence and is compelled to subdue the creditors by physical violence before he can make his way safely to the old homestead. Bessie Grant goes to Lawrence's home, determined to obtain her photo. While in the house, James approaches and mistakes her for a burglar. She hides behind a desk as he enters the room with a drawn revolver. Bessie comes forth in fear, which is dispelled after James explains that he is Lawrence's twin brother. It is a case of love at first sight with them, and Bessie is coaxed by James to scratch out the name of Lawrence on the back of the photo and write in the name of James.

The posse captured him and were going to hang him. He, however, exclaimed: "Wait, I'll tell you why I shot him." It seems they were boys together, and were pals until the girl appeared. The stranger won her and thought he was going to be happy but he had not figured on the friend's perfidy and fleas.

The latter insects were put in his wedding clothes by the false friend and he made such a strange acting groom that the bride threw him over and he had to run over the hills in his underwear having removed his clothing to hunt for the hoppers. The false one married the girl and the other swore he would scour the earth until he found and killed the traitor. This tale moved the possee and they let him go. The village loafer came to life and the stranger got one look at the erstwhile sweetheart. One look was enough, and he was glad he had not married her and also have to live with the wench many years more. This was better than an assassination.

HELLO BILL (Aug. 11).—Bill was circulating around the Elks' club house during the National B. P. O. E. Convention in Los Angeles. He and Reggie both knew the girl, but Reg outdistanced Bill for her favor and Bill tried to slip a belittling note about Reggie under the table to the girl. Reggie got it instead of the party it was intended for, and Bill was thrown out of the club on his ear. He came back, however, and locked Reg in a closet, took his uniform and then made an attempt to breeze past the grandstand, where the girl was sitting.

Meanwhile Reg got out and started to look for Bill. He finally found him and the meeting was not pleasant. Reg and his pals then decided that if Bill wanted to be an Elk so badly they would see that it was done correctly. Also James R. Nicholson, Grand Exalted Ruler, and Raymond Benjamin, Past Exalted Ruler, saw to it that Bill was put through in good style. The goat riding certainly got Bill's goat, and when it was finished, Bill was sorry he had ever craved to be an Elk.

GERTIE'S JOY RIDE (Sept. 5).—Reggie was going to take his gal, Gertie, riding. Hank was stuck on Gertie because Gertie had given him an indifferent smile, which Hank had taken seriously. When Hank saw Gertie going with Reggie he resolved they all should die, and he took the chauffeur's place. If Hank had only killed himself, or even Gertie and Reggie immediately, the slaughter would not have been on such a large scale. But when wet pavements, careless pedestrians, cops, traffic, citizens and other impediments get in the way, the result went beyond expectations. Also Hank tore off the side of a house in which a respectable citizen and his wife were sleeping. They were forced to run out in the yard in negligee. Hank's plan of murder took longer than expected, as he did not reach the pier until after several miles of skidding streets and many squads of pursuing policemen. The delay was worth it, as Hank treated everybody to the biggest thrill of their lives. The auto went straight over the pier, but Hank went under. Reggie and Gertie came up on a tire, but as for Hank, he never did come up.

POWERS.

A DOUBLE DEAL IN PORK (Aug. 21—Extra Release). John Packer, who has made his money in pork, wishes to invade society. He meets Mrs. De Knickerbocker, who has a son, Tom. Mrs. De Knickerbocker is aristocratic, but poor. Needing money, she conceives the idea of marrying Tom to Nellie, the packer's daughter. Packer is delighted. Tom and Nellie write notes to their respective parents refusing absolutely to be tied up and suggesting that the parents marry. The suggestion is taken up, for Mrs. De Knickerbocker is sadly in need of funds and Packer is determined to get into society. Meanwhile Tom and Nellie accidentally arrive at the same beach resort and each registers under a fictitious name. The afternoon of his arrival Tom helps some kiddies on the beach build a tall sand man. That night Nellie goes for a walk in the moonlight, followed by Tom.

Black Joe and Nifty Kid see the glitter of gems on Nellie's hands and follow her. The thugs are attacking her when Tom comes up. He sends The Kid to the sand with a sharp blow and tackles Joe. The girl is freed. Horrified, she sees The Kid recover and draw a gun to shoot Tom. Nellie topples the sand man over on the Kid and the villains are captured. Nellie and Tom are now acquainted, and fearing a mere summer flirtation, each decides to test the other. Nellie announces to Tom that she is not rich, but merely a cloak model taking her vacation as a swell. He then tells her that he is a plumber and poor as can be. Then Mr. and Mrs. John Packer arrive. Recognition, consternation, forgiveness and then delight ensue. The old folks needn't have married after all, but the double deal in pork has been put through nevertheless.

THE SHOT (Two Parts—Sept. 5).—Hal Garrett, a young mine superintendent, receives an invitation to the wedding of his elder brother, Hugh Garrett, who is to marry Agnes Norton, whom the brothers have known since childhood. The receipt of the invitation throws Hal into a fit of rage, and he surprises his assistant by announcing that he will leave for the East at once. The younger brother had left home suddenly, after a heated interview with Hugh, and he returns in the same manner, his home-coming being unannounced. At night Hal gains access to the old homestead, by means of a porch window, and surprises his brother in his dressing room, about to retire. Hugh is startled by the unexpected apeparance of Hal, who berates his brother. Drawing a huge revolver, Hal hands it to Hugh, admonishing him to "Be a man and blow out your brains." Hugh reluctantly accepts the gun, glances at it a moment and quickly fires at Hal.

The shot is heard by the old family valet, who hurries to investigate. He enters Hugh's room, to find his master and a stranger locked in each other's arms and struggling for the possession of the revolver, clasped in Hugh's hand. Before the old valet can interfere the gun is discharged and Hugh falls lifeless to the floor. Horror-stricken, the valet recognizes Hal, his favorite of the two boys. Alarmed and fearful for his young master's safety, he bids Hal to fly, placing the gun near Hugh's body, to suggest suicide. Hal reluctantly obeys.

The household is alarmed, and the doctor and police are soon upon the scene. The valet's story is accepted, until the doctor points out that Hugh was shot in the back, an unusual proceeding for a suicide. To protect Hal, the valet confesses that he shot Hugh in retaliation for a blow. Next morning Hal learns of the old servant's loyalty, and surrenders. The aged mother of the two boys is overcome at the death of her eldest son and pleads with her friends to send for her boy Hal. Agnes prevents the mother from learning that Hal has confessed to the killing of his brother.

The father of Agnes gets Hal to tell his story, which is as follows: During their childhood days, Agnes, Hugh and Hal were playmates. Hal is devoted to Agnes, but she favors Hugh, who is selfish. Years later Agnes promises to marry Hugh. Hal shields his brother's dissipations to Agnes. He later learns that his brother has an incurable disease and is advised by his physician never to marry. Because of his unsuccessful proposal to Agnes, Hal has decided to leave home and locate in the West. Before he goes he interviews Hugh on the disease and informs him that he will kill him before he allows him to marry Agnes. So the brothers part in anger, and do not meet again until the fateful night when Hal returns for the purpose of preventing the wedding.

Agnes's father is shocked and surprised, and appreciates Hal's loyal devotion and sincere love for his daughter. While Hal has been telling his story, the Coroner, assisted by the Garretts' family physician, has held on autopsy on Hugh's body. They find that the pistol shot inflicted merely a superficial wound. Hugh's death actually resulted from heart disease. These facts are at once communicated to the Chief of Police, who announces the startling but welcome news just as Hal is about to be returned to his cell. Whether the great joy shown by Agnes is caused by the fact that she can now answer the pleadings of the bereaved mother to bring home her youngest son or for other reasons, is left for the audience to decide.

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE.

JEWEL (Five Parts—Aug. 30).—Mrs. Forbes, the housekeeper at the country mansion of Mr. Evringham, a disappointed, embittered aristocrat, is very much worried. After many years as the housekeeper of this widower, who is almost a luxurious recluse, all the household has been turned upside down by the advent of the wife of Evringham's dead son, Lawrence, who has arrived with her daughter, Eloise. The mother is a schemer, who, reduced to her last penny, is pulling every wire to induce wealthy young Dr. Ballard to marry Eloise. It looks as if she is going to succeed and the need for success is imperative because Mr. Evringham is set against his female dependants, and it appears that they may be expelled from his home at any moment.

Then word comes from another son, Harry Evringham, who writes that he and his wife have to make a business trip abroad and he asks his father to take Jewel, the child he has never seen, into his home for six weeks, when he and his wife will have returned. Old Mr. Evringham reluctantly agrees to his son's request. He hates children and is gruff, unresponsive and self-centered. The only reason he agrees to take the child is because his daughter-in-law, the widow, tries to get him to refuse. He hates this daughter-in-law, and, therefore, takes Jewel in to spite her.

Upon her arrival, Jewel meets with a very cool reception. She finds that, according to the Christian Science teachings with which she is familiar, that she has entered a household of hatred and discord. She puts the scriptures and Mrs. Eddy's teachings to practical use and proves to all scoffers that she has found and can demonstrate the truth. Jewel takes a strong liking to her bluff, stern old grandfather and he finds his heart softening under her influence. She cures herself of a fever in which she falls, owing, as she says, to a shadow of hatred which passed over her for the inmates of the house. She wins the heart of the grim housekeeper when she redeems her drunkard son from the grip of the liquor demon. She converts Eloise to the truth of Divine Science and proves to everyone that Science can win in spite of all. She reaps a harvest of good from a bleak and barren soil, uniting the strained and jarring household by chain after chain of love.

DRIVEN BY FATE (Three Parts—Aug. 13).—Violet Marcell, an actress, held her fatherless babe in her arms as a messenger boy brought a telegram to her which read: "Join the show at Conness, N. H., Tickets await you at station." While she packs her trunk, Violet wonders what she will do with her babe. As a washwoman with her basket full of clean linen enters the house Violet hastily tucks her child in the basket while the washwoman is engaged elsewhere, and leaves. The washwoman, ignorant of the infant in the basket, leaves it with Mrs. Evans, who later opens the basket and finds the baby, to whose dress is pinned the following note: "Kind neighbor, I trust you will care for my little Violet. A poor unfortunate mother." Evans is angered that his wife should be imposed upon by an actress who has erred and brusquely declares his intention of sending "the brat" to the poorhouse. Mrs. Evans pleads with her husband to permit the baby to stay and finally Evans consents.

Years pass. "Little Bill" Evans, Violet's childhood playmate, has become "Big Bill," one of the best half backs ever turned out at his college. He returns from school at the end of the semester and is met at the railroad station by Violet, his father and mother. Bill is a little embarrassed in Violet's presence and finds it difficult to take up his friendship where he left off. In the days that follow, however, their friendship is renewed and gradually ripens into love. While Violet was a little girl not yet in her teens there came to the Evans home one day a trunk marked "Violet Marcell, Theatrical." A letter followed from the manager of the show with which little Violet's mother had been playing, which told of the death of Violet Marcel, and who, before her death, requested the manager of the show to send her trunk to the guardian of her child, stipulating that the trunk must not be opened until her daughter reached her maturity.

Upon Bill's return from college he and Violet come across the trunk. Violet remembers the letter sent years before and feels that she is now old enough to open the old trunk. They find a box of grease paints and have a lively time making up and "playing theater" as they did years before as youngsters. Evans sees the growing friendship between his son and Violet and does his best to discourage it. Evans finally accuses Violet with trying to bewitch his son and the next morning she carries out her resolution to leave for the city. She secures a position in a garment making shop, where she is promptly invited out to dinner by the manager. When she refuses she is discharged. Florence, a dance hall artist, who boards in the same house with Violet, helps her to secure a position in a cabaret and music hall, where she "makes good." She writes a letter home to "Mother" Evans. Bill gets the letter and determines to follow her.

Bill meets two friends in the city and drops into the cabaret where Violet is playing. At the moment he enters, Violet is insulted by two strangers who sit down at the table where she and Florence are resting. Billie takes Violet home and the next day they are married. The same day Billie meets his mother's old beau, Jim Ridgway. He tells Ridgway of his marriage, and upon arriving home Ridgway tells Mrs. Evans. Mrs. Evans is overjoyed and in her excitement consents to go to the city with Ridgway to meet Violet and her son. Evans sees his wife leave with his old rival and is infuriated. He trails them to the city, where he and the policeman break into the boarding house, only to find a happy little reunion between Violet, "Mother" Evans and her son. Evans forgives his son and takes Violet into his arms.

THE ONLY CHILD (Aug. 31). First we see Papa getting ready to go to work. He is shaving in the bathroom while Wifey gets breakfast. Wifey sends the "only child" to call father to breakfast, and in her haste the little girl lands the razor with too much power on Papa's chin. Breakfast over, Papa goes to the office, late, as usual, and disliked by all his office associates, as his everlasting "only child" talk has bored them all to death. Fearing that Baby is mad, because she caused him to cut his chin, Papa calls her up and they indulge in baby talk over the 'phone, greatly to the disgust of the crabbed manager, who comes into the office unexpectedly.

We next see Wifey at home planning with a woman neighbor to go to the matinee. Wifey doesn't know what to do with the baby. They talk matters over and the neighbor's wife suggests that they leave the precious infant with hubby at his office. They follow this plan, and then the fun begins. Papa's baby punches an important customer's hat full of holes, pokes the head clerk with the envelope opener and succeeds in upsetting the entire office staff. Finally the disturber wanders out of the office into the street, dropping her hat by the time-lock safe. Papa turns around and misses the "dear departed," sees her hat, and thinks she is locked in the safe. Great excitement prevails. Papa runs out for the only safe-opener in town, who proves to be a very slow one at that.

In the meantime, Papa's baby has wandered down the street and is taken charge of by a policeman. In due time the safe-blower arrives and slowly starts to work. Wifey upon her return from the matinee sees the little girl walking with a policeman, embraces her rapturously and declares it is awfully nice of her to come to meet her, and so clever of her, too! The safe is blown open, and behold! no child inside. Great consternation on the part of hubby and the office staff. Then Wifey walks into the office with the little truant. Hubby has to buy a new safe to satisfy his irate boss.

THE MYSTERY OF THE TAPESTRY ROOM (Three Parts—Aug. 26).—Tom Sharpleigh has grown old in the detective service. The one bright spot in the grimness of his life is his ward, Mable Brooks, between whom and Frank Sharpleigh, Tom's nephew, there is a love interest. One day the city is startled by the report that there has occurred another mysterious murder in the Addison family. Already two members of the family—Addison, Sr., and his eldest son—have met death, the younger son, Howard Addison, having been the one to discover the death of his brother, who was the second victim. Tom Sharpleigh, who is placed on the case, discovers that his brother, Adam Sharpleigh, from whom he is estranged, has for years been butler in the Addison home. Further investigation brings to light the fact that, in the event of the Addison brothers dying without issue, the Addison estate will revert to the butler. Tom induces Howard Addison to move into the "Tapestry Room," in which have occurred the mysterious murders. Young Addison consents and Tom watches over him.

At the hour of midnight, a panel opens and Tom sees a masked figure enter the room and steal to the bedside of Howard Addison. Tom closes with the intruder and in the struggle that follows receives a blow on the head. Before he can recover, the masked intruder disappears through the panel. A night or two later, Tom again takes up a position in the tapestry room. Again the masked intruder enters through the panel. This time, however, Tom is more careful. But the masked intruder sees Tom's advance, fires at the detective, and dashes through the panel, Tom firing several shots after the fleeing man. To Tom's astonishment, his brother, Adam, the butler, enters the room. Adam's presence precludes the possibility of his having been the intruder, and the three men pass through the panel and into a passageway. Here they find the body of the masked man, one of Tom's shots having brought him down.

They carry the man back to the tapestry room, unmask him and discover that he is none other than Frank Sharpleigh, son of Adam and nephew to old Tom. Frank confesses and tells how he discovered the secret panel while at play, years before in the old house; how his father was unable to meet his (Frank's) continued demands for money; how he, knowing the contents of the Addison will, decided to do away with the Addison boys, certain that Adam, once in possession of the estate, would meet all further demands for money. Frank dies, and Tom and Adam, now reunited, return to Tom's home, where they break the news to Mabel.

TAM O' SHANTER (Three Parts—Sept. 2).—Tam and his family eke out a bare existence farming. What little they do get ahead is spent by Tam at the village inn. Kate, Tam's wife, tries vainly to cure him of this habit, but without avail. Jean, Tam's daughter, and Jock, the blacksmith, are in love, but Jock's bashful ness and poverty-stricken condition have prevented their getting married. One night while Jock is calling, Tam slips out to the porch and Kate follows him. Tam, knowing his crony, Souter Johnnie, is waiting for him at the inn, finally manages to sneak away.

The county fair is held and all the natives attend. Jock and Jean in all their glory take in the fair and Jock presents her with an engagement ring bought from one of the booths. Kate is kept busy keeping up with Tam, but he finally eludes her and returns to the inn. After serving him several drinks the innkeeper refuses to give him more unless he settles up his past account. Tam is in a quandary, and when the landlord offers to cancel all obligations in return for the hand of Jean in marriage, Tam quickly assents. Jean, meanwhile, has offered herself for hire in order to help her father, and the two men arrive just as she is being selected by one of the farmers. Jean is told of the bargain, but refuses to enter into it. Jock comes to her rescue and Tam and the innkeeper leave in disgust. When Tam cannot pay his debts the innkeeper has him thrown into the public stocks.

Kate and Jean are very much wrought up by Tam's disgrace, and Jean, in an effort to rescue her father, offers to keep his pledge with the innkeeper, in spite of Jock's protests. Tam is finally released. Jock, spurred on by the fear

SPEER PROJECTOR CARBON

MADE IN U. S. A.

You know Uncle Sam never fails to produce results when he is up against it—You know everybody believes the only Projector Carbons which are considered good by M. P. operators have been made in Germany—You know the war has reduced the supply of imported carbons and increased the prices—You don't know that one reason why German carbons have been used is that it costs more to make a carbon superior to or even the equal of the German carbon in U. S. A., notwithstanding the duty and freight on the German product.

You don't know that Speer, "The Carbon Man" of Saint Mary's, Pa., has been working for several years on the carbon problem and could have put the best Projector Carbon in the world on the market long ago. But it simply couldn't be done at the old prices.

Now when a decent price is obtained for carbons, and when child labor as used abroad, does not stand in the way, and we can afford to pay men's wages to make a superior carbon, we have produced and are willing to guarantee the delivery to you of the finest Projector Carbon in the world, and we take pleasure in herewith announcing that we are ready to book orders for the Speer Projector Carbon, made in U. S. A.

NET CASH PRICES.

½ x 12,	cored pointed both ends	$37.50 per M.	(1,000 in a case)
9/16 x 12,	cored pointed both ends	$40.00 per M.	(1,000 in a case) of losing Jean, formulates a scheme whereby he will get Jean and also cure Tam of his drink-loving habits. He arranges with one of the judges, and, knowing Tam will be sure to slip off to the village inn that night, lays his plans accordingly. True to his custom, Tam slips away and has a big spree at the inn. He and his pal, Souter Johnnie, are finally put out of the inn and start homeward. As they pass an old ruin there is a sudden commotion. The two are surrounded by the devil of the ruin and his imps, and, frightened almost to death, beg for mercy. The devil steps out and tells him he will let him go only on one condition, and that is for Tam to sign a pledge never to drink again and release Jean from the bargain to the innkeeper. He obeys and the two now sober cronies draw sighs of relief. The next day Tam has an attack of the misery and swears never again will he indulge in strong drinks. His pain is eased by Kate's loving ministrations, while outside Jean and Jock renew their troth and Jock comes into his just reward.

THE EAGLE (Sept. 2).—Anna Harding, fulfilling her dying mother's last wish, sets out in search of her brother, who has been away from home for several years. She arrives in San Francisco in the course of her search and falls into the hands of Glynn Savoy, leader of a gang of crooks, and a white slaver. She is dragged to the gang's hang-out. Dick, one of the gang, commonly known as "the Eagle," notices the girl and takes pity upon her. Later, when she endeavors to effect her escape, he finds there is something within him which impels him to go to her assistance.

The police, meanwhile, have had their suspicions of Glynn Savoy's outfit, and a raid is planned. When the officers break into the place, Dick, who has discovered that the girl is his own sister, succeeds in getting her and himself out of the place safely. Reformation and happiness follow, while Glynn Savoy and his evil companions pay the penalty for their misdeeds.

NESTOR.

MAID AND A MAN (Aug. 30).—Jack has just won the amateur golf championship, and when college closes Neal, his chum, insists that he accompany him home for a vacation. Neal has two sisters at home, Billie, to whom all the world pays homage, and Jane, who is on the verge of becoming an old maid. The boys arrive and there is a general good time. Jack does not find anything of interest in Jane, but when they arrive at the house and he gets a look at Billie, who is forced by her mother to play the part of the maid in order that Jane might win the celebrity, he is lost.

There is a big reception given in honor of the guest that night and Jack has virtually to be carried away from his new-found affinity. Billie decides that she will not miss all the fun, so she dresses in her best and slips to the reception. Jack has become tired of the bunch, and his thoughts stray to the maid, when he sees a swell dressed girl, an exact resemblance of the maid. He rushes to her, but Billie plays the game and pretends she never saw him before. Jack tells Neal the maid is there, but the latter denies it and Jack says they must go home to see if the maid is really there. Billie gets "wise" and beats them home, and when they knock on her door she opens. Jack is in a quandary.

Next morning Jack is up early and loiters around the maid until mother comes. He then beats a hasty retreat. Neal goes out to play golf, and Billie tired of her role, accompanies him. When Jane comes down dressed to capture the prize she finds he has gone and she is in despair. Jack wanders to the links, and, seeing Neal and the maid talking, thinks his dream of love is over, but he comes up unnoticed and hears her tell Neal how she beat them home from the reception. Jack then confronts Billie and the "maid" is forced into a confession. Jack proposes, Billie accepts him and mamma is forced to give her consent.

LIZZIE AND THE BEAUTY CONTEST (Two parts—Sept. 3).—Lizzie lives in Weedville and in Jed has a devoted lover. One day Jed, in looking over the paper, sees that the Universal is running a beauty contest, the winner to take a trip to Universal City and the fair. He immediately puts Lizzie up as a contestant and enlists the aid of the village rustics in her behalf. At last the contest closes and Lizzie is selected to represent her section. Jed, for his faithful work, is made her publicity agent. They meet the beauty special, and, after various experiences, are admitted to the party. Upon arriving at Universal City, Jed and Lizzie take in all the sights. Lizzie is introduced to the Judge who is to help decide the winner of the contest and makes a hit with him. Later the whole party are taken for a trip to San Diego to see the exposition and have a royal time. Jed sneaks Lizzie off from the party for a joy ride on the "chicken scoops," but the wily Judge misses her and sets the chaperones after them. Both are dragged back and warned to "stick around" with the crowd. The Judge takes a long chance, steals Lizzie off and makes a trip through the concessions, but he is missed, captured and led back.

The beauties all come back to Universal City for the final judgment as to the winner. All are assembled and the judging starts. Lizzie is missing, and she and Jed are found at the animal arena gazing around. They are haled before the judges. The Judge is strong for Lizzie, but has strong opposition. Jed is not allowed to be near the girls and is sitting dejectedly in the rear, when a mysterious person slips up and tells him of a famous beauty doctor who can make even an "Egyptian mummy" good looking. He slips Lizzie away and leads her to the "doctor." Lizzie is steamed, vapored, frozen and anointed, and when she finally comes from the doctor's hands she is a vision. Jed hurried her back and arrives just as the contest is closing. He rushes Lizzie in and, of course, she wins by a mile.

JOKER.

BRAVEST OF THE BRAVE (Aug. 28).—Mr. and Mrs. Brown have been invited to a large ball and Mr. Brown is having "the time of his life," trying to get into the swell clothes that are necessary for the ball. As a reply to his wife's request to hurry in dressing, he absolutely refuses to go. Mrs. Brown arrives at the ball and a scene of splendor greets her. The hostess, noticing that she is alone, takes her over and introduces her to a handsome stranger. Wifie compares the handsome stranger to her husband, and the latter suffers in the comparison. Noticing a medal on the breast of the stranger, wifie prevails upon him to tell her the story of how he got it, whereupon she is told it was given in recognition of bravery in rescuing a wounded comrade from overwhelming numbers of the enemy and gives a vivid description of how it was done. The stranger, meanwhile, has been eyeing the necklace wifie has on with longing eyes and finally gets as far as getting it in his hand, when wifie suggests they return to the ballroom.

Wifie is about to leave the ball alone when the handsome stranger offers his escort, which she gratefully accepts. He takes her home, but, finding no chance to get the necklace, takes a good look at the house and leaves. Wifie finds her husband asleep. She wakes him and taunts him with the story the stranger told her. Wifie and the maid are about to go to bd, while down below hubby is meditating suicide because of his wife's taunts. He makes several attempts, each time ending with a drain on the decanter. Suddenly the window of wifie's room opens and a masked figure enters. Wifie and the maid take refuge in the closet and see him get wifie's necklace and other valuables. Frozen with fear, they see him enter hubby's room. Then they rush to the 'phone and call for the police.

Hcbby is about to fire the fatal shot when the burglar enters and at once hubby sees a way to make a quick exit. He dares the intruder to kill him and bares his breast to the shot. The burglar is amazed and refuses, and finally hubby grabs him. The cops arrive, the burglar is unmasked, and wifie sees her former handsome brave escort, a common burglar. In the melee, his medal is snatched off and wifie picks it up, and, after gazing at her former despised husband she pins it on him.

SARAH BERNHARDT

The Divine Sarah is pictured in every detail of her home life, showing her in her various moods and her many foibles. It begins with her disembarkment at her home one month before she submitted to the amputation of her left limb. In all it shows Bernhardt in natural life at home. The picture itself is a marvel of photography. She is reflected in the act of a highly interesting game of tennis—she is seen climbing from rock to rock to escape the oncoming tide—she is seen in the floral jungles which abound on Belle Isle, gathering with her donkey cart as a floral basket, the exotics which there abound, and finally the Divine Sarah is pictured in her den overlooking the sea. In all, it shows Bernhardt as Bernhardt in the flesh. It evinces the flow of soul which is within her. Her charities are brought out in bold relief.

VICTOR.

VAGABOND LOVE (Sept. 3).—Vitturo Caggoni is a gay-hearted, rollicking Italian troubadour. He meets a young woman, Marjorie Holbrook, and falls in love with her, serenades her, and courts her in the old romantic troubadour way. The girl, Marjorie, loves him, but his improvidence saddens her and she chooses as her future husband a practical merchant of the village. They are married and Vitturo, in broken-hearted resignation, conceals his grief, plays at her wedding. He wanders out into the world with his violin and his mongrel dog, saddened by his loss, and puts a new thrill in his music for the lovers who later hear him.

Marjorie and her husband settle down to life. She finds her husband cold, and her life is miserable. She is forced to become a drudge. She bears a baby girl and the vagabond minstrel, who has returned to the village on his regular rounds, plays under window during the hours of her suffering, and in his music gives her strength to meet her ordeal. He knows of and shares her sufferings with her, and, learning something of the character of her husband, he loiters in the neighborhood and watches over the woman secretly. The husband meets him prowling about and drives him away, but Vitturo returns, and when the husband is harshest to the woman, Vitturo, beneath her windows, plays upon his violin and sends her strength.

Finally, the husband, grown rich by his miserliness, deserts the wife and baby for another woman. Marjorie is heart-broken and penniless. Vitturo provides for her, but makes no advances. Instead, he follows the man who has caused the unhappiness, meets him at a village fete, and in a dramatic scene forces him to give up his liaison and return to his wife and child. He effects a regeneration in the heart of the husband, leads him back to Marjorie, reunites them and takes up his old violin and his mongrel dog and goes on his way

A KNIGHT OF THE TRAILS (Two Parts—Aug. 20).—Jim Treen, a road agent, is engaged to Molly Stewart, who has no notion of his secret profession. When she discovers Jim's hidden treasure cache, she breaks their engagement. Though he pleads with her, promising to reform, Molly will not marry the bandit. Bill Carey, interested in Molly's savings, woos and wins her. The evening they are to be married, she entrusts to Carey her bank account, asking him to invest it for her. Carey beats it out of town on the night stage. Jim Treen is notified that Carey has left Molly in the lurch. The former road agent rides after the stage. Carey bribes the driver with a bonus of one hundred dollars to make the east bound limited. Treen, however, by taking a perilous short cut over the mountains, stops Carey at the train, snatches away his gun, and compels him, at the point of his own weapon, to hand over Molly's money. Jim restores her savings to the woman he still loves, and Molly becomes his wife.

PINTO BEN (Two Parts—Aug. 25).—Pinto Ben is a pink-nosed cow-pony. A hundred head of cattle are rounded up for beef to be shipped alive to Chicago. Ben and his master, with Segundo Jim, are put in charge. In the Chicago stock yards, men who don't know range-bred cattle from a herd of mountain goats, calmly inform Jim and Ben's master that the steers are to be driven into the big pen. At the same instant two or three stock hands run behind the herd and begin shouting and waving their arms to start the cattle. The beasts, a thousand strong, with horns and hoofs beating the air, bellowing their rage, glaring with bloodshot eyes, thunder into the chute. The two men in front prepare for their death ride. Suddenly Pinto Ben flattens himself before a high, iron-bound gate and leaps. The pony cleans the gate. The great wave of scorching breath falls back on the other side. Ben's master finds himself sitting on the ground, the head of his dying horse in his lap. Once the pony tries to pull himself up on his broken legs. But he falls back—and breathes his last.

MAKING MATTERS WORSE (Sept. 2).—With Curlock Bones, the detective, hot on his trail for a series of misdemeanors he has committed, and since his customary plans of operation for relief in such a crisis have proved ineffective, Jerry finds it incumbent upon himself to adopt some unusual method to evade the clutches of the pugnacious sleuth.

Stealthily creeping through a park, cudgeling his brain for an avenue of escape, he chances upon two girls who have been harassed by members of the police force, each of whom is strenuously striving for recognition. They beseech Jerry to take a place as their maid so that they may avail themselves of his masculine powers in case the policemen insist upon carrying on their annoying tactics. Seeing in it an opportunity to outwit Bones, Jerry accepts the job.

For a while Jerry has the time of his life flirting and toying with the police officers. But his desire to play pranks eventually proves his undoing. In the spirit of fun he chides the master of the house. That unsuspecting individual takes the impersonator in his arms just as his wife enters. She, enraged, strikes the homebreaker and her unfaithful spouse with a handy flower vase, Jerry's wig falls from his head and his identity is exposed just as Curlock Bones enters. The game being up, Jerry permits Bones to escort him to jail, adding another coup to the detective's long list of triumphs.

RELIANCE.

THE TURNING POINT (Sept. 1).—David Drummond surprises a thief in his Alaskan cabin. He frees the man. Years later, in Washington, D. C., he meets the same man, and learns from him of a plot against the government incriminating Senator Delafield. Drummond is in love with Elinor Delafield, the senator's sister. It is a remarkable fact that Delafield and Drummond are almost the counterparts of each other in physical appearance. The Alaskan determines to save the brother of the woman he loves from turning traitor to his government. The opportunity comes when Delafield falls ill and cannot attend an important meeting of his committee. Drummond takes his chair and impersonates the absent senator. The speech he makes is not at all the one Delafield had intended to deliver. But it saves the senator's honor and wins Drummond the grateful Elinor for his wife.

assistant. Both young men are in love with Celia, Sheriff Groton's daughter. Grant informs Celia's father that Dunn is an ex-jail-bird. The sheriff orders his assistant to leave the district. The girl, however, disbelieves Grant. She elopes with Dunn. Grant, in a fury, follows them. In Celia's absence he assaults Dunn. Thinking that he has killed his man, Grant starts a forest fire to cover his guilt. But Celia is convinced of the grazer's criminal liability. She gets help from an unexpected quarter, aid when her lover, who has only been badly injured by his enemy, is carried before Grant, the latter breaks down and confesses. Grant himself is the ex-jail-bird. The name of the young assistant is cleared, and he and Celia are happily married.

SHOCKING STOCKINGS (Aug. 29).—Ed, in his eagerness to rescue Fay from her papa and show her the sights at the beach, persuades that young lady to come out of the sand, where she has petulantly buried herself, and let him substitute for her a pair of wooden legs wearing stockings exactly like Fay's. Papa is duped by the shocking stockings—and Fay and Ed escape. They start off in the ferris wheel, but are frustrated in their joy by Chester, the villain, who carries off Fay and sets out to sea with her in a row boat. The ferris wheel is stuck in mid-air. Ed, frantic, leaps out of the wheel into the ocean, rescues Fay, and wins the everlasting gratitude of papa.

HEARTS AND FLOWERS (Aug. 31).—Alfred Wantez, a violinist, takes farewell of his wife, Olga, and their boy, Billy, to go on a concert tour. On the way to the train, he is attacked by a tramp, who knocks him senseless, steals his clothes, and, having put them on, boards the train. The train is wrecked. The tramp is buried for the dead musician. Olga receives word of her loss. Meanwhile, the violinist has been discovered and carried to a hospital. On his recovery from his injuries, his memory remains a blank. Several years later an itinerant musician wanders into a seashore community, whither Dr. Allen, who has taken a strong interest in the widowed mother and her boy, has sent Olga and little Billy. The children follow the violinist. Billy tags along with the rest. The strains of "Hearts and Flowers" bring Mrs. Wantez out of her cottage. She sees Billy and his father walking hand in hand at the head of the little procession. The first shock of joy fades into bewildered sorrow, when she finds that her husband has no memory of either her or his son. Dr. Allen performs an operation upon Wantez's brain and he is restored, sane and happy, to his wife and child.

FALSTAFF.

GLORIANNA'S GETAWAY (Aug. 23).—Glorianna, who was the colored maid of an actress, did not like work. The actress was engaged to a well-known young artist and he invited her to be his guest at the costume ball of the Kit-Kat Club. The actress accepted the invitation. The young woman had an elaborate costume for the occasion and Glorianna in secret, much admired it. On the evening of the ball her mistress called up on the phone and instructed the maid to inform the artist when he arrived that she could not attend the dance, because the managers of her show had most inconsiderately arranged for an extra rehearsal after the night's performance.

This message arrived about an hour before the appearance of the artist and in that time Glorianna yielded to temptation, and decided to attend the ball. She donned the costume and mask, whitening the exposed portion of her forehead with polish used for white shoes, and when the artist appeared he thought it the actress. He was rather surprised at her coldness. She spoke but a few words, and so much in love was the young man, that he simply remarked, "How mellow your southern accent is tonight, dear." Unfortunately for Glorianna, the rehearsal was called off and, the actress hurried home. She got a glimpse of her sweetheart with a woman whose costume was hidden by a long cloak and whose face was concealed under a mask, shooting down the street in a taxi. The actress was jealous and determined to humiliate him. She followed to the ball and found her fiance and the strange young woman seated in a secret corner. Angrily the actress tore the mask from the rival's face, exposing Glorianna. The maid made a hasty exit, while the young artist explained the circumstances to the actress and finally won her forgiveness and they laughed heartily together over his never having penetrated Glorianna's disguise. In the meantime, Glorianna hurried home, changed to her own garments, and departed, after leaving this note for her mistress: "I quit my job before you fire me. But I sure did have one grand time. Glorianna."

THAT POOR DAMP COW (Aug. 27).—Prof. Leander was one of the famous characters in the little city in which he lived. He was noted as a collector of curios and it was a matter of common gossip that under one of the rooms in his house was a wonderful subterranean vault, which was filled with many artistic treasures, therefore when a local reporter received a tip that a new gem was to be added to the professor's collection it made a fine item. The news was published and no one read it with more interest than did two "gentlemen of leisure," who were looking for a chance to gain wealth without honest toil. They determined to go to the professor's house and get some of his treasures.

While they were making preparations, the heir received his gift, and it came as a sad surprise. It was not a priceless jewel; it was simply a cow. The professor told his servant to take the cow to the police station, but the servant was stopped on the way for not having a "permit" saying he could take the animal through the streets. The servant brought the cow back and tied her to the front porch. His disappointment and sorrow wore upon the professor and he took numerous drinks in an effort to forget his troubles. Later in the evening his disposition became more mellow, and when a storm came up he saw the cow out in the rain and shed tears. He brought her into the house, went to sleep on the sofa himself while the cow browsed around.

Later in the evening the two "gentlemen" entered the house by a side window, found the entrance to the vault, opened it and descended the stairs. They were feasting their eyes upon the treasures and selecting the ones they thought most valuable, when the door of the vault, which was in the floor of the room above, was suddenly slammed shut. They tried to open it but failed. The cow had wandered into the room and stumbled against the door, slamming it shut and then had gone peacefully to sleep on the woodwork, effectually preventing the escape of the intruders. The frenzied work of the excited men awakened the professor, who came in with a revolver to investigate. He summoned assistance and turned his visitors over to a husky policeman, who, after looking over the captives, said that there was a reward of $5,000 out for each of the men and that the professor had every reason to feel pleased with his night's work.

So the poor damp cow was a successful investment and paid the professor many times over for his kindness in bringing her into the house when she was exposed to the pouring rain.

THAUHOUSER.

IN A JAPANESE GARDEN (Aug. 22).—A pretty little figure entered from the quaint Japanese pavilion. It was Mimi San, the daughter of an old Japanese noble, who was stern and unyielding as the Samurai clan, from which he sprung. Mimi San was in love, and the lucky mortal was a young American lieutenant, who was waiting for her nearby. At first it seemed as though the girl would be unable to meet her sweetheart, for her parents had other plans for her, and a watchful attendant followed her. But the demure little girl dropped her fan in the water and the unsuspecting servant returned to the pavilion to replace it, leaving Mimi San free to fly to the arms of her lover. The attendant returned and discovered the girl's secret. For an unchaperoned girl in America to receive the attentions of a young man means nothing, but to a girl of high class in old Japan it meant death. The servant, trained from childhood to guard his master's interests, hastened to the noble and told him the news. The lovers were torn from each other's arms and hurried by guards into the pavilion.

Judgment was pronounced by the father upon his daughter: she must take her own life. The fatal knives used in Japan from time immemorial were placed in her hands. Vainly Mimi San and her sweetheart pleaded for mercy, but the stern judge refused to listen to them, and Mimi San, despairing, obeyed. The little form fell lifeless to the ground, and the young American was carried to the beach and put into an open boat.

Then the young American awoke. For he really wasn't a naval officer at all, and Mimi San and all the other people were only dream characters. He was a sixteen-year-old boy, who was crippled since childhood. One of the possessions which he prized most was a miniature Japanese garden, which he kept on the table in his library. It was very cleverly built by a large tree whose oddly-shaped branches stretch out over a shrine. Between the slopes of the two little hills water is seen which spreads out into a little pond in the foreground. An arched bridge spans the narrow stretch of water. One-legged cranes stand on the shores, and the surface of the pond is partly covered with broad leaved aquatic plants. Stone lanterns, standing high from the ground are at each end of the bridge. Beside a boat on the pond is the figure of a man. Near the pavilion are the figures of a man and woman. A little removed from them is another man's figure with an umbrella. Across the bridge by the shrine is the kneeling figure of a woman.

care. The dishonest cashier proved to be a ready tool, and agreed to flee to South America and accepted the blame for the bank's shortage in return for a share of the spoils. The plan was carried out, but, despite all efforts of the police, no clue could be found of the missing man. One person in the town suspected the banker of complicity in the crime. It was the old editor of the town newspaper. With only suspicion for justification, yet feeling morally sure of his right, he conducted a series of attacks upon the banker, until the rich man sent an emissary to the editor with pretended expressions of sympathy. The emissary pressed upon the editor a sum of money sufficient to keep the paper going for several months and secured in return a promissory note which would enable the banker to seize his opponent's plant at any time he might desire.

The editor's daughter left town to visit her aunt in New York, while the banker received a letter from the guilty cashier, who calmly stated that instead of going to South America he had stayed in New York and that unless the banker met him in New York the following day that he would confess to the police. The banker left for New York at once. The editor's daughter visited the park with her little cousin. The youngster was the proud possessor of a small camera and insisted upon taking the girl's picture. Then he wandered off and took other snapshots of famous spots in the park, one of these chanced to also show the banker handing money to his confederate, for the two men had met in the park for their conference. All would have been well, but the boy, putting down his camera for a moment, mislaid it, and later picked up a camera which he thought was his, but belonged to a young man who was taking pictures in the park with a friend. The two cameras were mixed, and when the films were developed there was bewilderment all around.

The small boy was much disgusted, but his girl cousin found much to admire in the young man's picture on the film, while the young westener who beheld her picture was much impressed. The girl left for home, and the young westerner saw her just as she was about to pass through the train gates. He rushed forward, but the gates shut, and the guard said he didn't know the girl or the station she was bound for. When he found her, the picture of the banker handing money to his accomplice was sufficient to save the old editor from losing his newspaper and to secure punishment for the guilty men. The young westerner's wife isn't a bit jealous of "the girl in the picture," because she's that girl!

BEAUTY.

UNCLE HECK, BY HECK (Aug. 28).—Bill Jones and his wife live with Mrs. Jones' mother and old maid sister. A letter comes to Bill from Uncle Heck. He is coming to pay his nephew a visit, but he "haint goin' to spend a durned red cent." Naturally, none is enthusiastic about the coming of the tightwad. In due time, Uncle Heck arrives and goes to Bill's office, bedecked in all the sartorial splendors of the small town sport. Uncle Heck flirts with Bill's stenographer, and she nearly laughs herself into hysterics over his make-up.

Later, Uncle Heck departs to run around town. He imagines himself a regular Beau Brummel and when a smartly dressed woman smiles at his appearance, he flatters himself she is flirting with him. He speaks to her and is soundly buffeted by a hand-box which the lady carries. Another woman laughs as Uncle Heck goes by and he is smartly belabored with a parasol. He little dreams that his assailant is Bill's sister-in-law. He attempts to flirt a third time but the object of his attentions happens to be Bill's wife, who has him arrested. Uncle Heck calls up Bill, who comes and bails him out. Bill persuades his uncle to go to his (Bill's) home and wait until he can arrive.

When Uncle Heck is ushered in, the ladies nearly collapse and Uncle Heck is perilously near apoplexy. Upon recovery, Uncle Heck offers his entire bank roll if the women will promise not to tell Bill of his uncle's flirtatious tendencies. Bill comes on the scene just as Uncle Heck is dividing the money. Uncle Heck tells Bill he was only joking about "not spending a durned red cent." To prove this he pushes some money into Bill's hand and Bill jumps to the conclusion that Uncle Heck is, after all, a gosh-dinged sport.

GREEN APPLES (Aug. 31).—Herbert Astor is preparing a thesis, and, seeking quiet he moves into a country bungalow, that he may give his best efforts to his work. The bungalow he selects is adjacent to the home of Madeline Selfridge, who seeks to be a philanthropist. She corrals half-a-hundred newsboys and gives them an outing at her place. Goodby, peace and quiet for Herbert Astor, for the young urchins from the city make the welkin ring with their shouts and laughter. The boys discover an apple tree bending low with unripe fruit. The horde of youths descend upon the tree and they eat their fill of green apples. That night, there are acute pains in each of the newsboys' tummies. A hurry call is sent for a doctor. Young Astor, who is a physician, responds. Pains are assuaged and quiet restored.

But in the meantime, Astor has formed an acquaintance with Madeline. From that time on "the doctor guy" becomes the hero of the boys, as he is with them daily. He has forgotten his thesis and he and Madeline are together daily. Then Astor is hurt when he falls while helping the boys explore a rugged bit of nearby country. The youths carry him with all haste to Madeline's house, where she does what she can to relieve his suffering. Convalescent, Astor discovers his love for Madeline and makes it known to her. What follows insures ensuing happy summers for the newsies and ensuing happy years for Madeline and Astor.

AMERICAN.

THE DIVINE DECREE (Two Parts—Aug. 30).—The families of Darby and Burson live together in a squalid tenement. Both Darby and Burson ply the same trade. They are housebreakers. The two work always together. Darby has a daughter, Dora, Burson a son, Tom. The children are playmates, and ignorant of their fathers' occupation. Dora's mother dies and the girl is taken to the country and placed in the care of Aunt Jane. Then comes a day when luck goes against Darby and Burson. They are caught red-handed and sent to prison.

Fifteen years elapse. Dora, grown to a beautiful young girl, lives in the belief that her father is seeking his fortune in Alaska. Tom, too, has grown, but the environment of the tenement has made him a thief.

At length, Burson and Darby are released from prison. Darby seeks Dora at the farm house. The reunion of father and daughter is joyful. Burson returns to his old tenement, where he urges his son Tom to forsake the life of crime which he is leading. Tom laughs at his old father. Tom is in the act of committing a crime when there appears to him a vision of his little playmate of years gone by. The vision has the power of dissuading the youth from a criminal career. He starts in search of Dora, whom he finds in the little home in the country, and the old affections are aroused.

THE SPIRIT OF ADVENTURE (Sept. 3).—Dick Barrows, a young bachelor, believes that the spirit of adventure is dead. He chances to look out of his window, where his apartment overlooks a corner of a park. He sees a woman beautifully gowned and as he watches, a man, villainously black-bearded, seizes her by the arm. The woman attempts to free herself in vain. She draws a revolver, but the quick hand of her assailant snatches it from her grasp. The woman is seized and bundled into a waiting taxicab.

Dick Barrows rushes to the scene of action. The taxicab has gone. But on the grass Dick discovers a dainty vanity-box which the woman had dropped in her struggles. The box contains an assortment of rare and priceless jewels. Dick is convinced that there has been foul play. He notifies the police and again looks out of the window. The taxicab has returned. The bearded man is searching for something. Again Dick rushes to the scene, arriving as the taxicab is speeding away. Dick follows on foot, running as fast as he can. Then he seizes a small boy's bicycle and pursues the fleeing taxi. It stops in front of a skyscraper. The man alights and hurriedly enters. Dick follows. In a room high over the street, he comes upon the bearded man and the smartly gowned woman. She is handcuffed.

Dick is impelled with a desire to rescue her,

Lapin's Musical Poster Frame

(Patent applied for)

Without a shadow of a doubt this clever device will practically pay for itself in a few weeks from the new patrons you will secure while frame is in use.

As shown in illustration the device is a beautiful designed frame with an upper name plate for the name of your theatre, and will hold one-sheet poster, announcement signs, photos, etc.

The cabinet extension seen in rear of frame is provided with musical electric bells which produce a really musical treat and is played directly from contact-board attached to your piano and while your pianist plays for the show inside of your theatre the bells play the same melodies outside in the lobby frame.

With Mr. Lapin's Piano keyboard contact device the wire leads are distributed directly from the contact-board above mentioned and extended to their respective positions on the binding posts on the bell frame regardless of distance between the two terminals.

The bells are played simultaneously with the fingering of the piano keys without changing the regular playing position of the piano in any way, while an electric switch combined with the soft pedal of piano enables the performer to continue or eliminate the playing of bells at will.

The tonal quality is loud, sweet and clear, and surpasses any electric musical bell on the market.

The power is derived from dry-cell batteries incased in base of piano and invisible, the up-keep of same being next to nothing per year. The bells are also well adapted for cabarets, dance halls, restaurants, cafés, amusement parks, skating rinks, etc.

We offer the BELL POSTER FRAME at an astonishing low figure in order to quickly introduce them. Send for special introductory offer.

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

PATHE NEWS NO. 65 (Aug. 13).

Pathe's Paris Fashions—Afternoon wear. (In natural colors.) 1. Loose fitting coats and high collars are all the vogue. 2. A deep shade of green is much worn by well dressed women. 3. Startling effects in colored checks are noticeable.

West Roxbury, Mass.—Scotch lassies in kilts make a picturesque show at the big outing of Boston Scotsmen at Caledonia Grove. Subtitle—1. Nimble dancers contest for prizes.

Richfield, Cal.—An entire passenger train on the Santa Fe Railroad is deluged with burning oil and destroyed when it collides head on with a runaway oil car. Subtitle—1. A wrecking crew makes frantic efforts to remove the burning oil car from the tracks.

Plattsburg, N. Y.—Armored automobiles arrive at the military camp at which business men of New York, Philadelphia and Boston are learning to be soldiers. Subtitles—1. The amateur soldiers are given their equipment. 2. The third man in the center line is Mayor Mitchel, of New York. 3. Learning the manual of arms. 4. Dudley Field Malone, Collector of the Port of New York (right), talks with some camp officers.

New York City—A golden auto caravan, carrying more than $50,000,000, consigned to J. P. Morgan & Co. as part payment for war supplies purchased by that firm for Great Britain, arrives at the U. S. Sub-Treasury, where its wealth is deposited. Subtitles—1. The mounted police who guard the fold have difficulty in clearing the streets. 2. About $20,000,000 of the consignment is in gold coin packed in small boxes. 3. The gold is carried into the Sub-Treasury on small trucks.

Birmingham, England.—"A cartridge made by a wife may save a husband's life" is the watchword of the patriotic women who have taken their soldier husbands' places in the great ammunition factories here. Subtitles—By almost a year's practice in the making of ammunition, the women workers have acquired much skill. This is how the explosive is placed in the shell. 2. Fixing the bullet.

New York City—This is absolutely the latest fashion. Gaze on this venturesome miss as she blithely trips through Central Park with her hosiery rolled down over the tops of her dainty shoes. Subtitle—1. There are some people who may not approve of this method of encasing one's limbs, but it's comfortable—take the young lady's word for that!

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Mayor Armstrong, of this city, loosens a ribbon thereby officially opening the $1,000,000 New Point Bridge, which connects Manchester and the lower Northside with the "Point" district. Subtitle—1. A parade passes over the bridge after the structure is opened to traffic.

New York City—Pounding the sidewalk with their nightsticks and blowing their whistles are becoming obsolete methods of signaling for the New York police. Now they're learning the "wig-wag" with flags from a Navy Department instructor. Subtitles—1. The police boats are most formidable now with their new rapid fire guns. 2. Testing a police boat searchlight in the shadow of lower Manhattan's skyscrapers.

London, England.—More than 4,000 troops march through Fleet street on their way to a remarkable outdoor prayer service conducted by the Bishop of London on the steps of St. Paul's Cathedral on the anniversary of Britain's entry into the European war.

AMUSEMENTS

New Orleans, La. July 27, 1915.

Mr. C. Douglas Danford,
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Sir:

We have your favor of the 19th. The results that we have obtained from the Arc Controller which we recently installed in the Tudor are such that we have another one on the way for that same theatre and have ordered controllers for the Trianon and Bijou Dream which will make six controllers in all which we will have in use very shortly.

We find that a great saving in carbons is accomplished by this machine and through the fact that we do not have any freezing of the carbons you can readily realize that it is a saving on the electric bill not saying anything at all about the satisfactory light that is always maintained on the screen. We know that you will be well satisfied if you install this controller on your machines.

We trust this will be of value to you.

Yours very truly,
Josiah Pearce & Sons.

AN INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS (Part Six Pathe—On the same reel with "Colonel Heeza Liar at the Bat"—Aug. 30).—The carrier pigeon is shown here in close up views. It's a very exclusive bird, and its discourtesy amounts almost to violence when birds of less breeding try to chirp up an acquaintance. It lays but two eggs at a time, which, after seventeen days, are hatched. When the fledglings are a few days old the pigeon fancier places a ring on each of them for identification. When the little ones are old enough to fly their training begins. They are taught to come out and fly around when a flag is displayed. When their exercises are over they fly back and greedily peck their supper.

PICTURESQUE FRENCH GUINEA (West Africa) (Globe—Aug. 30).—On the west coast of Africa, between Sierra Leone and Portuguese Guinea, lies the valuable colony, French Guinea. While the coast lands are low, eighty miles inland the mountain scenery is superb. A series of magnificent falls is here shown, churned into feathery whiteness like crumbling chalk, roaring and rushing to the river bed below. Another scene shows a background of dense and luxuriant vegetation, through which the diverging waters may be seen forcing their turbulent way in a series of smaller falls and cascades into a rock-terraced pool. Another feature is the giant rocks being worn away through the ages, slowly but surely by the persistent attack of the current.

THE MARCENAY FISH PONDS (On same reel as foregoing).—In the beginning of the winter months the ponds are run dry, only a small channel in the middle being left. The fish are then gathered into this. When the sluice is opened the water of the pond runs out and carries with it over 1,000 pounds of fish. Any fish which may have resisted the current are pushed in by means of a net. When all the fish have been placed in the preserves they are taken out with nets as required, the rest allowed to feed and grow fat for the "ultimate consumer." A large net haul, and a closeup view of two fine specimens of carp are also shown.

THE DOCTOR'S SECRET (Multiple Parts).—Beatrice Morgan's father, Prof. Morgan, discovered a formula for the cure of cancer, which formula is known only, besides himself, to his daughter. His assistant, Jackson, is desirous of obtaining the formula and when caught in the act of trying to steal it he kills his master. Her father's death preys heavily upon Beatrice's mind, and she takes a trip to Paris. Jackson, disguised, and his sweetheart, Violet, follow her. Beatrice is fatally injured in an automobile accident upon her arrival in Paris, the consequence of which is that she loses her memory. At the hospital, Violet applies for a position as a trained nurse and attends Beatrice, hoping that way to get possession of the secret formula.

Some time later, Dr. Heppel, under whose treatment is Beatrice, takes her to his mother's home to convalesce. In her sleep one night she walks into the laboratory and writes the formula upon the blackboard. Jackson, who is on the spot, is about to obtain his aim, when he is arrested by the police, summoned by Dr. Heppel, who thought burglars had entered. Upon the sight of her father's murderer Beatrice's mind suddenly clears, and subsequently she is happily united with the doctor.

THE WHEELS OF JUSTICE (Vitagraph—Four Parts—Aug. 23).—At a fashionable reception, Ralph Brooks falls under the influence of Rita, the designing wife of John Reynolds, a wealthy broker. By relating untrue tales of brutality on the part of her husband, she awakens the young man's sympathy, and this gradually develops into a mad infatuation which neither his mother nor Julia, his sweetheart, seem able to dispel. Rita and Ralph decide to elope and she robs her husband's safe before leaving. "Red" Hall, a crook, enters the house and sees her at the safe. Reynolds discovers his wife and in a furious quarrel, is shot by Rita. She sees Hall, and at the point of her gun, the desperate woman holds him there while she calls the police, intending to accuse him of killing her husband. Ralph arrives and experiences a revulsion of feeling towards the woman. He spurns her, and enraged, she orders the burglar to escape, then turns the gun on Ralph. The police arrive and on her accusation, arrest him for the crime. Her testimony sends him to prison for twenty years. There he is the means of reforming his cellmate, "Tug" Riley. Later, Tug and Ralph escape from prison and reach the city in safety. At the same time, several other convicts escape and seize an automobile. Their pursuers, the keepers, telephone ahead to the bridge-tender, who opens the draw. The car plunges into the river and its occupants are drowned. Meanwhile, Rita, being blackmailed by Hall, is ordered to hold a masquerade ball. Hall plans a big robbery and secures Riley's pretended assistance. In a sensational manner, Riley turns the tables on Hall and the crook is "caught with the goods." Rita breaks down and confesses all. Ralph is taken back to prison with Riley and Rita but is later pardoned and happily reunited with his mother and sweetheart.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 16—"The Path of Peril"—Two Parts—Aug. 16).—Through the tunnel of the mine went the dingy little electric motor, bearing Esther and Quabba, the hunchback. Behind them, blundering through the darkness, came Luke Lovell, the gypsy outlaw, and the ne'er-do-well, Blair Stanley. While this was taking place Vivian Marston, feigning unconsciousness, was floating upon the sea. It was a desperate chance she had taken. She had done well, she thought, to take the path of peril to find the diamond by throwing herself in the arms of Arthur Stanley, alias "John Powell." So Vivian sighed with vague contentment and clung, seemingly unconscious, to Arthur, as they were hauled into the lifeboat. Meanwhile, the motor of the little mine engine upon which Esther and Quabba were riding stopped. Quabba tried to bring his knowledge of the workings of street pianos into repairing a balky electric motor.

"Do be careful!" cautioned Esther, pointing to a sign at the side, which read: "Danger! Blast ready!" The hunchbank worked feverishly to get the motor working again. Suddenly Esther heard footsteps, and cried, "They are coming." A murderous look came into Quabba's eyes, as he murmured, "This time I kill them. Wait and see."

Pushing and panting, he drove the heavy little machine down the tracks. Then he rushed back under the electric light, and seizing the blast battery by its leather handle, and uncoiling the loops of wire, he slipped back through the darkness, calling in a whisper to Esther to crouch in concealment with him behind the motor. Luke and Blair pressed forward. Quabba, a hundred yards away, shielded by the motor, drove the plunger of the battery down. There was a deafening crash. Whatever had been the matter with the motor, the jar of the explosion had settled the loosened wire back in place. When Quabba and Esther clambered aboard, it set off like a live thing. Far, far ahead gleamed daylight. That night Esther and Quabba told their story by the fire in the shack of the kindly mine boss. A search party, sent back to investigate the fate of Lovell and Blair, had returned without having found any trace of the girl's enemies.

Meanwhile, on Santa Barbara Bay, Vivian Marston reclined in a steamer chair, piled with pillows, upon the deck of Arthur's yacht. Arthur bent over the woman and murmured:

"I would give you anything in the world!" She replied that she would like to have the diamond from the sky.

Marmaduke Smythe dreamed that a savage leered at him through a monocle. Even as he was about to scalp Marmaduke, the latter was conscious that his would-be murderer was attired in a faultless dress-coat. Then the lawyer woke with a shriek, and discharged his gun into the thicket. When he investigated, there lay the corpse of his foreman, a great green frog. And nearby gleamed upon the bewildered sight of the English barrister the diamond from the sky.

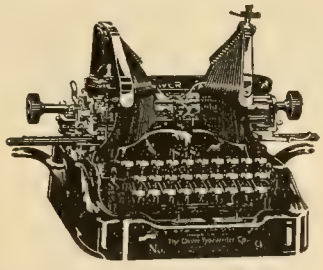
A New Model Typewriter

The OLIVER No 9
The Standard Visible Writer



BUY IT NOW!

Yes, the crowning typewriter triumph is here!

It is just out—and comes years before experts expected it. For makers have striven a lifetime to attain this ideal machine. And Oliver has won again, as we scored when we gave the world its first visible writing.

There is truly no other typewriter on earth like this new Oliver "9." Think of touch so light that the tread of a kitten will run the keys!

17 Cents a Day! Remember this brand-new Oliver "9" is the greatest value ever given in a typewriter. It has all our previous special inventions—visible writing, automatic spacer, 6½-ounce touch—plus the Optional Duplex Shift, Selective Color Attachment and all these other new-day features.

Yet we have decided to sell it to everyone everywhere on our famous payment plan—17 cents a day! Now every user can easily afford to have the world's crack visible writer, with the famous PRINTYPE, that writes like print, included FREE if desired.

TODAY—WRITE FOR FULL DETAILS and be among the first to know about this marvel of writing machines. See why typists, employers, and individuals everywhere are flocking to the Oliver. Just mail a postal at once. No obligation. It's a pleasure for us to tell you about it.

CAUTION!

The new-day advances that come alone on this machine are all controlled by Oliver. Even our own previous models—famous in their day—never had the Optional Duplex Shift.

It puts the whole control of 84 letters and characters in the little fingers of the right and left hands. And it lets you write them all with only 28 keys, the least to operate of any standard typewriter made.

Thus writers of all other machines can immediately run the Oliver Number "9" with more speed and greater ease.

WARNING!

This brilliant new Oliver comes at the old-time price. It costs no more than lesser makes—now out-of-date when compared with this discovery.

For while the Oliver's splendid new features are costly—we have equalized the added expense to us by simplifying construction.

Resolve right now to see this great achievement before you spend a dollar for any typewriter. If you are using some other make you will want to see how much more this one does.

If you are using an Oliver, it naturally follows that you want the finest model.

THE OLIVER TYPEWRITER CO., 310 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

You can rent an Oliver Typewriter 3 months for $4.00.

Your Pictures Are Judged on the Screen

Whether you are the owner in the box-office or the operator, remember that pictures are judged on the screen. Poor pictures drive away those who would gladly patronize you. Bigger profits result from better pictures; and these are guaranteed when you use

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses

No matter how long or short the throw, our lenses lose none of the detail in the picture, out to the very edges. That is a test too severe for a poor lens. Yet your patrons pay to see all the picture.

The Edison and Nicholas Power Machines are regularly equipped with Bausch and Lomb lenses. You can secure them through any film exchange.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

THERE'S A REASON

for doubt on technical points when authoritative information for the Exhibitor, Manager or Operator can't be obtained. The contents of the books herewith advertised place all necessary information and practical assistance within reach of every reader. For instance, every weekly issue of the contains an unequalled fund of information in regard to every angle of the moving picture art. Its staff is an aggregation of the best posted men in the industry who have devoted years to a study of the requirements of all our readers. Its correspondents are located in all the principal centers and its columns contain the most complete data possible. In a class by itself as a trade paper for every intelligent student of moving picture production and exhibition.

F. H. Richardson the recognized expert on projection, is working on a new edition of his "THE MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK FOR MANAGERS AND OPERATORS," which will be a larger and better edition, containing fully illustrated articles on the subject of projection. This will be the standard textbook for managers and operators for many years.

J. H. Hallberg well known as an authority on electricity, has compiled a 278-page fully illustrated book, entitled "MOTION PICTURE ELECTRICITY," containing up-to-the-minute information on picture theatre electrical equipment. Also necessary tables and practical advice to the operator. A revision of all his Electrical Talks published some years ago in one of the trade papers. The price, $2.50.

Epes W. Sargent is author of "TECHNIQUE OF THE PHOTOPLAY," an exhaustive treatise on the writing of the Photoplay, containing sample scripts and complete detailed instruction for experienced as well as inexperienced writers. Price, $2.00. All published by

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURES

America's most distinguished Actor

IN an elaborate production of that Great Broadway Success

"Business is Business"

A masterpiece of Film Play . . being a dramatization of the Famous Parisian Play by Octave Mirabeau In . . SIX . . extraordinary . . . acts

IN "Business Is Business," that famous old French play by Octave Mirabeau, one of the greatest dramatists of France, the Universal has provided Mr. Goodwin with a vehicle big enough to give every movie patron a genuine theatrical feast. Few features can equal this in settings, in story, in plot, or in cast. The acting is far and away ahead of the average feature.

Where many pictures depend for their "greatness" upon a star's reputation, or upon the appeal of a well known Broadway play, the Broadway Universal Features are genuine FEATURES with actors who can act; with stories or plays really worth producing; with the greatest directors in the business; and with locations and settings that give the production a finish rarely equalled and never surpassed.

Write or wire your Exchange for full particulars as to how you can get this and all other great Broadway Universal Features ON THE REGULAR UNIVERSAL PROGRAM at a slight advance in cost. This is a business proposition. Don't overlook it.

HOBART

BOSWORTH

In Joseph Medill Patterson's Great Broadway Success

"A little brother of the rich"

IF the wonderful art of Hobart Bosworth continues to expand in the future as it has since that great actor joined the Universal forces and began to enjoy the marvelous facilities of the Universal Studios at Universal City, Cal., a star greater than all preceding stars will illumine the film world.

TRIED AND PROVEN: Proof of the excellence of Hobart Bosworth's Universal Productions is given in this beautiful film version and elaborate staging of Joseph Medill Patterson's great Broadway play, "A Little Brother of the Rich."

Unusual too is the great cast assembled for this truly metropolitan production. Hobart Henly plays the name part. Jane Novak, blonde, beautiful, and full of the fire of genius, plays the heroine.

EXHIBITORS—book this class of Broadway plays being released every week on the Regular Universal Program, at a slight advance in cost over the entire Program. Write or wire your Exchange instantly for full particulars. It gives you the opportunity for coining money that you have been waiting for. Write now. Tomorrow may be too late.

Unfortunately the impression is abroad that Hobart Bosworth is making pictures for film concerns other than the Universal.
Mr. Bosworth wishes it distinctly understood that his time and talents are entirely and exclusively devoted to acting in and producing pictures for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.
Exhibitors—Seize this wonderful opportunity to inform your patrons that if they wish to see the latest and greatest work of this great and popular star, the incomparable Bosworth, they must see UNIVERSAL BROADWAY FEATURES. All other Bosworth pictures are old, past releases. Take advantage of this and tell your patrons at every opportunity.

Featuring the Eminent Lincoln Authority

BENJAMIN CHAPIN

September 4th, 1915.

Dear Mr. Exhibitor:

Have you followed the publicity campaign now being conducted by the Charter Features Corporation? Do you realize what this world-wide publicity means to you and your theatre?

Every child attending school wants to see Lincoln, and the only way they can see him is by seeing the world-renowned Benjamin Chapin portray Lincoln as no other man can portray him. As an adult the interest and desire to see Lincoln is still there, and every man, woman and child will be grateful to you for affording opportunity of seeing Benjamin Chapin portray Lincoln. Can you afford to miss this great opportunity of exhibiting this wonderful character in your theatre?

We wish to state the Chapin-Lincoln Cycle is not a serial. Each release is to be a distinct feature in itself. Each release is to be an incident of great importance during the life of Lincoln, and a story woven from that incident, a story of such strength and magnitude that each release is a wonderful photo drama, that has all the qualities of a play, a play that keeps the interest, that educates, and most of all, entertains.

Now, Mr. Exhibitor, having in mind the foregoing facts, you should arrange your bookings so that you can exhibit these wonderful pictures in your houses.

Faithfully yours,

CHARTER FEATURES CORPORATION.

LASKY

What do they mean by "LASKY STANDARD"?

It is a phrase you see frequently in written criticisms of the Lasky photoplay productions.

It occurs continually in special articles about the Lasky organization in the daily press and monthly publications.

It has come to have a special meaning in the photodramatic world.

What?

W. Stephen Bush, famous photoplay critic of the Moving Picture World, in one of his laudatory criticisms, said: "Of the settings and photography and types I can say no more than that they are up to the best LASKY STANDARD."

Again, the same writer in another criticism said: "I do not hesitate to say that this is one of the best samples of the LASKY SCHOOL of motion picture art. When at its best this NEW SCHOOL beggars description."

LASKY

What the "LASKY STANDARD" means!

It means a new era in the photoplay industry when the combination of efficient effort and artistic dramatic sense produces photoplays that are consistently the BEST IN THE WORLD.

It means TO EXHIBITORS a positive guarantee that Lasky productions never fail to please.

It means TO THE PHOTOPLAY-GOING PUBLIC from the Atlantic to the Pacific; from northern regions to placid antipodes, unvariable quality, cleanliness of theme and clearness of action.

It means the presentation before millions of persons every week of photoplays based on world famous dramas and stars whose names are household words.

It means PAST success, PRESENT success and FUTURE success.

THE Triangle Film Corporation will distribute productions made under the supervision of D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett. Every production will be of the very highest type and each will feature well known stars of the screen and of the stage, whose names will be announced from time to time.

Two five-reel dramas and two two-reel Keystones will be released each week.

As model theatres, indicating the way in which productions of this character can best be shown, the company will itself operate one theatre in several of its most important distributing points; such, for example, as the Knickerbocker in New York. These theatres, in which the prices charged will range from $2.00 down, will be of great service to exhibitors. Aside from the larger cities, it will not be the policy of the company to operate its own houses.

The first week's program, which will have an advance appearance during September, will consist of one five-reel drama produced under the supervision of Mr. Griffith, featuring Douglas Fairbanks; a five-reel drama produced under the supervision of Mr. Ince, featuring Frank Keenan, and a Keystone produced under the supervision of Mr. Sennett, featuring Raymond Hitchcock.

3-Act Feature of the Open Sea

"What Happened on the Berbuda"

Place Pat O'Malley in such a lusty role as mate of a mutinous ship and we have him cast in a part which nature moulded him for—clean cut, manly and vigorously convincing. There is added interest in this splendid feature in that the ship used was the actual German ship, the Magdeburg, which has figured so theatrically in this present bloody war. However, the story has nothing to do with war, but is filled with that atmosphere of romance and adventure on the high seas which the public devours greedily whether it be in book, song or in pictures.

Augustus Phillips makes a swaggering, bloodthirsty villain while the appealing Gladys Hulette's gentleness contrasts admirably in the wireless struggle and the clever "dope" dealing trick. Direction, Langdon West who revels in the melodramatic. Friday, September 10th. About 3000 feet.

Facts and Comments

THE responsible exhibitors who have a substantial interest in the welfare of the motion picture will not let up in their campaign against vulgarity in so-called comic pictures. A number of letters are on our desk breathing indignation against the portrayal of offensive personal habits supposed to be "funny." A friend and reader writes to us from Boston to protest against "comedies" showing certain "comedians" in the disgusting act of removing vermin from their persons in full view of the audience. The commonest instinct of decency ought to prevent such exhibitions. Their effect on any audience other than that of a Bowery lodging house is simply nauseating. There are screen performers who, strange to say, cannot comprehend this plain fact, even when producers and directors do all in their power to save them from themselves. What they need is not a censor, but an agent of the Board of Health armed with disinfecting artillery.

THE opposition of certain constituted authorities against kinematographic records of the Eastland disaster has awakened some of our esteemed contemporaries to the parallel danger in censorship of the press. A newspaper in Western Pennsylvania in criticising the attempted censoring of the pictures of the Eastland catastrophe declares that "the censors do not yet seem to have arrived at the truth that the motion picture when it portrays incidents of every day life is news just as surely as anything that is printed in a newspaper. The film is an engine of publicity of propaganda and truth with immense possibilities. It may be as dangerous to curb it as to curb the press, the platform or the pulpit." Comments like these are getting common in the daily press. The light is breaking.

MEN engaged in the show business cannot afford to impose their notions and their tastes on others. The very variety of tastes helps to make showmen prosperous. As a library ministers to all kinds and grades of taste and intelligence, the screen seeks to satisfy every legitimate difference of taste and opinion. There is such a thing, however, as pandering to depraved and prurient appetites from which the motion picture has on the whole been remarkably free. To advertise "the heroine of an unlawful passion" as one would advertise some vicious beast in a circus is to invite the censor to do his worst. In a recent "ad." of an ultra-sensational and overspiced "feature" the reckless writer excuses and explains the mawkish theme and its shocking treatment by comparing the weird concoction to the Greek drama. We protest. None of the great Greek playwrights has ever stooped to pandering.

ALMOST the entire press of the state condemns the work of the constitutional Convention at Albany as reactionary and useless. This is the same convention which has refused to give a full and fair hearing to the advocates of the constitutional amendment intended to enfranchise the motion picture and put it on the same footing as the press. Let the moving picture men help to defeat the work of the convention at the polls in November. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has given an indication of its plan of campaign and will have more to say on this subject in the very near future. Here is a chance to demonstrate our power to mould and influence public opinion.

IN THANKING our readers for their frequent suggestions and other communications of a helpful nature we take this occasion to say that whatever is of interest to the exhibitor must needs interest THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. Exigencies of space often forbid the publication in full of all the letters which come to us from friendly pens, but the author may be assured that we always try to "pass on" to our readers whatever they contain of interest and usefulness. We hope that our readers will always maintain this attitude of co-operation toward THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. This journal aims to be a true reflection of the best sentiments and of the most progressive tendencies in every branch of the industry. We aim to be a repository of helpful hints besides being a faithful and prompt recorder of the news in filmdom. These objects we cannot attain without the continued co-operation on the part of our friends and readers. Whatever suggestion you have of possible benefit to others, whatever complaint or grievance or burden you may wish to publish, whatever remedies you may be able to advance—THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is always happy to print what you wish to say.

Sounding Big Notes*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

FEEL the pulse of the national heart—for what is it throbbing? Tremendous problem of the present and of many years to come is that of international relations. Whatever may be the pretext of war, we all know that one real cause of it is greed, the desire to acquire through an exhibition of superior force. A nation may be ashamed of its motive, it may loudly shout that a war obviously undertaken for conquest is purely defensive, but the principal object sought is an acquisition of territory along with such other property as may be obtained by loot or indemnity. Behind the gilded robbery and theft is a desire for power on the part of ruling classes and for greater revenues through taxation than could be obtained in times of peace. By winning a war, the sovereign who is losing his grip on place may pretend that he is responding to a popular demand and he may actuallly win the gratitude of the very people he is sacrificing.

Can a weak body of men, or can an unprepared nation, abolish war by non-resistance? Is the spirit of aggression to be so easily quenched in the hearts of men? How about the powerful impulse of protection that causes a male to flame with anger when one he holds dear is attacked? Will any vigorous nation remain passive when her vital interests are threatened? Is it not an error of unthinking peace advocates that peace can be maintained except by the warning of strong military preparation? In possession of a resourceful country of our own, we do not covet the poorer territory south of the Rio Grande, yet do we not honestly believe that the best thing that could happen to Mexico would be annexation to our own more enlightened and better organized form of government? Could we not end war by making it?

Can relations between two countries be made peaceful by treaty where there is no other responsibility in the signatures to such treaty than that of an absolute monarch held unaccountable for his acts by his people? Of what value is a treaty between one great sovereign nation, whose people have demonstrated their high honor and ability in regulating their own affairs without the interference of a hereditary class, and an inferior nation, whose people publish their own incapacity and lack of conscience by not asserting the principles of self-control? Are not those men, whether they be called socialists or by any other name, who are struggling to throw a beam of light into the dull minds of their fellows on the Continent of Europe, who are risking their lives and fortunes to assert the rights of humankind over the ridiculous "divine rights" of ruling families, the greatest heroes of modern times? They are sounding big notes that will ring and reverberate down the corridors of centuries to come.

Those who are striving to demonstrate the value of high character, as opposed to the dominance of hereditary place, are finding support in the ranks of contending armies among the Poles, whose leaders have more than once attempted to set up an elective form of government, to substitute common justice for imaginary consequence, to produce a government by compact on the only principles by which government of any kind can endure and hold the respect of enlightened people. Some great heroes are bound to emerge from the bitter struggle, men and women who may lose all that they hold dear in attempting to replace a reign of terror with that of reason. "For a nation to love liberty," said Lafayette, "it is sufficient that she knows it; and to be free it is sufficient that she wills it."

We may be proud of ourselves and of our country, but are we entirely grateful—have we given due recognition to one of the mightest factors in our progress? Turn back over the leaves of memory to the dark days of childhood struggle—who watched over each one of us in the formative period, before our tiny souls burst from the bud into full flower? To most of us the name of "mother" rises like a spirit of tenderness, softly enveloping us with moral restraint, arousing whatever is noble within us, guiding our errant footsteps to the end of existence, our sweetest memory, our finest inspiration. Why should we deny her anything in the world that we enjoy? Why should we deprive her of any advantage she might wish to use for the benefit of children and therefore to the benefit of humankind? Though she could not be better at heart, she might well be accorded any and every privilege now given to mankind alone.

You can not soil a true woman by broadening her knowledge and her experience—you can not tarnish pure gold—you can only brighten her and enlarge her sphere of usefulness. Wherever you find a man of strong character you will find a mother of beautiful character, one who has not only given of her body to the making of God's creatures, but one whose splendid spirit has been communicated to the child during moments, hours and years of exhaustless affection. Every one of those moments, hours and years have her thoughts been concentrated on the little beings she has brought into the world, who are benefited more by her tireless care that it is intelligent. What is there to distrust about that voice we have all fondly trusted that he should silence it where the poorest of us has the right to speak? This nation will never be one of complete freedom until we liberate its mothers.

That the lamp of the soul may never go out women should be given all that strengthens mind as well as body—their vestal watch keeps the spiritual light aflame. We must be fair to her who has the power to make this a much more splendid world through the children she brings into it—the building of their characters is so largely in her hands that what they receive is usually proportioned to what she is given. She must be fortified for motherhood long before her gentle heart yields to its natural impulses, made physically fit that family life shall be one of happiness instead of disappointment and sorrow, made mentally fit that he may illumine the minds of those she controls through affection. There is more than one big note to be sounded on the subject of the suitable preparation of the mother sex for a mission that may well be called divine.

Feel the pulse of the national heart—it throbs responsive to the idea of sounding the capacity of children that they may be benefited to the fullest possible extent. Millions of parents are deeply interested in discovering such a course of training as shall develop strength and beauty in nice balance with such a mental growth as shall assure a high place for their children. They are giving more and more attention to that subject. The method need not be suggested—that might prove dangerous—but the necessity of improved methods may be strongly indicated in the pictured story.

A Duty to Our Readers

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD within the last few months has felt obliged to reject many thousand dollars' worth of advertising. Our sense of obligation in these cases is identical with what we conceive to be our duty to the readers of this paper.

In our judgment every contract between the advertiser and the publisher of a newspaper or a magazine vitally affects the rights of a third party. This third party is the reader. In the light of our experience and our knowledge of conditions in this industry, the duty to supervise all advertising matter offered for publication is much clearer and greater in a trade journal than in a daily newspaper. The reader of the representative journal of the motion picture industry is obliged to depend to no small extent on the substantial honesty and accuracy of the advertising pages.

Even the daily press has outlived the notion that it is not responsible for its advertisements. The Federal Government has stimulated its perception by making the publication of certain advertisements a penal offense. Today a great revival of old-fashioned newspaper ethics is taking place among the reputable journals of the country. The patent medicine made and sold without a conscience, has no longer free and easy access to the press of the country. Many other articles have become contraband pursuant to the better policy of advertising men everywhere.

Every one of our readers naturally discounts the advertiser's extravagant praise of his own product. Even in this respect, however, there has been an improvement.

Most of our advertisers today recognize the value of simple and moderate language. They realize that the reader desires information. The mere embellishment of such information cannot be considered misleading. It is but right for the advertiser to be enthusiastic and confident about articles which he expects other people to pay for.

Not all the advertising matter which we have felt obliged to refuse was objectionable on moral grounds. Our policy to reject all advertisements of films of a vicious and degrading character is well known by this time. Every friend of the motion picture is as zealous for the good name of the screen as we want to be. That is why we feel confident that our policy in this respect meets with the unqualified approval and support of the best elements within the industry.

We want to let our readers know that a good deal of the advertising matter offered and rejected grew out of unfair competition and out of an obvious desire to mislead. It is our plain duty to guard our readers against misrepresentation. While we cannot undertake to give a legal guarantee for the literal accuracy of every advertisement which appears in our columns, we do feel that we have a right to insist upon a reasonable presumption in favor of the substantial truth of the advertisement.

We would not like to see our readers invited to do business with concerns which we know to be unreliable. The founder of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD quickly and carefully investigated every complaint against misleading advertisements. Whenever the complaint was found to be justified the offending advertiser was rigorously excluded from the columns of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD in spite of all disguises and manipulations within the letter of the law.

No one appreciates this policy of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD more keenly than the reputable advertiser who justly shares in the prestige and confidence which this publication enjoys in the opinion of its great circle of readers.

Our advertising columns will never become a dumping ground.

The mere money is not the only, nor is it the controlling credential for using the advertising columns of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

Clownish Censorship

By W. STEPHEN BUSH.

SOONER or later almost every censor qualifies as a clown. This applies to both sexes. We are not surprised therefore at the troubles brewing in and out of the censorship board in Portland, Ore. As the attack of censorship in that community seems particularly virulent and as its development has revealed some new and interesting aspects of the folly of censorial meddling, the readers of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD will probably be interested. There are women censors on the Portland board and one of them seems to have been haunted by visions of such glory as fame has bestowed on the late Carrie Nation of Kansas, and the present Maude Murray Miller of Ohio.

One of the exhibitors out there has given a very clever pen picture of this uncompromising guardian of public morals. "Your readers," he says, "really ought to know this censor. She is a high diver in the sea of human morals. She takes her headers from the tailboard of the police patrol wagon right into the middle of any packed moving picture house in Portland and emerges gasping but triumphant with the film fish which costs producers, exchanges, and exhibitors all kinds of money and trouble to get and that you've simply been dying to take a bite of."

"But that fish is not good for common people to eat," says the lady censor.

It appears that Portland has a board of censors appointed by virtue of a city ordinance. Some members of this board seem to have lucid intervals and they have attempted on and off to restrain their fellow member whenever she stood trembling on the brink of absurdity. This only served to inflame the censorial mind of the skirted member and, like the immortal knight of Cervantes, she laid about her right and left, fighting the windmills created by her own imagination.

All this, of course, was amusing enough, but there was a very serious side to the affair, as the newspapers of the city were not long in discovering.

The mad antics of this re-embodied Carrie Nation threatened to put the exhibitors of the city out of business and to deprive the public of Portland of its favorite amusement.

The newspapers, we are happy to say, without exception rallied to the support of the film men. One of the local journals speaks of "The autocratic inspector" and says: "No theater manager in Portland knows whether it is safe to advertise a moving picture production. It may be faithfully founded on a literary work that is permitted in the mails by a sedulous government, it may be openly sold in the book stores, it may be available in every public library, yet it may not pass the moving picture censorship."

Not only did the local papers take a stand friendly to the exhibiting interests, but they have freely opened their columns to such of the film men in the city as saw fit to present their side of the question to the public.

Exhibitors as well as exchange managers displayed a marked ability in pleading their cause with the public.

They have now made an appeal to the court of last resort in such matters, and that is the court of public opinion. An open meeting has been called to which the public has been urgently invited. As the public itself is greatly stirred up over the censorial interference, a lively gathering may be expected.

Triangle Opening Announced

Quality and Character of New Combination's Productions Soon to Be Revealed—Result of Careful Preparation.

JUST what is to be the quality and the character of the motion picture productions that are to be offered to the public in selected theatres and at a scale of prices approximating that of the legitimate drama is soon to be revealed. President Aitken and his associates announce that the initial showing of "Triangle" pictures will be held at the Knickerbocker Theatre, 42d street and Broadway, New York, on the evening of September 18, and to continue indefinitely.

Mabel Normand

The Knickerbocker Theatre is the first of a group of "model" theaters to be operated in the great centers of population of the United States by the Triangle Film Corporation. Later the Studebaker of Chicago, the Chestnut Street Opera House of Philadelphia will be added to the list, while negotiations are still on for similarly popular and important houses in several other cities.

This group of "model" theatres is to be operated by the Triangle Film Corporation and will form the nucleus or center of important districts to demonstrate the Triangle idea of adequate motion picture presentation. The scale of prices adopted for the "model" theaters ranges from twenty-five cents to two dollars for evening performances, and from twenty-five cents to one dollar for matinees. In this connection Mr. Aitken wishes to deny the rumor that the Triangle contemplates a rate of three dollars for its best seats. This price has been named only for private boxes and loges, and is the usual rate for such seats in all first class houses.

Scene from "My Valet," Triangle.

Plans for the subsequent exhibition of "Triangle" subjects throughout the country are now forming and contemplate the leasing of those subjects to some one first-class house in every available city—that is, in every city where sufficient patronage can be secured to maintain the "Triangle" standard of presentation, the idea being to have at least one house in a town where the highest ideals of the motion picture art may be seen in suitable settings and to proper advantage. Theatres subscribing to this service will be required to provide a stipulated orchestral accompaniment and to maintain the regular schedule of prices. Of course, in the larger centers of population more than one house will present "Triangle" pictures.

The Triangle service will come under the supervision, more directly of the executive staff of that corporation, which is composed of these well-known experts: General Manager, J. N. Naulty; Business Manager, George W. Sammis; Musical Director, William Furst; General Press Representative, Henry MacMahon; Assistant Press Representative, W. M. Powers, and Librarian, Miss Florence MacCormack.

General Manager Naulty is too well known to the motion picture men of this country to require any further introduction.

Scene from "The Lamb," Triangle.

Business Manager Sammis has filled almost every position connected with dramatic theaters of the first class; few men have a better knowledge of the management of places of amusement or amusement companies. He will have immediate charge of the Knickerbocker and a general supervision of all the "model" theatres of the corporation.

Seena Owen.

Musical Director Furst has long been connected with the best dramatic theaters in the employ of such producers as Belasco and Frohman. Under his direction all music for "Triangle" productions will be composed and adapted. As General Press Representative, Mr. MacMahon is one of the leading men of his class and has had a long and eventful career.

Having just returned from Los Angeles studios, of the Triangle, Mr. MacMahon is full of enthusiasm over the prospects of success of Triangle plans. While there he spent much time watching the work of the several companies under the direction of Ince, Griffith and Sennett and is emphatic in the statement that all three are giving their best efforts to the work in hand. At the Keystone studio many changes have been made, due to the assembling of the brightest minds of the comedy stage for the production of pictures. Old methods have been discarded and new ones adopted and the work is progressing rapidly on subjects of great character. Among the best known players at the Keystone were Raymond Hitchcock, Sam Bernard, Eddie Foy, Joe Weber and Lou Fields. Fred Mace, an old-time photoplayer, is also there, so also is Mabel Normand. With this list of artists it has been found advisable to discard much of the old Rabellaisian tricks upon which so-called "comedy" pictures have mainly depended and everyone is delighted with the new order of things.

Griffith, at Hollywood, while supervising the work of a number of directors, is really remaking or putting his stamp upon every picture bearing the "Fine Arts" brand. Eight five-reel plays will be completed by September 1, and there is no question of Griffith's ability to furnish quality. De Wolf Hopper will soon join him for a series of great comedy productions.

Ince at Inceville probably has a longer list of acknowledged dramatic stars than have ever been assembled for the work of production. Many are already at work; Billie Burke and another large party will soon be on their way. Ince has established his ability as a producer and can also be depended upon to give the public all that is class and quality in picture production.

Margaret Gibson.

The foregoing is but a summary of the deductions made by Mr. MacMahon while at Los Angeles. He had lots more to say, but it will keep for another time. Regarding the opening program at the Knickerobcker, he gave out the following advance summaries of the pictures to be shown. It will be observed that fourteen reels are to be shown and it is admitted that three and a half hours will be required to show them:

"My Valet"—a four-reel Keystone production, featuring Raymond Hitchcock, a man in quest of a wife; Mack Sennett, his servant; Mabel Normand, the much sought lady in the case, and Fred Mace as an amative French count. There are many ludicrous complications and distinct thrills in this subject which give each of the leading characters plenty of opportunity to prove their tiles. Sennett, of course, directed the production.

Douglas Fairbanks, "The Lamb," in the Griffith supervised play for the first release, is rather scoffed at by his New York flame and goes out West to do or die. He falls among the Yaqui Indians of northern Mexico and almost before he knows it is the center of a full-fledged war between the Yaquis and the Cientificos. In this merry mixture of stirring adventure and New York drawing room comedy, Mr. Fairbanks is to be helped by Seena Owen, Monroe Salisbury and several other of the best known actors of the Griffith studio. Under Mr. Griffith's supervision, W. Christy Cabanne is putting on the picture and has included some elaborate battle scenes which were taken with real Yaqui Indians and Mexican troops on Mr. Griffith's own ranch in the San Fernando valley.

Thomas H. Ince, it is said, has given Frank Keenan a Civil War story with a punch for the first Ince release of the Triangle combination. It is called "The Coward." Mr. Keenan appears in the role of an old Colonel who has immense pride and affection for his son. The boy turns out to be something of a quitter. The emotional power of the old man is exhibited in wonderful fashion. This release will be a characteristic man's play, with plenty of militarism and the depiction of strong emotions. The principal women in the case are pretty Margaret Gibson, as the boy's sweetheart, and Gertrude Claire, in the role of the devoted mother and wife.

Beverly Bayne Signs With Quality

BEVERLY BAYNE, heroine of half a thousand photoplays, in many of which she played opposite Francis X. Bushman, the distinguished screen star now appearing exclusively in Quality-Metro productions, on Tuesday attached her signature to a contract which ensures her appearance for a term of years in the photodramatic offerings of the Quality Pictures Corporation, which are released exclusively on the Metro program.

Beverly Bayne.

Miss Bayne, who has achieved notable distinction as an actress with an exceptionally wide range of emotional expression, was associated with Mr. Bushman during his connection with Essanay studios in Chicago and on the Coast, and starred with him in many of his biggest screen successes. It is expected that she will be featured with him in many of the forthcoming productions of the Quality Pictures Corporation in the Metro program.

The addition of Miss Bayne's name to the list of stellar lights of the stage and screen already under contract with the companies which release through the Metro program is in line with the progressive policy of President Rowland of Metro, whose efforts to give the exhibitor and the public the highest artistic talent obtainable, in motion picture productions of equal popular appeal, have done so much to make Metro one of the biggest factors in filmland in the few short months since its organization. In this particular instance, however, much of the credit must go to Fred J. Balshofer, head of the Quality Pictures Corporation, who is ever on the alert to add to the stellar material at the Los Angeles studios.

BARRYMORE AND FAVERSHAM AT WORK FOR METRO.

Two of America's greatest stage stars, Ethel Barrymore and William Faversham, will soon be working side by side and under the same roof and for the same releasing company as soon as work of production can be started on the Rolfe-Metro feature in which they will be seen.

Miss Barrymore will appear in an original play, especially suited to her talents, written by George Scarborough, author of "The Lure" and other stage successes. The screen adaptation is now being made by Edwin P. Carewe, who will direct the production. This vehicle affords Miss Barrymore ample opportunity for the exercise of the histrionic ability which has made her famous.

Mr. Faversham will appear under the direction of John W. Noble in "One Million Dollars," the scenario of which has been prepared by George D. Proctor from the novel "One Million Francs," by Arnold Fredericks. In "One Million Dollars" Mr. Faversham appears in a peculiarly suitable devoted to the study of criminology. While on the staff of role, that of a rich young club man whose leisure hours are the metropolitan detective bureau he is called out on a case that not only calls for the exercise of all his wits but ends by his losing his heart.

New Producing Company

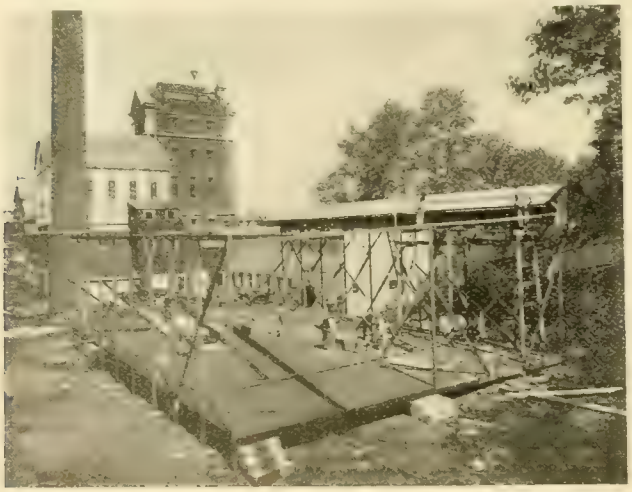
Eastern Film Corporation Soon Will Release Features and Refined Comedies—Seven Directors Working at Large Studios in Providence.

THE Eastern Film Corporation of Providence, R. I., capitalized at $300,000 with no stock for sale, soon will release four single-reel comedies a week in addition to two-reel comedies and two five-part features a month. Arrangements for distribution have been practically completed; but Elwood F. Bostwick, general manager of the corporation, prefers not to make public the names of the distributing companies until the contracts have been signed. The single-reel comedies, under the brand name of Pelican, will go through one channel, the double-reels and feature photoplays through another.

Elwood F. Bostwick

Three Providence men, Frederick S. Peck, Mr. E. Bostwick and Benjamin L. Cook, organized the new concern, which enters the field with sound financial backing, ample studio and laboratory equipment and high ideals. During the past few months forty-eight productions have been completed in the Eastern corporation's first studio, covering 190,000 square feet. Another studio with an area of 450,000 square feet will be ready for occupancy in the autumn, and supplementing these is an exterior glass-covered platform. It is figured that there will be plenty of room for the activities of the seven directors now at work, and a large force of players.

Mr. Peck, president of the corporation, is reputed to be one of the wealthiest men in New England. He is vice-president of the National Exchange Bank of Providence, chairman of the finance committee of the State of Rhode Island and a director in fifty large corporations. His first lieutenant and chief executive, General Manager Bostwick, has had many years' theatrical experience as stage director and manager with some of the most prominent producing interests in the country, among them the Shuberts, Klaw & Erlanger and William A. Brady. Coupled with his artistic experience is an unusual executive ability that has proved of great value in launching the Eastern Film Corporation.



Building New Studio for Eastern Film Corporation.

Mr. Cook, vice-president of the company, is well known in financial circles, and is president of Hornblower & Weeks, the long-established firm of stock brokers. Producing directors now engaged at the Providence studios are Frederick Esmelton, George Lessey, Hamilton Crane, Dan Mason, Charles Pitt, Lambert Hillyer and Allen Crolius. Among the important players appearing in Eastern productions are Frederick Burton, starred in "Peaceful Valley," scheduled for the first feature release; Helen Lowell, appearing in "Next," and "The Red Petticoat," both five-reel pictures; George Bunny, brother of the late John Bunny, who is being featured in a series of comedies; Dan Mason, playing in the comedies he directs; May Abbey and Wilfred Clark.

In speaking of the policy adopted by the Eastern Corporation, Mr. Bostwick placed emphasis on two points, the insistence on pictures of the very best quality and light comedies, void of slapstick. He holds that there is no such thing as a passably good photoplay. Either it is good, or it is not, and in the latter case it is permanently shelved. "Since last spring, when we started producing," he said, "we have turned out forty-eight pictures, all of them up to the average release; but out of this number we discarded thirty because they fell below the standard set for our product. This is a fair illustration of the manner in which we are entering the motion picture business. There may be more than enough films on the market, but there is no indication of a superabundance of really first class material.

"On the comedy end I am confident that we have inaugurated a distinctive policy. We are making humorous pictures without a trace of coarseness, and seconding our own opinion of their merit is that of one of the biggest vaudeville and picture men in New York. I showed him six single-reel productions and he promptly decided that he wanted five of them. In appearance, George Bunny bears a very strong resemblance to his famous brother, and judging from the work he has done for us already, I see no reason why he should not win equal fame as a comedian. We have the players, the studios and the money with which to turn out the kind of pictures we are after."

Bert Ennis, formerly of Eclair, and now the energetic publicity and sales manager for the Eastern Film Corporation, accompanied Mr. Bostwick on his recent visit to New York.

EQUITABLE BUYS UNITED OFFICE EQUIPMENT.

The Equitable Film Corporation will buy the office furniture and equipment and the remainder of the lease of the United Film Service, incorporated, now in the hands of receivers in bankruptcy. The lease has a life until January 1, 1919, on the premises at 126 West 46th street, the main office of the bankrupt concern. The Equitable, as related in the moving papers on behalf of the receivers, is a new concern allied with the World Film Corporation, and is said to be well backed financially. The price agreed upon was $3,500.

A couple of weeks ago, Langdon P. Marvin and Leo C. Stern, as receivers in bankruptcy, petitioned the United States District Court for authority to sell or otherwise dispose of all the assets of the bankrupt concern. The motion was argued before Judge Augustus N. Hand, who, after several days' deliberation, issued an order in accord with the provisions of the petition. The sale of the main office goods is the first recorded following the general order empowering action.

MALITZ'S CONNECTION LEGITIMATE.

Commenting upon the story in the New York World exposing the alleged activities in America of the German propagandists in which his connection with the American Correspondent Film Company was named, Felix Malitz says that he accepted the business management of that company as a legitimate undertaking and that he has conducted its affairs in a straightforward, businesslike and neutral manner, he being an American citizen. Whatever war pictures Mr. Malitz has handled have been advertised as "Official" and no secret has been made of the fact that they were "official."

Aside from handling war pictures the Correspondent Film Company is manufacturing regular dramatic and comedy subjects for the American market, but in no sense or particular can these productions be classed as "propagandist" material.

WARREN DIRECTING HILDA SPONG.

Edward Warren, the well-known motion picture director, has just completed for the Crystal Motion Picture Company a big five-reel feature, in which the able English actress, Miss Hilda Spong, is the star. The scenario is said to be strongly dramatic, and the settings particularly attractive. The supporting cast is made up of notable actors. Previous to taking this feature, Mr. Warren made six two-reel comedies for the Zenith Films, Inc., featuring Miss Margot Williams and Fraunie Fraunholz. Mr. Warren is now considering a permanent connection, where his efforts will chiefly be confined to big feature productions.

Censors at Luncheon

National Board Executives Entertain New Chairman and Members of Trade at Rector's.

TO MEET and get acquainted with its new chairman, Cranston Brenton, the National Board of Censorship at Rector's on Thursday, August 19, entertained a score of film men at luncheon. Mr. Brenton, who succeeds Frederick C. Howe, now Commissioner of Immigration, is also the director in New York City of the American Red Cross Society. The new chairman talked to the film manufacturers and their representatives, assuring them it would be his aim to continue the policy of the National Board in giving to manufacturers all possible assistance in the work of producing pictures that would be acceptable to the great public. J. W. Binder, who is retiring from his special employment by the board as director of publicity, also spoke. Mr. Binder is to take up the work of a trade association. Others who talked were Carl Pierce, of the Oliver Morosco Company; President John R. Freuler, of the Mutual; Walter Irwin, of the V-L-S-E; Orrin G. Cocks, of the National Board, and Lesley Mason.

Others present were W. D. McGuire, Matthew P. Adams and J. K. Paulding, of the Board; B. P. Schulberg, Louis J. Selznick, P. A. Parsons, John A. Kent, P. A. Powers, R. H. Cochrane, William Bennett, Charles Goldsmith, Frank Bannon, Edwin Thanhouser, J. C. Graham, Arthur James, W. E. Atkinson, W. W. Irwin, Felix Malitz and George Blaisdell, of the Moving Picture World. Telegrams of regret were received from George K. Spoor, J. A. Berst and W. R. Sheehan.

"We aim at original co-operation with the manufacturers so that we may stop this unjust oppressive legislation," said Mr. Brenton. "We are here to let you see that we are men very much as you are. We want to tell you that the more you let us into your confidence the more value we can be to the trade in general. You realize that the smaller men are disappearing, that in the future you will have greater responsibilities than you have had in the past. On the board are nearly 170 members, representing many groups that are bound to vary in their opinions and ideas. We aim to get in closer touch with the work. The closer we get to you the better we can serve you, and I hope you will see the National Board in that way. It is one of my ideals that you should consult the members of the board in advance, that we may help with that expression of public opinion we feel we can bring to you. Some of us have specialized in that way, and we feel we can help. So long as I am chairman I shall be glad to discuss those matters with you if you will do me that honor. This may be the great power of the board in the future.

"You may ask why we should give our time in this work. Let me answer in my own case. My two primary concerns in this world outside of my personal life are education and social service. I believe that the motion picture today is the greatest vehicle for the dissemination of human thought and human education that there is in the whole broad world. Speaking as one who has seen ten years' service on a college faculty I feel it a privilege to be able to do what I can in guiding this work along educational lines. I know of nothing that touches more phases of social life than does the motion picture. We want to be your friends. Let us enter into your plans in order that we may be in closer co-operation."

Mr. Freuler said he believed the National Board helped manufacturers and helped the business. "The alarming feature of the censorship question is that it is springing up all over," he said, "in little towns of eight and ten thousand inhabitants. If you could bring it about so that we might have censorship that would be recognized all over the country, censorship from one source, it would be a great help. We have in the picture business a lot of men who are anxious to have good films. It would be really worth while to have single censorship. We will be glad to co-operate in any movement looking to that end."

Mr. Irwin praised the National Board. "The board seems at all times to have realized that it was in the position of trustees not only for the industry but for the public," he said. "In the execution of its trusteeship it has been very liberal both to the industry and to the public. It has been a real developer and uplifter at all times. If the board will continue as in the past the industry will be very thankful."

"I hope you will realize at the outset that if this is a wake it is to be a jolly one," said Mr. Binder, referring to Mr. Brenton's allusion to his separating from the board. "You know at a wake the victim is a dead one. Leave it to me. My connection with the board has been most pleasant, by reason of the men, all the men, with whom I have come in contact; and you must remember in that year it has been my duty to go to these men and tell them how much money was needed." Mr. Binder spoke of the proposed censorship legislation facing the industry last fall. Thirteen state legislatures were considering censorship bills which would have entailed an expenditure on the makers of films of $288,000. He told of the work that resulted in killing the bills in every state.

"Eleven legislatures meet next year," continued Mr. Binder, "and you may be sure in a fair proportion there will be bills which will have to be fought. The censorship of the National Board is not a censorship at all. Its members cannot be censors unless they are clothed with the power to say whether the work of your studios shall be passed or not. I hope the National Board will remove the word censorship from its title.

"This industry is disorganized, unorganized, today. The railroads of the country have said you can't take films into their cars. This industry says 'Very well, Mr. Railroad, we'll stay off.' You know the excuse they make, about danger from fire and all that, even when your films are inclosed in fireproof containers. Traffic men say, 'Here, what are we getting out of this film business? It costs 30 cents to come to New York and return to Hackensack and carry out film. We'll pass an edict prohibiting the passage of these films. Then we'll say to them you can't bring them into our passenger cars as baggage. We'll be only too glad to pass them as express or as excess baggage like dynamite. The express rate for five reels at the rate of dynamite, instead of 30 cents, will be $3.25.' There is no guarantee of the delivery of the films. The industry sits down and says 'It is all right. Guess I will pay my $3.25.'"

Mr. Binder spoke of the work the National Board had done in the way of preventing adverse legislation, saying it properly should be done by the trade association "which we will build and which can take these things out of the hands of the National Board and educate the women's clubs and the civic clubs."

Mr. Cocks wished Mr. Binder godspeed in the work he is about to take up. "We feel it is something that must be done," he said, addressing the manufacturers, "for your interests and for the interests of the exhibitors and of the whole trade. Mr. Binder will have a freer hand in his new field than was possible in the National Board.

"In our work as censors we have been interested in one group of manufacturers no more than in any other group. We see the motion picture whoever makes it with a cleancut and I hope a skilled viewpoint, as nearly as possible from the human standpoint, and try to be just and fair. We have worked not from the standpoint of theory but from experience, and that experience is based on our tests of the great American public.

"We are not proud at all that two years ago we killed property worth over half a million dollars—not at all. Increasingly we see the possibilities of going back of the maker of the film and talking squarely about the picture he is making. I pledge you that is our policy in the future. If you will give us the opportunities of doing that with your representatives in the east and the west we will do just that thing. I see as Mr. Brenton does a great future for the screen. It is because we all believe in it that we want to co-operate and put it where it should be."

Jesse J. Goldberg, secretary and general manager of Life Photo Film Corporation, has disposed of his stock holdings to Bernard Loewenthal, and resigned as secretary, director and general manager of that company as well as the Commercial Motion Picture Co., the subsidiary corporation allied with the Life Photo.

Mr. Goldburg has not definitely determined his plans for the future, excepting that he will ally himself with the executive end of the productions of photoplays and is considering several propositions. In order to close up certain matters of the Life Photo, he will occupy his present offices at the company's address for the next few weeks.

LEW FIELDS SUED FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Suit was brought Saturday, August 21, against Lew Fields in which the comedian is charged with breach of contract. Owing to the fact that the complaining company is a New Jersey corporation, while the defendant is a resident of New York, the United States District Court has jurisdiction, the amount involved exceeding $3,000. The suit is brought by the Peerless Feature Producing Company, of Fort Lee. The prayer is for an injunction restraining Fields from posing in any feature plays for the Keystone or any other producing company, the Peerless claiming exclusive rights to his services under a contract entered into on February 5, 1915.

New Famous Players Studio

Feature Corporation Will Erect Modern Producing Plant At Marble Hill—Large Plot of Ground Purchased for Site.

WHAT is one of the greatest real estate transactions and the most significant plan of construction entered into by a motion picture concern in New York City in some time was consummated last week by the Famous Players Film Co. through the A. N. Gitterman Realty Corporation, whereby that feature film concern has secured a plot of thirty-one lots atop Marble Hill, in upper Manhattan, at 225th street, one block west of Broadway, and overlooking the Harlem and Hudson Rivers, for the purpose of erecting extensive studios, laboratories, open air stages and factories designed for the production of elaborate feature motion pictures. The property is assessed for tax purposes at over $160,000.

It is estimated that with the substantial improvements which the Famous Players' architects are planning, when the various studios, laboratories, factory, and office buildings are completed, will reach a cost approximating half a million dollars.

A novel feature of the plans being made by the Famous Players lies in the fact that a special experimental laboratory will be constructed, in which research work will be conducted with a view of improving the mechanical factors of motion picture production and projection. This experimental work will be under the supervision of Edwin S. Porter.

Another interesting fact connected with the Famous Players plans will be the use of the natural rock on top of the hill upon which the studios will be built, as a vault for film. The vault will be cut into the solid rock, thus forming one of the safest and most impregnable receptacles for film possible.

The transaction was culminated following negotiations conducted between E. J. Ludvigh and Ralph A. Kohn, attorneys for the Famous Players Film Co., and the A. N. Gitterman Corporation, representing the sellers.

In a statement concerning the significance and purposes of this unusual land purchase, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players, said:

"This initial investment is only the inception of a great constructive plan, which we have been developing for some time past. It is our purpose to create the largest and most comprehensive producing plant devoted to motion pictures in the world, and to do it within New York City, regardless of the expansion of our activities elsewhere. The studios and open-air stages will be so designed and constructed as to permit the adequate production of every type of feature. The unusual situation secured by us permits us to obtain a variety of woodland, park and marine scenes with little effort. These advantages are increased by the fact that we are within the city, and therefore in constant contact with metropolitan environment, when subjects require it.

"I believe the undertaking of this enterprise is the most substantial indication of our confidence in the motion picture industry and its durability.

"When, recently, we closed a contract with the Paramount Pictures Corporation for twenty-five years—the longest period ever covered by a contract in the amusement world—we were convinced that the feature motion picture had become a standard part of the modern world of art, and would live forever. It is in order not only to insure the endurance of the feature, but to advance its merit constantly and to make its chances of improvement virtually illimitable, that we are to erect the most complete group of buildings ever yet contemplated for the production of motion pictures.

"The construction of the various studio, laboratory and factory buildings will of course be under the direction of Edwin S. Porter, who built the Edison studios (one of the first practical producing plants in America, which has been constantly utilized for twelve years with only minor changes), the Rex studios, and the present Famous Players studios.

"As remarked before, this extensive building plan by no means signifies the curtailment of our studio plans in California or abroad. After the European war, we will in all probability complete the plans inaugurated a year ago for the erection of an elaborate studio in London, for the purpose of producing pretentious transcontinental subjects, such as "The Eternal City."

Charles T. Aldrich

CHARLES T. ALDRICH was born in Cleveland, Ohio, and at the age of seventeen began his stage career. His natural talent soon brought him to the front ranks of the profession. He was an unusual entertainer in many branches, embracing acting, magic, juggling, illusions, quick changes of character, singing, dancing, sketching in colors, and comedy roles of every description. At the height of his success in this country in the role of the tramp juggler, he sailed for London, where he made an instant hit and was called "The Eccentric American" and "Aldrich the Metamorphosist." On July 1, 1912, he appeared by royal command before the King and Queen and royal family of Great Britain at the Palace theater. It was on this occasion that the royal personages witnessed their first vaudeville entertainment and were more than delighted by the novel performance of Mr. Aldrich. Many will remember Mr. Aldrich in "Secret Service Sam," in which Al. H. Woods starred him for several seasons in this country. His works under the management of Charles Dillingham the past season in the Montgomery and Stone production of "Chin Chin" at the Globe theater has caused much favorable comment. The opportunity of seeing him on the screen in an entirely new creation of character is afforded the amusement loving public in "The Magic Toy Maker," the most lovable old man who rights many wrongs and restores a wayward son to his parents and starts him again on life's journey along the straight and narrow path to fame and honor.

Charles T. Aldrich.

The story of "The Magic Toy Maker," about to be released by the K. & R. Film Company, is a very novel one, embodying a psychological theme.

I. C. C. Ruling on Valuations

Carriers Liability Limited Unless Actual Value Is Stated in Writing by Shipper.

By Clarence L. Linz.

THERE has long been confusion among both exchangemen and exhibitors as to the exact meaning of the various provisions of the Cummins Amendment to the Act to Regulate Commerce, especially with respect to the necessity for placing a valuation upon all shipments for interstate transportation. In the express service, shipments valued at $50 or under move at the usual transportation rates. Where the value is in excess of that amount, an additional charge at the rate of ten cents for each one hundred dollars of value is assessed against each shipment.

The value of a single shipment of motion picture films will run up in the hundreds and perhaps will be over a thousand dollars. To be called upon constantly to pay valuation charges on the amount above $50 would mean that both exchangemen and exhibitors would be put to thousands of dollars of additional express expense annually. Many of the exchange managers decided to place the nominal, or $50 value, on all of their shipments of films, this regardless of the true value, and take a chance of losing the difference if the films should become lost, damaged, or destroyed in transit. Then came the question as to the legality of such a proceeding.

On May 7, 1915, the Interstate Commerce Commission issued a report expressing tentatively its views upon various questions arising in connection with the amendment to the Act to Regulate Commerce, commonly known as the Cummins Amendment, of March 4, 1915. Among other things, attention was called to the provisions of section 10 of the act, penalizing any person who by false statement as to value, or by any other device or means, obtained or attempted to obtain transportation for property at less than the regular rates. The numerous inquiries received by the Commission regarding this matter indicated confusion in the minds of many as to the application of section 10, and seemed to render desirable a further expression of opinion by the Commission upon this matter.

The Commission now states that "There is no provision in the act to regulate commerce, including the Cummins Amendment, that requires a declaration as to the value of property shipped in interstate commerce. Nor has the Commission issued any ruling that requires such declaration.

"The Cummins Amendment does, however, provide that if the goods are hidden from view by wrapping, boxing, or other means, and the carrier is not notified as to their character, 'the carrier may require the shipper to specifically state in writing the value of the goods.' In such cases rates and charges for transportations, dependent upon the value of the property shipped as specifically stated in writing by the shipper, may be established and maintained.

"It is the view of the Commission that, so far as declarations as to value are concerned, the prerequisites for the application of section 10 are, first, the election of the carrier to require a shipper to state in writing the value of the goods; second, the existence of graded rates or charges dependent upon the value of the property shipped; and, third, that the shipper shall knowingly and willfully, by false statement as to value obtain or attempt to obtain transportation of such property at less than the regular rates."

It would appear from the above statement that unless the express companies demand the declaration of the true value of the films, there is no need for the shippers thereof to ask for greater protection than the $50 allowed under the provisions of the contract receipt. If the shipper desires the full protection he must, of course, pay the usual insurance charges based on the true valuation.

Film containers are familiar enough to the agents of the carriers that the films themselves would not normally come under the classification of "goods hidden from view by wrapping, boxing or other means." As previously noted in the Moving Picture World, exchange managers have recently been sending notices to exhibitors instructing them to place a $50 valuation on all shipments of films, and a $5 valuation on shipments of paper, photographs, etc.

HENRY JAMES WITH METRO.

Metro Pictures Corporation announced on Tuesday that they had signed up Henry James, formerly of the Mutual Film Corporation. Henry James will be associated with his brother, Arthur James, in the advertising and publicity work of the Metro, and will engage immediately in a special campaign in behalf of one of the most vigorous of the young giants in the feature field.

Essanay Plans Big Production

Many Prominent Players and Five Thousand Supers Have Been Engaged for "In the Palace of the King."

ESSANAY has engaged three Broadway stars to take parts in the photoplay dramatized from F. Marion Crawford's famous novel, "In the Palace of the King." This is a six-act production, to be released in October on the V-L-S-E program.

Arline Hackett, who has been engaged as William Faversham's leading woman in "The Hawk" for next season, will take the leading feminine role of Dolores de Mendoza in the photoplay. Miss Hackett has had a wide experience on the speaking stage and for the past three years has starred on Broadway. She played last season in "Today," and in "Dickey Bird" with Mary Shaw. The year before she appeared in "Damaged Goods." She has been featured under the Morosco and the Frohman managements and has starred in Ibsen, Strindberg and George Bernard Shaw plays. She also made a great success in Shakespearean roles, playing Ophelia, Portia, Lady Macbeth and Rosalind.

E. J. Radcliffe, the noted legitimate stage actor, has been engaged specially for this play, to take the part of King Phillip II of Spain, while Lewis Edgar, another well-known speaking stage star, will take the part of the court jester.

Richard C. Travers, leading man with Essanay, who played opposite Viola Allen in "The White Sister," will take the leading masculine role, that of Don Juan.

The play will be one of the most stupendous six-reel productions ever produced. Five thousand persons in all have been engaged to take part. This includes 500 cavalrymen and the same number of infantry, members of the Illinois National Guard. One hundred professional dancing girls will appear in the play, dancing before the king in the great court scenes. These were largely recruited from the speaking stage in shows appearing in Chicago. A dancing instructor is now engaged in training them for their parts.

The whole of the Essanay grounds of several acres is being turned into a camp where most of the extra actors will live in tents during the production of the photoplay. A replica of an old Spanish castle has been erected at one end of the grounds, where many of the scenes will be taken. The palace is complete throughout and bears an exact resemblance to an ancient stone castle.

The leading parts are taken by players of wide experience and well-known ability. Ernest Maupain, who was Sarah Bernhardt's leading man for several seasons, will take the part of General de Mendoza; Lillian Drew is the Princess of Eboli, Thomas Commerford, Gomez, the prime minister; Nell Craig, Inez de Mendoza, the blind girl, and Sydney Ainsworth, Parez. The play is being produced by Fred E. Wright, who produced "Graustark" and "The White Sister" for Essanay.

W. F. NIGH OFF TO TAKE "STORK'S NEST" EXTERIORS.

Mary Miles Minter, the Metro star, and supporting company, including Niles Welch and Charles Prince, who will be seen in the Columbia Pictures Corporation five-reel production of "Stork's Nest" left recently for Delaware Water Gap to photograph the exterior scenes amid the beautiful scenery of that region.

William F. Nigh, the director, spent several days in that section and, on his return, was enthusiastic over its wonders. Martin Faust will accompany Mr. Nigh as assistant director and will also play a part in the picture, that of Jim Whitlicks, a half-witted boy.

"Stork's Nest" is a mountaineer story with Miss Minter in the role of an untutored, naive, backwoods girl who cannot understand why city folks who come to the mountains should wear shoes and stockings, let alone starched collars. The role fits Miss Minter's personality perfectly. It is much like the part in which she was seen on the stage for four years in "The Littlest Rebel."

MURIEL OSTRICHE WITH EQUITABLE.

Muriel Ostriche, formerly star of the Thanhouser, Princess brand, and known throughout filmdom as the Thanhouser Princess, and recently star of numerous Vitagraph productions in which she appeared jointly with Robert Edeson in big features, has been engaged by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation for appearance in that concern's productions.

After a brief vacation in Atlantic City, she will begin work at the Equitable Flushing studio in a series of serious and important dramatic vehicles now being selected for her by the directors of the Equitable concern.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

NORTH CAROLINA EXHIBITORS.

Big "Get Together" Convention Held on Week of August 16 —Annual Meeting to Be Held at Greensboro.

THE North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was placed on a sound footing last week when exhibitors from all parts of the state gathered together for the mid-year convention at Wrightsville Beach. The keynote of the whole convention was "get together" that the exhibitors might be more closely aligned for a systematic campaign for the general improvement of conditions.

The organization was formed some two years ago, but interest was allowed to lag and no real effort to get together was made until last June, at Fayetteville, Percy W. Wells, of the firm of Howard & Wells, operating the Bijou and Royal theaters in Wilmington, was elected president. Aggressive in business, a man used to success, he created an enthusiasm among those who attended that meeting with the result that nearly two hundred exhibitors attended the present gathering for the purpose of perfecting the plans of the organization and getting to the point where their efforts could be continued on a sound working basis.

The business sessions commenced on Monday, although many of the exhibitors arrived at Wrightsville on Sunday, and even on Saturday. President Wells called the meeting to order and introduced Mayor Parker Q. Moore, of Wilmington, who welcomed the delegates on behalf of the people of the Cape Fear section. Especially, he declared, did he want to welcome them in the name of Percy Wells and "Fox" Howard, both of whom had taken so much interest in the organization.

Congressman H. L. Godwin, who was introduced in a very complimentary manner by President Wells, said that it spoke well for the moving picture interests of the state that those in charge of it were getting together to discuss questions of mutual interest and to seek solutions to difficult problems. He attributed much of the success of professional, financial and commercial men to the fact that in their respective callings their organizations have been perfected.

Mr. Godwin spoke of the great educational work that moving pictures can accomplish in the way of giving people, who have no chance of traveling or going to centers of learning, an opportunity to see scenery and to find out about the affairs of the world. He had been surprised, he declared, to learn that the moving picture business is now second to the steel industry in the volume of business, the former being recognized as the largest business in the country.

In concluding, he assured the exhibitors that he was with them in their efforts to improve the business, and declared he would be glad to render them any service that he could. Mr. Godwin is extremely popular in this section of the state and upon being formally introduced was given a hearty welcome, while the applause was frequent during the course of his remarks.

H. B. Varner, editor of the Lexington Dispatch and Southern Good Roads Magazine, as well as being interested in a motion picture theater in Lexington, declared that what was really needed in the motion picture business was "less theories, better programs and higher prices." His remarks were short but directly to the point. When he began to talk about credits from the exchange man's end of the business, he hit a subject which, at the present time, is demanding considerable attention; never before in the history of the motion picture business, it is said, has there been so much difficulty in keeping accounts cleaned up, nor have there been a greater number of checks returned to the exchangemen-depositors with the indorsement that there are no funds, or insufficient funds with the bank upon which the check is drawn to cover the amount called for.

Mr. Varner commented upon the policy of the exchangemen who extended credit to exhibitors without any regard to their financial standing, and declared this to be a practice which should be stopped. When a man has tried everything else, including life insurance, according to Mr. Varner, he either goes into the motion picture or the newspaper business, although he was glad to say that he was in both. He urged a better organization among the motion picture exhibitors, pointing out some of the advantages to be obtained through a close co-operation one with the other, and in referring to the matter of fewer theories, better programs and higher prices, declared that the people do not want cheap things and are willing to pay a fair price for things worth while.

E. F. Dardine, manager of the Universal Film & Supply Company, of Charlotte, spoke of the need for a better co-operation between the exhibitors and the exchangemen. He declared that the business should be put on a legitimate basis and declared that unfair competition must be eliminated if success be desired. He took up a number of evils incident to the lack of care in the handling of films and paper by the exhibitors, etc., and deplored the fact that unfair competition included obtaining films from an exchange and failing to pay for their rental.

Henry E. Friedman, manager of the Washington territory of the World Film Corporation, who had taken a very prominent part in the formation of the league while acting as the traveling representative of that corporation in North Carolina, stated that he was indeed glad to see the good results that had already been accomplished by the organization. He urged each exhibitor present to go away from the convention and preach the gospel of truth to others, whether they be members of the league or not, until every motion picture exhibitor in the state has learned the lesson by heart. In the course of his remarks, Mr. Friedman showed the need of organization among the exhibitors themselves, and of co-operation between them and those from whom they rent their films. He stated that they should not feel that the exchangeman is always trying to get everything possible out of them.

Mr. Friedman referred to a complaint which had come to him from an exhibitor in a large city to the effect that he did not want to run films that came to him from some small place about two hundred miles distant, although both places were on the same circuit. He explained to the delegates that this is a condition which must be and he showed them how circuits were made up and how charges were assessed, with the exhibitors paying for them in proportion to the returns possible from a given territory.

In regard to co-operation between the two parts of the business, he asked the exhibitors to work to a greater extent with the exchangemen and in so doing help themselves and their fellows. He pointed out that complaint is sometimes made that a film does not get in on time, when it had been delivered all right, and to following shipping instructions a little more closely. He said it was no rare occurrence for an exhibitor to leave his films in the booth overnight instead of taking or sending them to the express office directly after his show is over, and perhaps saying mentally that the other fellow can wait until tomorrow for them.

Frank B. Spurrier, who covers the North Carolina territory for the Philadelphia office of the V-L-S-E, spoke briefly and expressed his interest in the league. He also spoke on the relations between exhibitors and exchangemen, of the need of co-operation between them, and of organization among the former.

Resolutions were adopted thanking the people of Wilmington and Wrightsville for their kindness and hospitality; the management of the Oceanic Hotel for entertainment; the newspapers of Wilmington for their publicity, and to President Wells and his associates for their active work in making the convention a success.

During the time the convention was in session the delegates were filmed and refilmed times without number. Following the Monday morning session with their friends they were lined up on the front steps of the hotel and filmed. Congressman Godwin and Mayor Moore were photographed together, and then all proceeded to Lumina Park, where more pictures were taken, this time in a dance that was given especially for them. These and many other pictures will form the two reels that will be sent out showing the city of Wilmington and its people.

Yacht and canoe races, dancing, and a boat ride on the sound for the visiting ladies, were among the amusements provided for the delegates and their families, the whole winding up with a banquet at which each speaker devoted at least a portion of his remarks to lauding the activities of President Wells, and it was the unanimous opinion of those in attendance that with so capable an executive as he at the helm, the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will prove to be a great factor in the elevation and general improvement of the motion picture business of the state.

The officers of the league are Percy W. Wells, president; L. B. Davis, Raleigh, first vice-president; M. W. Jordan, Laurinburg, second vice-president; Otto Haas, Charlotte, treasurer, and H. B. Varner, of Lexington, was elected as secretary to succeed S. A. Lambert, of Fayetteville, who resigned during the convention. Before adjoining the delegates selected Greensboro as the place of the next semi-annual meeting, to be held in February next.

Joining with the exhibitors were exchangemen and traveling representatives from Washington, Charlotte, N. C., and Atlanta, Ga. "Diamond Dick" Anderson, of the latter place, came into town three days ahead of time to be sure to be on the job to greet his friends. Mr. Conn, representing the General Film Company, and "Paramount" Chivers, from Atlanta; Mr. Wilkes, of the Paramount service, in Charlotte; and J. Frank Brown, of the Metro Film Service, Inc.; Henry E. Friedman and Frank B. Spurrier, of Washington, were among those who aided in making the convention a success.

Mr. Friedman exhibited "The Stolen Voice," with Robert Warwick starring, for the benefit of the exhibitors and their friends who gathered in Lumina Park to witness its showing. Many favorable remarks were heard on this feature.

PHILADELPHIA LEAGUE RESUMES MEETINGS.

Beginning with September the weekly meetings of the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League, which were suspended during the summer months, will once more be resumed. Plans are being formulated to make the coming season one of the greatest in the history of the organization and it is hoped that many new members will be added to the already large list of exhibitors. One of the features of the coming season will be the dividing of the city into districts which will be governed by separate committees. It is thought that in this manner a more harmonious working of the organization can be effected.

Carnival Draws Large Crowd

More Than 7,000 People Attend Exhibitors' Day at the Brighton Beach Race Track.

THE first carnival of the New York Local No. 1 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America attracted upwards of 7,000 people to the Brighton Beach race track, Brighton Beach, L. I., on August 22. Most of the producing companies in the East were represented in the aquatic sports with which the carnival was opened in the morning; prominent photoplayers in floats and in gayly decorated automobiles appeared in the parade, starting at the race track and passing along Surf avenue, Coney Island, and a roster of those at the track during the afternoon would include most of the important figures in filmdom in this section of the country. A shore dinner at the Brighton Beach Hotel, followed by dancing, terminated one of the most successful affairs ever arranged by motion picture men for their own entertainment and that of their friends.

Not even at the last exhibitors' ball did admirers of screen favorites have an opportunity to see so many of their heroes and heroines in the flesh. The crowd on Surf avenue stood four deep while the parade was passing. Most of the players in the cars were recognized and applauded and approval of the elaborate floats prepared by the Vitagraph Company, Pathe and others, was generously expressed. For an hour after the termination of the parade, at 2 o'clock, the gatekeepers at the track had their hands full in handling the crowds seeking admittance. The parking space for automobiles was filled to its capacity and the overflow of people from the grandstand complicated matters for the officials in charge of the long list of sporting events.

Leading the parade as it headed down Surf avenue, was the Thanhouser Kidlet, Helen Badgley, riding a horse with an escort on either side. Mounted police followed, the Twenty-second Regiment band came next in line, just ahead of the Metro automobile, decorated in a striking fashion with roses and morning glories. Richard A. Rowland, Joseph Engle, Francis X. Bushman, Mary Miles Minter, Emily Stevens and Emmy Wehlen were in the car. Ned Finley appeared astride a horse, and in the first of the eight Vitagraph automobiles were Maurice Costello, his family, and Leo Ochs, president of the Exhibitors' League. Flora Finch and other well known actresses rode on the Vitagraph float, a gorgeous affair.

Two cars carrying Thanhouser directors and actors came next, and behind them was "Spike" Robinson in the war-paint of an Indian. He blazed the trail for a large aggregation from the Biograph studios, fourteen automobile loads in all. Numbered in the Biograph party were such favorites as Mr. and Mrs. Travers Vale, William Jefferson, Wray Physioc, Mary Malestesta, Isabel Rea, and practically all of the directors and players located in the East.

The Fox machines came next, then six automobiles packed with World Film representatives and after them the Pathe display—girls dressed as sailors and carrying a great American flag in front of a float representing a battleship named "Neal of the Navy." Pearl White was included among the players following the float in automobiles. Edison and George Kleine accounted for more cars in the long line and the Kleine band of Mexicans was one of the hits of the parade. Universal and Mutual sent generous representations, as did the Lubin Company.

When the paraders returned to the Brighton Beach track, the grandstand was comfortably filled. Scattered among the conventionally dressed people wandering around the grounds, were at least fifty Charlie Chaplin imitators and nearly as many Goddesses doing their best to resemble Anita Stewart. The afternoon's program was opened with a flag raising pageant, in which Joseph Gilgour appeared as George Washington, Logan Paul presented Abraham Lincoln and Hugh Wynne impersonated President Wilson. Dick Leslie arranged the tableau effectively. Then the "Spirit of '76" was appropriately typified by Harry Fisher, Ed Thomas and A. W. Wellesley.

The motorcycle race was won by J. B. French, of the Vitagraph Company, after a thrilling contest; the 100-yard dash for men went to Ray Gallagher and first place in the 50-yard dash for women was won by May Walker. A. H. Caldwell, driving a Marmon car, as the representative of Metro-Rolfe, had an easy time in winning the five-mile automobile race. The horse race provided a quantity of excitement, one runaway and considerable argument about the winner. Edith Storey of the Vitagraph Company had some difficulty in finding anyone to ride against her and when a competitor finally appeared, Miss Storey scored a first.

Pathe "Neal of the Navy."

A comedy feature of the afternoon was the automobile "flivver" race in which Paul Gulick, of Universal, and H. W. Van Loan took part, with Joe Brandt to assist in the much delayed finish. Another comedy event, and one of the best numbers on the entire program, was the boxing bout between Billie Reeves and Harry Watson, arranged by Omer Doud of the Kleine Company, co-operating with Ferd Singhi of the Lubin Company. Silver cups were given to the winners of first and second places in all of the sporting events and to Anita Stewart, Kate Price and others, who were selected by the judges of the dancing contest following the shore dinner.

Joe Humphries, master of ceremonies, was ably assisted by Thomas Howard and the many other members of the committees appointed by the exhibitors. Among the prominent picture men who attended the carnival were William F. Rock and John Grey, Vitagraph; H. H. Bruenner and Gus Mohme, Biograph; Richard A. Rowland, Joseph Engel and Arthur James, Metro; John F. Skerrett and Will C. Smith, Nicholas Power Company; Ad Kessel, Jr., and Charles Kessel, New York Motion Picture Company; George Kleine, Omer F. Doud and William Raynor, Kleine Company; H. T. Edwards, Picture Theater Equipment Company; Edwin Thanhouser, Thanhouser Company; Carl Laemmle, Joe Brandt and Nat Rothstein, Universal Company; Lewis J. Selznick and Jacob Wilk, World Film; Harry Reichenbach, Equitable Company, and Harry Wolf.

CURWOOD TO WRITE FOR VITAGRAPH EXCLUSIVELY.

The Vitagraph Company has secured the services of the well-known author, James Oliver Curwood, who will write exclusively for this company. Mr. Curwood has already written a number of picture stories for the Vitagraph that have been exceptional features, besides some hundred that have made particularly interesting one-part screen dramas. A few of Mr. Curwood's best known pictures include "The Young Man Who Figured," "A Study in Tramps," "The Battle of Frenchman's Run," "The Awakening," "The Strength of Men" and "In the Days of Famine."

CONCERNING THE "FRANK CASE" PICTURES.

The efforts of the motion picture producing company that has made a picture alleged to be the history of the case of Leo M. Frank seems to be meeting with general disapproval, as should be. First the picture was held up in New York City by Commissioner of Licenses Bell and the order of the court restraining the exhibition of the picture in New York is still in force, pending a final hearing which has been postponed at Commissioner Bell's request.

A. N. Wolff, former president of the New York State Exhibitors' League, manager of the Colonial theater, Rochester, N. Y., has raised his voice against the exhibition of the picture in that city. Commenting on the question in a local paper, Mr. Wolff said:

"I turned down an offer to exhibit the picture in Rochester," said Mr. Wolff. "I would not think of trying to make money on the misfortune of any man. I don't doubt that if I booked the film my theater would be packed, as public interest is running high in the Frank case. But I do not care to make money in that way.

"I would feel ashamed to hang billboards of the Frank case in front of my theater—not because I think that Frank did anything wrong, but I would be ashamed of myself for being so low as to collect money in such a manner.

"I am almost positive that every other exhibitor in Rochester feels just as I do. None are so mercenary as to take such a profit. Accordingly I believe it is safe to say that pictures of the misery of Leo M. Frank will not be shown in Rochester."

The strongest condemnation of the picture on the part of the exhibitors of the country comes from President Herrington of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in a telegram to the Moving Picture World which reads as follows:

"Exhibitors of United States and Canada: As President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, I appeal to you to refuse to show any picture or scenes depicting Leo Frank's lynching. Let us show the people that censorship is unnecessary. Take no chance of degrading our business. F. J. HERRINGTON."

Russian Writer and Translator

THE war in Europe is turning upside down all business and commercial relations between the contending nations. At the outbreak of hostilities, a year ago, M. Oscar M. Kartoschinsky was established in Berlin as the special press representative of several Russian papers. He has written several books and plays, as well as a few scenarios dealing with Russian life, and has translated a large number of French and German books into Russian. He also translated Upton Sinclair's "The Jungle" for publication in Russia. He is now in New York and expects to establish a closer relationship between Russia and this country in the film market. As a large proportion of our films are suitable for the Russian market, he does not understand why a much larger number of American films do not reach Russia. While here he expects to dispose of several photoplays to American manufacturers which will deal entirely with phases of Russian life and customs. He has made a first hand study of film conditions in his native country, especially as to the films most in demand.

Floyd Lewis, Mutual manager at Oklahoma City, succeeds to the management of the Cincinnati Mutual exchange.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that thousands are out of the city in midsummer, the moving picture houses are all doing fine business, many coming in from the suburbs to see some especially good film, such as the pictured dramatization of Gilbert Parker's "The Right of Way," "The Seven Sisters," with petite Marguerite Clark as sister No. 4; "Kilmeny," a particularly strong presentation, giving Lenore Ulrich an opportunity to show her versatility, for she has to run the gamut of emotions. The Hub has been favored the past fortnight with visitors from other states, for this is a sort of stopover place en route to the various resorts, and the cool weather has filled the film houses, the Boston theater being the largest. We are to bid adieu soon to "The Birth of a Nation," and as it will not be put on elsewhere in New England all trains bring patrons, the film having been skilfully advertised.

Boston has become so attached to the players in "The Birth of a Nation" that the filmgoers readily pick them out when in other pictures, as, for instance, in Mary Pickford's "Rags," at the Park; here we again saw Josephine Crowell, the spartan mother of the Cameron boys, this time playing a less heroic role as housekeeper in an effete family. It was good to note the recognition, disclosing the deep impression made by the Griffith masterpiece.

"The Puppet Crown" brought into the filmlight that handsome leading man, Carlyle Blackwell, playing opposite to Ina Claire. A feature to please the women was the court ball with its stately dances and gorgeous array of gowns, to say nothing of the male full dress. In great contrast was the "swallow tail" dress suit worn by the American hero, who somehow had a dignity all his own and which gold lace oftentimes fails to emphasize. Many children attend the matinees at the Park and Boston and must be more or less educated by the travel films. It is a joy to watch their faces.

John Craig seems to have abandoned his new theater plan for Back Bay patronage, but no definite statement has been given out as to why. He has a small mint in his Castle Square theater, however, and maybe there are too many theaters here anyhow. While such a powerful rival exists in the moving picture houses, once the scenes of long runs of the spoken drama, it would seem that another playhouse would not be profitable enough for the venture. John Craig has never known anything bordering on failure and is taking no chances. His position is unique, his popularity boundless and "the box office" tells of his following. Mr. and Mrs. Craig (Mary Young) are taking a needed holiday at present and will spend some time in New York combining business with pleasure. Their two sons have become college men.

"Shattered Memories" made a distinct hit here at the Boston on Sunday evening, and was one of six or more reels given us by Manager Ferguson in addition to a half-hour concert by the Fadettes. In this film we are taken into the heart of a Vermont town in the early days of the War for the Union and witness the departure of the volunteers for the front, one of whom is a color bearer, the fiance of the village belle, the one who loses his memory through a blow on the head at the hands of a "reb" and does not recover it for more than forty years, when he once more has the flag in his arms on his native heath. The story is dramatically presented and there wasn't a dry eye near me that night. Such films are great for the youngster to see in arousing patriotism and reverence for the flag. That evening we had Beverly Bayne in an effective short film, and I must say we missed Francis Bushman whom we have seen opposite her so long, the last time in "Graustark." They did great team work.

Two other short films put on that evening will live in memory—"Fifty Years Behind the Times," the story of a young-old watchmaker in a dull little village living in a narrow environment with his aged mother and a young ward. His first sight of a visiting society belle there for a short time in her country home is his temporary undoing. She planned to introduce him to her party as a curiosity, but things happened to checkmate her and turned his attention back to the home fireside and to the young girl who loved him. It was rather unique as to plot and had a mighty good lesson. Then we had one of the dear little Sonny Jim stories with Bobby Connelly and other kiddies, and also educational travel pictures. "Surely we are getting our money's worth," said one of the male patrons.

It was during a chapter in "The Goddess" that a man next to me exclaimed: "Say, imagine President Wilson posing for the films. All he'd have to do when he wanted to go away would be to get this feller for understudy." So I looked to see what he meant. Sure enough, the villain, Stilliter, is an exact counterpart. Just watch him start off when smiling, for he has the same little mannerisms and expression.

There is a boom in business at the Boston theater, owing to the music rendered by the Fadettes under Caroline B. Nichols, of whom frequent mention has been made in my letters. The big house is filled over and over again. In the lobby is a new bas-relief of this leader, done by Miss Rose Garrity, the violinist, and former member of the Fadettes. She is versatile and has won honors in more than one profession. Miss Garrity is a member of the Professional Women's Club, which is proud of the fact that they have so many members in the films, Jane Grey making a distinct success in "The Right of Way," though not featured at all in the press or listed in the cast preceding the action. There are some things about "The Right of Way" open to criticism, and one is the ridiculous use of the monocle by Steele after the recovery of his senses. Such silly affectation has no place in a tailor's shop in a Canadian village, and detracts from Faversham's otherwise good business. We who know the book can more readily account for it, yet feel it to be quite unnecessary in the development of the story. Then, too, in undergoing an operation of so delicate a nature would we have on top boots and be fully dressed?

Amusingly educational are the animated cartoons picturing Uncle Sam in various capacities, usually in connection with current history. We had one last night showing him flirting with South America and it had a big story in it illustrating possibilities in the way of trade as a result of the European war. All these are edifying and reflect credit on the clever manipulator—of the pencil.

A Boston woman is so deft on the films that she has bought an outfit and manipulates the machine for the benefit of her friends arranging the scenarios in her home and outdoors. Will tell you more about her later on, as she is a unique character.

Tom Forman is quite a favorite with the matinee girls who sat up and took notice when he appeared as the "silent lover" in "The Puppet Crown," for he looked unusually well in court "togs." He first attracted their attention in "The Governor's Lady," and later in "The Wild Goose Chase" with Ina Claire. One dear young thing said audibly, "I bet that feller is no mollycoddle in real life; he's good stuff, all right."

GFIFFITH TO MAKE "FINE ARTS FILMS."

"Fine Arts Films" is the name selected to identify the $2 Triangle film productions, staged under the general supervision of D. W. Griffith, at his southern California studio. Each production will present a stellar player in a well-suited vehicle. To date the list of featured players under contract at this studio includes De Wolf Hopper, Helen Ware, Douglas Fairbanks, Rozsika Dolly, Tully Marshall, Lillian Gish, Thomas Jefferson, Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Frank Campau, Dorothy Gish, John Emerson, Owen Moore and Wilfred Lucas. For the present, six feature pictures are in active production, "The Man and the Test," starring Douglas Fairbanks; "The Lily and the Rose," featuring Lillian Gish, Rozsika Dolly and Wilfred Lucas; "The Martyrs of the Alamo," presenting Sam De Grasse and an all-star cast; "The Sable Lorcha," featuring Tully Marshall and Thomas Jefferson;" "Old Heidelberg," based on the English translation by Max Chapell, featuring Dorothy Gish and Wallace Reid, and an unnamed production, starring John Emerison. De Wolf Hopper is exepcted at the studio in the near future and the same applies to Helen Ware, Frank Campau and a list of speaking stage stars under consideration.

STILL IN BEAR VALLEY.

Joseph De Grasse and his company of Rex players are still in the Bear Valley country, seven thousand feet above the sea, where they have gone to stage a number of exteriors in a three-reel feature entitled "The King's Keeper," with Cleo Madison, Arthur Shirley and Lon Chaney in the leading roles.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

WARWICK THEATER, KANSAS CITY, MO.

Another Example of the Evolution of the Motion Picture Theater—Rose & Son Established First Show in Kansas City—Uses Fotoplayer Orchestrion.

THE evolution of the moving picture theater in Kansas City is an interesting one. The first theaters, as elsewhere, were little affairs with the front placarded and covered over with many large posters. Ora P. Rose and O. D. Rose, father and son, established the first moving picture theater in Kansas City, Mo. The first show brought such good results that two others were quickly opened. But the ignorance and the timidity of the public soon made it necessary to close the last two theaters. Orville Rose and his father continued to operate the first one, the old Electric Theater, at Twelfth street and Grand avenue, which was established in 1904. They operated this one for several years, finally letting it go to enter the exchange business for themselves. Later they withdrew from this and the moving picture shows entirely. Orville Rose began making moving pictures. He made several reels of current events and many pictures of his family life. He then opened in Kansas City the Warwick Theater. Nothing was left undone to make it the most attractive show in the city as well as the cleanest and most up-to-date.

The Warwick is situated in a high-class residence district on the south side at Fortieth and Main streets. It is a large preproof structure seating 1,200 persons. A large stage was installed for the staging of vaudeville acts, but none has yet been staged. A large gold fiber screen is used. The walls are attractively frescoed with beautiful designs and tints that gives the whole building an impressive color scheme. The stage is decorated with many palms and flowers that harmonize with the interior of the show. Fourteen large lighting chandeliers each containing four, sixty watt lamps, light the theater. The theater chairs were made especially for this theater and are set upon an inclined concrete floor. The aisles are all carpeted with a double thickness of velvet carpet. Six large fifty-six inch ceiling fans and fourteen small 18-inch wall fans acting as auxiliaries to the large six-foot electric typhoon that is constantly drawing the air out of the theater, serve to keep the theater cool in the summer and in the winter it is heated by steam.

The front of the theater is of stucco with a large white canopy over the entrance. Colored glass transoms over the entrances reflect the light in the evening and thus attract attention. Neat signs and flags in proportion to the building itself lend the whole theater a decided show appearance, but does not give that air of vulgarity that poster covered fronts give. Two large arc lights hang high on the building and throw just the right amount of light in front of the show. The light aided by several hundred smaller ones is not too intense or too impressive. The lobby is an enclosed one, right up to the minute in decoration. Nice neat frames display the scenes from the pictures that are being shown. Three large chandeliers light the lobby, each containing four sixty-watt lamps. Many of the scenes from the pictures are made by Orville Rose, as the exchange houses often run short of photographs. Mr. Rose has his own studio in which he makes these pictures. A patent ticket selling machine is in the window and when two tickets are purchased they are automatically handed to the patron. Just inside the lobby of the theater, before the patron enters the theater proper, is the parlor. Here modified lights burn through the whole show and the public has access to the wicker chairs that have been furnished for the parlor. Rich carpets of considerable thickness cover the floor and the patron is as much at ease as if he were in his own home.

The operating room is a metal fireproof one built in the rear of the house. It contains two Simplex machines, each driven by separate motors. The machines have the longest throw in the city, being nearly 168 feet. Orville Rose is the manager of the show and he was the first man in Kansas City to establish an exclusive feature playhouse. Each day some new feature is placed on the program with the Pathe cartoon and a travel picture. Mr Rose is strong for the travel pictures and education films. Ten cents admission is charged. Children are admitted for five cents, but not more than a dozen attend a single performance. The theater with a seating capacity of 1,200 is crowded ten minutes after the doors are opened every evening at 7.30 o'clock. Mr. Rose gives only two shows each evening. He issues programs of the pictures currently showing and those which will be shown later. These programs he mails to various houses on the South Side, which is the richest district in Kansas City, and they are received there with eagerness such as seldom greets the postman. Many have written to Mr. Rose personally, thanking him for his efforts and praising his theater and the service that he gives to his customers with such courtesy.

Some evenings it became necessary to stop the sale of tickets for the night by 8 o'clock. Long lines of motor cars and cabs are in front of the house every evening, showing to what class of patrons this institution caters. For music Mr. Rose pioneered the Fotoplayer machine in Kansas City and he has a master and composer in William Livernesh, who has been with him for many years. Mr. Livernesh uses many of his own writings and publications in his concerts. Mr. Rose has several moving picture machines and kodaks. He makes all his own slides and many of his own films. He has men traveling on the road for him. D. C. Millard is traveling for him with a full equipment and takes pictures of a town and shows them the same night. Mr. Rose has a complete studio in the Broadmoor Hotel where he does all his own work. Ministers and public advocates of clean and moral living daily send him letters complimenting his efforts in giving to the public the cleanest moral shows that can possibly be put on the screen. One minister even went so far as to solicit copies of scenes from one picture which he placed in the lobby of his church and he publicly urged his congregation to attend the moving picture show in the evening.

THE ARCADIA THEATER, PHILADELPHIA.

New Addition to Photoplay Houses Embodies Beauty and Serenity in Abundance—Is Equipped With Big Kimball Organ.

THAT the persons who are responsible for the erection of the Arcadia theater, 1529 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa., had in mind the beautiful sentiment of the poem Arcadia by Sir Philip Sidney is evidenced in the elegant construction and artistic decorations of this handsome photoplay palace. Sir Sidney endeavored to portray all that was beautiful and serene in his poem and it was with the same thoughts that the Arcadia was planned. Upon approaching the theater, either from Fifteenth or Sixteenth streets, one is immediately impressed by the view presented by the exterior decorations. A beautiful canopy extends from the entrance to the edge of the sidewalk and an immaculately clad attendant stands at the curb waiting to assist patrons of the theater who come in automobiles. The entire front is of white marble and is featured by an enormous electric sign which, at night, may be seen for many squares either east or west on Chestnut street, the "Fifth avenue" of Philadelphia. A scene of great beauty is presented to the onlooker upon entering the theater. The vestibule, lobby and foyer are constructed of French Champville marble and, in order to further enhance the beauty of the lobby, Venetian mirrors have been built in the walls and are so situated that everyone, entering or leaving the theater, is reflected from one side to the other. The entrance and exit passages are divided by a plain brass railing which is almost completely hidden from view by numerous plants.

Another View of Interior of Arcadia Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

An examination of the interior of the Arcadia reveals the fact that every device and convenience that human ingenuity could suggest has been incorporated in the building. The architects, Henon and Boyle, made a thorough study of the best features of the leading moving picture theaters, both in this country and abroad, and have incorporated the ideas thus obtained in the Arcadia. The architecture and decorations of the theater are of the French Renaissance style of the period of Louis XVI, and the general color scheme is ivory, old rose and gold. The chairs, which are made of Circassian walnut, are divided into three sections by aisles on the left and right sides of the theater. It may be mentioned here that all of the woodwork about the house is of Circassian walnut. The draperies are of silk velvet, trimmed with gold brocade and help considerably in adding to the general beauty of the theater. One of the leading features of the Arcadia is the wonderful ventilating plant with which it is equipped, it being the best that modern science can provide. Every particle of air is thoroughly washed and purified before it enters the auditorium of the theater. The process of purifying the air consists of having the air pass through fine particles of mist forced through large centrifugal air drums driven at a high speed by huge dynamos.

The building is absolutely fireproof in construction and was erected at a cost of $150,000. The ground upon which the theater was built is located in the heart of Philadelphia's most valuable real estate section and its purchase alone represents an investment of $500,000, making the total cost of the theater $650,000. The theater is under the direction of the Cecelia Amusement Company, of which company Alexander R. Boyd is president.

Music is furnished by a big Kimball organ which is operated by a competent man, and is well received by the patrons of the Arcadia. It is one of the biggest and most complete instruments in the city.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Honesty.

WHEN an Exhibitor takes a patron's money it is an implied promise that a reasonably good performance will be given. It certainly is an assurance that he will do his best, and his best certainly does not include the presentation of a reprinted Keystone comedy. The market seems to be flooded with English "dupes" and we have several lately on which even the tag of the British censorship appears. This is downright dishonest. Even were the "dupes" well done, there would still be the difference between an original and a reproduction that would be held against the Keystone company, but most of these dupes are wretchedly made, the printer apparently being out of order and permitting the film to buckle and go out of focus. A clientele, unversed in the ways of pictures, decides that Keystones are getting very poor, and this slips over to the conviction that all pictures are getting worse and presently a patron is lost to the business at large as well as to that Exhibitor in particular. It is unfair to everyone concerned, to the Public, to the Keystone Company, to the Exhibitor, the the business in general; and the few dollars saved by renting these fakes will be a most costly economy in the long run.

Give your patrons what you promise and you'll hold your business. Try to trick them and the reaction is inevitable. Between stripping Essanay paper and using fake Keystones the Exhibitors seem to be doing an excellent best to put the pictures and themselves out of business, and this at a time when the prospects in general are all for better work. Something must be done, and done quickly, if the pictures are not to be sacrificed to greed.

Still Trying.

Edwin O. Weinberg, of the Plaza, Troy, N. Y., is still working on his little magazine, and each issue shows an improvement. He is getting the knack of editing his stuff, but he is still so intent upon his magazine work that he is losing sight of the advertising possibilities. In his sixteen page magazine he takes but two pages for the program and underline proper and about three-quarters of a page for a little chat about coming attractions. The programs are set in body type.

With so much space at his command, he should take two pages for the program for the week and use display type. He should frame the program in rule, and preferably it should go on pages eight and nine; the middle pages, the rule or border frame taking in the two pages as a whole, a light rule separating the two pages from each other while the border holds them together. Then the underline on the back page should also be display, and display should not merely mean large, black type. It should mean a legible but attractive letter, black, but not too black, large, but not too large, and with some white space. The date should be in ten point bold italic and the titles in fourteen or eighteen point. The descriptive lines should not be machine but hand composition and should fall below the title and not be run in.

The text is better chosen, but it should be held up to date. The issue for the last week in July tells how Earle Metcalf fooled George Terwilliger down in St. Augustine. That was all right last spring, but since then the director has worked the home studio and it has been widely advertised that he is in Newport. Most persons know that, who are interested in such matters, and they will wonder at St. Augustine in July.

The appearance of the sheet will be improved by using some display face to caption the paragraphs. Caps of the body type are now used and these are not distinctive enough. A twelve point display line will break the blankness of the page and give more the appearance of importance. One point and we are done for this time. The type page is four inches wide. Cuts for such a column should be three and a half inches wide. If they are smaller than that—and the issue to hand shows one only one inch wide, they should be overrun, which means that they should be set into the type lines and not between the lines. Most stock cuts are made to go into the regulation newspaper column. In a wider measure there is a white space that kills the effect. If Mr. Weinberg will turn to any issue of this paper he will find many cuts, mostly portraits, thus overrun. In sending copy to the printer he should mark item "run around cut," paste a proof of the cut to the copy and send the actual cut along. Then the printer will overrun to exact measure and he will not have to pay for resetting later on.

We enjoy sitting in with Mr. Weinberg He wants to know, and when he finds out, he profits by the suggestions. We wish he could see his way clear to a couple of pages of advertising. It would ease the cost and the issue and would work just as hard.

Smooth.

The Regent, Buffalo, says things nicely. A current program is titled "Little things and the Regent." Turn the page and read down a little:

> It is not always the big things in life that make an impression. A famous explorer returning from a several months' hunt in the African jungle remarked that the lions, tigers and elephants caused him no worry at all, but the pesky little mosquitos had him almost "bughouse."

Quite a hit was registered in the Regent Theater recently on account of the display of a slide which read:

> FOR THE BENEFIT OF THOSE WHO MAY HAVE UNCOVERED AUTOMOBILES ON THE OUTSIDE:
> "IT IS RAINING"

As the reader will of course surmise, it suddenly commenced to rain, and attention is called to the above for no other reason than to let the public know that we are at all times studying the interest of our patrons—the little things as well as the big—briefly put, we argue as follows:

Not alone are we responsible for your entertainment while within the Regent but your comfort, health and safety as well. Hereafter patrons should notice a decided improvement in our Sunday Exhibitions, owing to a change in booking arrangements. Programs will have more variety, be better balanced, more entertaining and—cost more money.

The Regent runs big shows, but a whole week of features is not a fractional part of the fact that when it came on to rain the management told auto owners about it. Every man with an open face car was under immediate obligation. The others felt that the house considered its patrons. The slide was for autoists, but it reached all. The sign might be changed a little because few persons have automobiles on the inside, but the idea is worth taking up. It would be better to render the slide, "Owners of uncovered automobiles." Apart from this the notice is smooth and fluent and there is not a day in the entire program with the exception of that general "Sunday" in the last paragraph quoted, that does not carry the date as well.

The special Sunday programs, by the way, feature the music. And it is real music.

If they regularly use that lemon colored cover paper, it will pay them to try brown ink some time.

Bully for Boston.

The Municipal authorities of Boston realize that it pays to advertise even free shows and they go at it precisely as an Exhibitor would. They distribute four by six cards on stiff paper printed on one side with

> FREE
> BOSTON PARK SHOWS
> INCLUDING > MOVING PICTURES
> FOR WOMEN, MEN AND CHILDREN
> (not "children's movies")
> Schedule of Dates and Places — Over

On the reverse side particulars are given with dated days. As a matter of interest the text is given. It will pay exhibitors in the cities to bring the matter to the attention of the local welfare societies. These displays are largely made up of the propaganda stories such as Edison excels in, and do not interfere with the regular shows. On the other hand nothing can more strongly emphasize the fact that pictures are not merely toys. Motion Pictures are, as this advertising states, "not Children's Movies."

> The Boston Park Shows are free evening entertainments in parks and playgrounds of the city.

No Vaudeville, Please.

Piper's Opera Picture Show, Virginia City, Nev., sends in a double column advertisement six inches deep right in the centre of the front page of the sheet. Five-eighths of an inch of this space, four lines, tell that there will be two Keystones and adds that Spartacus is underlined. The rest of the space is given to an old vaudeville hokum that runs in part:

I bet on a horse called umbrella.
He was only good in the wet.
I bet on a horse called hydrant.
He's running yet.

There are nine of these couplets and one running

Tonight I'll bet on old nag Piper
For a sure good SHOW. He's a lead pipe cinch.

There is nothing to this to make business. The stuff might interest the readers in a mining town, but it will hardly fill them with a desire to go and see the show. The use of some catchy stuff to start a man reading an advertisement is all right, but there should be some advertisement to be read, and if there is no real argument, the intent of the space is lost. A single snappy sentence as an attractor is to be advised and commended, but eighty per cent. attractor and only twenty per cent. negative argument is a waste of money, no matter how little the space sells for. And all of that front page going to waste is more than a pity, particularly where the poem is not even correctly copied.

Equally futile use is made of space at the bottom of the same page where the announcement merely says that Spartacus, in eight reels and with special music will be shown on a certain date at a specified admission. Even lacking the company's press work, the imagination can conjure up the richness of picture offered by such a subject. The mere announcement of this or that film is not sufficient. Tell them you have Spartacus, or whatever it is, and then tell them enough to make them keenly eager to see it.

Very Good.

The Strand, Fremont, Ohio, gets out a program every two weeks and Carl F. Miller wants to know what we think of it. We think what he probably thinks. It's a nice job; a self-respecting job. The only suggestion we have to offer is that the front page should carry under "Our program for two weeks" the inclusive dates. It is on yellow paper, printed in brown, and the printer has done his work well in every particular. The type is good, well displayed and well printed. If you are looking for a model, send for one of these. It is only 4¼ by 6¾, but on two of these pages they get fourteen features without crowding and have the back page for house details. It's funny how some printers will crowd a page with one feature and another will get a dozen in the same place and still have it look less crowded. It is merely a matter of knowing how. If you do not want to spend much money, ask Mr. Miller for a copy. If you want to come out every week, run the program on page three and keep two for the house talk, using four for the underlines. For a fortnightly program, use it as it stands.

Wilby's First.

We have waited with real interest for the first issue of the new house organ to be issued by W. B. Wilby, former editor of the Academian, for the Strand Amusement Company, of Montgomery, Alabama. It has come in with no name, for in place of the heading is the line "This paper has no name, see page 2," and on page 2 ten dollars is offered for a good name. It's salutatory runs:

BY WAY OF GREETINGS.

My name is Robert and I am Mr. Wilby's son. I have come to manage the Strand, Plaza and Orpheum theaters, ostensibly for The Strand Amusement Company, but actually for you, for it is entirely for you that they are being operated. If they are run in a manner that pleases you, then must that S. A. C. be pleased; but it matters not how well they may think the thing done, if it does not please you.

With that idea in view we are pleased, delighted, flattered and favored by any suggestion you may make, any objection you may register. Even more than praise we want "kicks," for praise only indicates that things are as they should be, while the "kicks" show the way to making them better. And in criticising you give us the opportunity to rectifying the things which you may not like, and thereby are the gainer yourself by it.

So much for the personal introduction.

Mr. Wilby says there is too much small type. There is not, if he means the reading matter. This is one mistake that so many make. They use a ten or twelve point body type that is too large. It does not have the appearance of a paper, and to make it look like a "regular" paper should be the first care of an editor. Small type costs more by area, but Mr. Wilby always has things to say, and he needs space to say them in, and he needs to make the text look real in order to be attentively read. If the cost is not prohibitive, we would most strongly urge the retention of the present body type.

But if he means that the programs are badly set, he is correct. It is all machine work where display should have been used, if not wholly, at least for titles.

In succeeding isues half of each page will be given the programs of the three houses by days. This will afford more space for display and we know Mr. Wilby well enough to believe that he will see the printer about it, for his other work was so well displayed that we look to see the same results in this sheet. But we know what work there is in getting a new printer trained to our ways. We have been through it three times and the Recording Angel still has the black marks against us.

We miss, too, the snappy, personal chat that we used to get, and ascribe to its lack the same reason. We hope that Mr. Wilby, when he hits his stride, will give us the old style editorial page.

The first issue is promising, but not up to the Wilby standard and we think he knows it as well as we do. But now that the forms are laid and the printer has been licked, we shall watch with interest.

Udell's.

Dave Udell shocked his readers lately by advertising one of his houses for rent. The house was seemingly doing a good business, but there was a reading notice to the effect that the house was for rent and a reference to an advertisement. This was the notice:

Here is a grand opportunity for movie fans. The Crystal Theater, located in the heart of Paxton, on the corner of N. Market and W. Pells street, using the most reputable films in the world, viz.: The Universal, showing the following brands: Rex, Powers, Laemmle, Imp, Victor, Nestor, L-Ko, Joker, Eclair, Sterling, Gold Seal, 101 Bison and Big U, featuring the following world-famed stars, Ella Hall, Mary Fuller, Grace Cunard, Francis Ford, Warren Kerrigan, Anna Little, Herbert Rawlinson, Harry Meyers, Violet Meresereau, Cleo Madison, Edna Maison, Phillips Smalley, Ben Wilson, Lois Weber, Rosemary Theby, Billie Ritchie, Mary Pickford, Dorothy Phillips, William Garwood, Pauline Bush and hundreds of others.

For terms consult Crystal Theater ad on back page.

This was carried under a two line head and set precisely as the other items of news. Reference to the page indicated showed an advertisement for the Crystal and the top third ran:

FOR RENT!

An Exceptionally Strong Offer

The Crystal Theater, which seats 320 people, is for rent—to everybody and anybody—man, woman or child.

FREE ACCESS

Come and go when you please after 7 o'clock at night. May occupy any seat in the house, providing it has no occupant when you enter $000,000.10 down at the window and that much thereafter per seat for one and one-half hours or one show, four reels. 5 seats, 50c; 10 seats, $1.00, etc. Rent as many as you like.

TERMS

This is only good for a reasonably small place or a neighborhood theater, but it is capital where it may be worked. It is also a good example of the right sort of sell.

Another reading notice evidently refers to some well known character with a preference for a beard who was suddenly converted:

CAME OUT AFTER TWENTY YEARS OF HIDING.

Ad Crac of Buggscuffle, Ill., was seen for the first time in twenty years Monday afternoon in front of the postoffice, he was better looking than people gave him credit for. No one had seen his face for twenty years. After being interrogated concerning his recent change on this earth, he made the following reply: "Well, I'll tell ye. I went up t' Chicago last week t' see a feller my wife said knowed all about farm machinery, and after I got through with my business I thought I'd take in one of 'em er shows. So es I was walkin' along I came across a crowd o' folks tryin' t' git in, so I jes thought I'd go "where t' crowd goes," as the sayin' is. I went up t' ther winder or bars, as y' might call it, and tried to secure a ticket, but t' gent inside said, if I wanted to go in I'd have t' git shaved because their wasn't enough room for me and my whiskers, too. I went and got shaved and then saw the show. 'Twas t' best show I ever saw, too; and jest recently I heered that the Majestic Theater in Paxton is goin' t' have the same show Thursday, Friday and Saturday, July 1, 2 and 3."

And here is some stuff along the lines of earlier efforts, but with a difference:

TO MOVING PICTURE FANS:

I los my job, git discourage and i say to miself why should i work all milife hard like ful i am strong feller nise look work on railroad 10 year. No good pay, me honest, git discharg, what's de use. I go kill miself.

I go piktur show firs. I se Animated Weekly, you know, everything jam together lie. I say I like it, good news. Me know see piktur before. I too see feller Wm. Garwood and Violet Mersereau in "The Adventure of the Yellow Curl Papers," two times it come on different. Like exite, good exciting. De nex one no news, no sad. I dono what. People laugh, i laugh. It say "The Way He Won the Widow." De nex piktur same i saw first. i leave. i no kill miself now. Me got good job. Happy go to show every night.

Yours sincere,
Petra Loveto.

MORAL: When you get the blues, don't stay in the house or ponder on those things which make you melancholy. Go to the Crystal. The pictures will cure you.

P. S. We show the program mentioned in the letter tonight.

That is all of the Udells for this time, but there are more coming He runs very evenly to his work and does not merely register an occasional hit.

Pinched and Glad.

Charles L. McNamara, of the Majestic, Streator, Ill., ran a Chaplin contest lately. That it drew is evidenced by the fact that he was arrested for violation of the fire laws and pleaded that the house was overflowing before he could check the flow of patrons. And at that he gave three shows instead of just one. But when Mr. McNamara asks us to put it right in—well, we're trying now to coax an extra page now and then

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Yelps.

SOMEONE, either a woman or a womanish man, to judge the handwriting, sends in this clipping:

Don't laugh at those who make mistakes
And stumble on the way.
For you are apt to follow them--
And almost any day.
Don't think the others shifting sand,
While you are solid rock,
And don't forget, for heaven's sake,
That any fool can knock.—E.r.

Below is written: "My compliments to the champion discourager of the present age. Amateur."

If we thought that Amateur had opinions of any value, we should regard the comment as flattering, but we are afraid that we are not as successful in discouraging boobs as we should like to be.

This department is not written and printed to help sell papers to the ignorant, nor to encourage the unfit to write stories. It is planned to help the business of photoplay writing and making in general, and not to nurse the thin-skinned vanity of the hopelessly incompetent.

We have never written a line yet in this department or out of it—that was planned to discourage the possible writer. We have sought to keep down the average of impossibles, not alone for the good of the business but for the good of those who work without possible chance of eventual reward.

THE MAN OR WOMAN WHO IS FITTED TO BE AN AUTHOR CANNOT BE DISCOURAGED. ALL OTHERS SHOULD BE. They cannot hope to succeed and they interfere with the chances of the others. It makes no difference to us, personally or financially, whether there are one thousand or fifty thousand trying to write scripts. It does not affect our limited market or our chances of making a sale. When we seek to show those who have come into the business because they have heard that there is money in it that something beside desire for gain is essential, we are not trying to get them out of our way, but out of their own.

It is just about four years since this department was started in embryo. In all those four years we have regularly received letters from would-be authors. It is only within the last month that an inquirer came out flat-footed with the statement that he lacked imagination and the question as to whether he could replace the want of this with certain other qualifications. He was told that he could not and he promptly dropped the idea. This is the one and only instance in more than a thousand cases where the writer of the letter said the same thing unknowingly and had to be read between the lines. They have written asking how to get the rights to books and plays. They have written to ask where they can sell historical subjects or old legends, they have asked how far they could go in stealing another person's ideas without being prosecuted, but only one man in the entire lot has had the honesty to say that he could not think of ideas.

In a business that is founded on originality and intelligence, is it not a kindness to try and discourage the manifestly unfit? Is it not a kindness to seek to discourage the efforts of the person who does not even possess the first qualification toward success? Is it not a kindness to tell the man who can neither use good English nor spell correctly that the business has grown beyond his probable mental quipment? The lazy writer who wants to sell synopses only, the writer who is afraid to offer good work, the dunce who has been told the work is so easy that anyone can make $50 a week, the literary thief who wants to steal the ideas of others and the crude technician who wants to dramatize the Bible and the history of the world have no place in the present scheme of things. They flood the markets with low grade efforts and bury in their mass of mediocrity the occasional effort of a competent. They make it harder for the good to gain recognition, and they keep the prices down by suggesting to the heads of concerns that in such a mass of material there must be some good ten and twenty-five-dollar stories. We saw the other day the accumulation of six weeks in a certain studio. The top of the regulation flat top desk, about three feet by thirty inches, was heaped eighteen inches high with stuff, and of the first thousand handled, but three were held for consideration and these only for their possibilities and not for their immediate excellences.

Is it any wonder that we wish to discourage the grossly unfit? Four out of five of those who have gained success admit their debt to this publication. The helpless we can help only by suggesting that they direct their efforts and energies into other and more promising channels.

Now some one else start something.

Comedy Serials.

Don't write comedy serials. There is no market for them. One came along the other day. In part one the lady told the "gent" that he must have a thousand dollars. In each succeeding part he tried a new job. There was nothing else to carry the interest over. That is not enough, and at best makers are getting to fight shy of the serial idea.

Exaggeration.

Some authors, particularly comedy writers, seem to think that originality means undiluted insanity. Just to be original they invent the most impossible ideas. If they think it would be funny to have an elephant in their story, they do not rest content with an elephant. Just to show the vividness of their imagination they have the elephant fly into the picture, get into an automobile, run the car up the side of a house, jump from that roof to the next, then to the ground, where it turns a somersault and then turns into a tug boat that runs rapidly down the road, only to become a submarine when it hits the ocean.

That is too darned original. It is too original to be clever. It is too original to be accepted by an audience unless the entire story can be held to the same extreme of impossibility, when the story would become far too costly to make.

Another type of writer sees a funny story in which the comedian is supposed to break his leg. He tells himself he can do better than that, so he goes home and writes a story in which the comedian has his leg cut off. If the broken leg is funny the amputated member must be a lot funnier. Possibly it would be, but the comedian might object.

In reality this burlesque stuff is the hardest sort of thing to write, because it must be possibly impossible. Whimsy is the rarest gift of the humorist, and it is not for the novice to monkey with unless he has a rich parent or knows how to rob post office safes without getting caught.

No Improvement.

Daniel Ellis is now reading scripts for Lubin, not as editor, but merely as a reader. For a time, about a year ago, he was an assistant reader for the same company, and the interval has been spent in original work. He says that even in a year there has been a drop in the quality of the output, not only a drop in the number of good ones, but in the percentage of good ones to the hundred. This may, in part, be accounted for by the fact that most of the regular writers knew that the Lubin company largely depended upon its own staff of writers and did not send there, but other readers with companies always in the market, have said the same thing.

This is probably partly due to the fact that the number of correspondence school pupils has been greatly increased and perhaps in part to the fact that those who really can write find the present market discouraging. The sort of men who can write the class of stories manufacturers now need to put on if they are to maintain the popularity of motion pictures, will not continue at the work for twenty-five to fifty dollars a reel.

Incidentally it might be noted that the dispersal of the staff of writers leaves Lubin in the market for free lance stories at present, but only for the best class of stuff at top prices.

Unnecessary.

A recent script carried this on its front page:

SYNOPSIS.

This story doesn't need any because the scenes tell the story.

Surely the scenes of any script will tell the story, but the editor has not the time to read all the action just to find out what the story is about. The author probably thought he was very clever to make this sidestep. The editors are still more clever. They know that an ignoramus like that cannot write a decent story, so they dump it back into the mails.

Synopses Only.

Some lady is muddled about the synopsis only idea. She sends her scripts out with a note that reads:

Mr. Editor:

If you are not buying scenarios kindly accept the story without the scenario.

Probably she means to suggest that she will sell the synopsis only if they are not paying for full scripts, but she expresses herself very badly. And the idea of the synopsis only is that the author who cannot write the full action will be permitted to send in a synopsis without the action.

For Five Years.

Here is a newspaper man who has been working for five years, and he is not discouraged yet. Read it, you, who chafe at the end of three months:

Perhaps I should introduce myself as one of the vast army of would-be photoplay authors. Photoplaywriting is a "most profitable and interesting profession"—see advertisements in the various popular magazines. It is, if one goes about it right. I still class with the would-be photoplay authors, but my work has proved to be both profitable and interesting. Wanting to talk to someone, I have selected you to be the victim. You were warned in advance of the nature of this letter. If the letter finds its way to the wastebasket unread there is no loss to you, and if it furnishes you some amusement then it has done some good.

I am a reporter on the staff of a daily newspaper. Considering the fact that writing is my daily toil, it may seem strange that I make it also my recreation, yet such I call writing photoplays and short stories. There is a lot of amusement in writing photoplays, even if none are sold. My reward has been principally in amusement. In your department, on several occasions, you have referred to writing as "work." I'll admit the classification if you will also concede that the interest takes away the feeling of drudgery. There is an atmosphere of uncertainty and variety in newspaper work which seems to get into the blood. I should be a poor bookkeeper or machine tender, knowing that each day would be the same as those that went before with merely longer columns of figures or a break in the machinery to relieve the monotony. Other professions might prove as interesting, but I can imagine none equal to newspaper reporting, unless it be the production end of motion pictures.

Let me say that my writing has not proved a loss. From a direct money standpoint I suppose that I am out several dollars for postage, smaller amounts for paper and typewriter ribbons and incidentals and, with the goods to show for the expenditure, magazines and textbooks. On the other hand, I have been pleasantly employed and amused for hours. I know that the practice has helped my other writing, has quickened my powers of observation and developed a habit of reasoning. All these are benefits derived from my recreation.

For a would-be writer, I have one of the finest collections of rejection slips in the country. My earliest slip from a photoplay company was received in August, 1910, from Lubin. Lubin had furnished the form sheet which was used as a model, and accordingly my first scenario, a thrilling Civil War drama in eight scenes, based on an actual occurrence, found its way to Philadelphia. Except for the censorship note which was on many of the early slips, Lubin is using the same style today. If I had been offered $75 for that masterpiece I would have hesitated about accepting it. If, six months later, I had been offered fifty cents for scenarios two or three I would have grabbed the chance. Imp also advertised about that time, and was for some time the target for each scenario written. The polite, personal letters of rejection with the suggestion that success might come with practice almost made it a pleasure to welcome back a script. There were weeks and sometimes months between the writing of each play. In 1912 I sent a play to Imp and received it back with a slip of yellow paper about two by three inches, signed with the unknown name of Universal Film Mfg. Co. In the early part of 1914 I found aids and text books which started me earnestly at work. Instead of one, two or three scenarios a year, as had been the rule, I wrote that number each month, and in most cases sent them off to the producers as fast as returned without stopping to consider any faults. I can smile at some of those early scripts. If I had the money and could do so, I would have a letter of gratitude written and sent to all who, forced to read what I had written, decided to return it without telling me how rotten it was.

I am not writing many photoplays now. Most plots go unwritten as being either too weak or too closely resembling stories I have read or films seen. I feel a certain responsibility for what I write even if it will not be produced. The general tendency to exploit crime does not appeal to me. There are too many crime stories now. Tears in their place are all right, but the happy audience would be the one I would seek. Clean comedy can be written, although it seems to me to be one of the most difficult things to get over, and will make an appeal. I want to write something that will amuse or help. If I don't write the "wife stealing," "murder" and "theft" stories that seem to be so popular with the studios or the slapstick comedy that offends average sense of decency, I ought not to expect to sell. Perhaps so, but I shall, sometime. What writing I have done has helped me. I shall keep on. Of course, I don't claim to write merely for the love of writing. I expect to sell sometime and meanwhile I get the enjoyment that a man with the short end of a 25-1 shot in a horse race would have. Just as in newspaper work, in writing photoplays I feel there is more than the money return, there is the enjoyment of the work.

It may interest this correspondent to know that the early rejection slip and form sheet were both the product of this writer, for we were the Lubin editor then and were busy encouraging Emmett Campbell Hall, William Kitchell and the other stars of that day—and they were not getting $75 per then, nor yet selling $0 scene scripts. It was along about that time we were regarded as being mildly insane for wanting to cut in leaders instead of putting them between scenes.

But reminiscences do not get anywhere in particular and this letter presents an interesting problem. The writer is a newspaper man. He has worked long and faithfully, but in five years he has not arrived at success. And it is all because he has not put his working time in. He is like a college student who can attend lectures but two or three months a year instead of continuing with his class. In other words he has not yet done his appointed stint of work.

He is not writing photplays. Most plots go unwritten. They are too weak or too strongly suggest some other plot. There were weeks and sometimes months between plays. The writer supplies, unconsciously his own diagnosis.

Suppose a plot is too weak. All plots are not born strong. Some are mighty sickly babies. But they can be given good food and strong tonics and built up into virile stories. Even if the author does not reach success, his study and experimenting will help him to write other plots more quickly and more intelligently.

Suppose that it is precisely like Camille, for instance. Then make it unlike Camille. Do not change it to get a masculine Camille; get something new. It can be done because it is being done every day. It is not by saying a plot is like an existing plot that progress is made. It is by making it different that facility in plotting is gained.

Then there were weeks between plays. Most practical writers find that they must keep in the plotting habit to turn out acceptable work. They cannot wait for plots. They must go out and kidnap them.

Every man and woman who can write must write a certain number of plays before they can learn to do good work. It is seldom that the number can be predetermined. It is seldom that the number does not employ three points. This preliminary work must be done; carefully and painstakingly accomplished. Within reasonable limits, the more constant the application the more quickly will success come because the worker stays in the plotting mood instead of having to fire up a cold boiler each time he needs steam.

And please note that the correspondent does not regret his lost time. He says the work has better fitted him for his vocation. That is what most writers find.

Comedies.

In spite of the declaration that the comedy market is poor, it never was better for those who can produce what is wanted. The trouble is that even some of the old standbys have lost track of the demand. They write what they used to write or else they go to the other extreme and write what they should not.

Last fall there was a swing from the slapstick comedy. There was a press outcry against the excessive slapstick and Universal invented the term "parlor" comedies and others talked of "light" and "polite" comedies and brutally kicked slapstick comedies into the gutter. But it happened that the public was not through. They would have none of the mild and gentle comedies and so the makers of film went back to make slapstick stuff again. At once the authors shouted with glee that they had found the idea. They would write slapstick in the extreme. They did. Some directors put in the excessive slapstick where the authors went only half way. They mussed the stuff all out of reason. But the real men steered a middle course. They read the handwriting on the wall. They gave lively action instead of sheer brutality, and they "came through." Not alone must the action be lively, but it must be understandable unless it is purely travesty. The old stories of how Uncle Tom came to see Nephew Jack and demanded the wife on whose account Jack has been getting money are no longer in demand. In the old way Jack would borrow a "wife." So would his pal and perhaps the janitor. Under the new dispensation Jack goes out to look for a wife and a comic opera chorus comes along and Jack comes back and admits that he is a Mormon. And the comic opera chorus comes on in costume and when Jack goes to look for his wife he goes in such a hurry that only half of his face is shaved or he cannot find his proper garments and must go disguised as a washwoman.

In other words, the old foundation must be taken and magnified; not merely worked over. It cannot merely be as good as a previous outworking of the same idea. It must be much better. It must be livelier and still be better explained.

Eventually we will work back to the polite comedies because the people will want them. The time will come when humor will once more supersede burlesque. And the change may come almost overnight. A couple of years ago the Keystone started in with the old slapstick ideas done in a new way. In two months the rest of the makers were doing stuff "like Keystone." They still are doing the same stuff. They may keep it up until everyone gets tired of it, or tomorrow a company may make more money through regularly and consistently producing polite stuff. The moment they do the burlesque style will be thrown away and all will race for the lace trimmed stories, but until a smash comes one way or the other, there will be a demand for stuff that is big in idea, reasonably big in presentation and ahead of the old ideas. Write polite ideas, if you will, but do not try to sell them now. Wait Hold them against the time that will come. Meantime supply the market with what the market wants and you'll be made very welcome.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important! Operators Notice!

THIS department has received such an enormous number of kicks about the poor inspection of film that I am going to make you the following proposition. I am doing this at the request of one of the largest film manufacturers in the country: Where you find evidence of poor inspection, cut out the faulty part, or the poor splices, and forward them to me, with the data as to what day the films were received, and what exchange they were received from. You may either sign the letter, or sign your name on a separate slip of paper, and enclose a stamped blank envelope. I will then forward the whole thing to the headquarters of the company handling that exchange, with request they investigate the matter, and remedy whatever is wrong with the inspection in their exchange. Now please understand that I must have the following data: First: What make of film is it; second: Does it come from a Universal, a General Film, a Mutual, or an independent exchange; third: What day was it received? Don't mix up bad patches, or other faults, cut from several reels. If you take out faults from several reels, put each one in a separate envelope and mark them with the name of the film, when the film was received, and what exchange it came from; or, if you cannot use so many envelopes, pin the pieces of film together and attach a tag; also don't forget the postage, because, while I am willing to do this, I cannot pay out two or three dollars a day in postage to accomplish even as great a good as I hope will result from this proposition.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 100.

Best answers will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What effect has lamphouse ventilation on condenser breakage? How much ventilation ought the lamphouse to have and what, in your opinion, is the best method of supplying it?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 94.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, and, that is all, although Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, Louisiana, and C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada, are entitled to honorary mention as having come reasonably close—particularly Weiss.

I am very sorry about one feature of this, viz.: that is the first break Brother Smith has had in being unqualifiedly on the Roll of Honor. However, it is not to be expected that you are all going to get through on the optical end of it. It would be really wonderful if you did. Where Smith made his mistake was in assuming that the wrong focal length condensers brought about the ghost proposition. Well, until quite recently I thought it did myself.

Reply to Question No. 94.

By John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn.

The Question:

What is the effect of using condensers of too long focal length? Of too short focal length? Why does a cracked condenser show in the stereopticon picture and not in the moving picture?

The Answer:

Using too long focal length condensers means nothing more or less than too great a distance between the condenser and the crater, and in consequence poor illumination, or too small a spot when the image of the crater is in focus, with, in consquence, poorly illuminated corners on the screen.

Using condensers of too short focal length means nothing more or less than too large a spot when the image of the crater is in focus at the aperture, and too short a distance between condenser and crater, with consequent danger of condenser breakage, and good illumination if the spot is not excessively large.

The focal length of condensers have nothing to do with blue ghosts, white ghosts, or any other ghosts, the latter condition being brought about by using the condensers in an unsuitable location with relation to the objective lens in use, and by regulating the size of the spot at the aperture, irrespective of whether it is in focus or not. The reason a cracked condenser shows on the screen through the stereopticon lens is that the condenser is close to the plane which is focused at the screen through the stereopticon lens, whereas, it is far removed from the film plane, which is focused at the screen through the moving picture lens.

From the Past.

The editor had a very agreeable surprise recently when two callers appeared at this office, bringing with them an odor of musty memories. These gentlemen, F. A. and W. H. Selby, call Moberly, Mo., their home, and more than that, they are the sons of a man, who, in days long past, I many times promised myself the pleasure of giving a good thumping if I ever got the chance to do it without incurring the penalty of getting fired. Mr. Selby, the father, was master mechanic of the Wabash Railroad at Moberly in the days when I was poking coal into a Wabash locomotive. The reason for the belligerency on my part was the manner in which the old gentleman used to land on whomever presented the slightest excuse on days when his breakfast did not happen to agree with him. Well, looking back through the mellowing years, things look different somehow, and I'd much rather shake old man Selby's hand than make good my desire of other days, though neither can be done, for he has long since boarded the phantom train and disappeared on the mist of the endless shore.

The Messrs. Selby are, or have been, in the show business, and more particularly, the moving picture show business, in the old "home town" Moberly. They are in New York on a mission which may prove to be of enormous benefit to the business, and may prove, though let us trust not, to be only another pipe dream. They are the inventors of a projection machine having no intermittent movement, projecting from a constant running film.

This particular thing has used up a large amount of gray matter of many able men in the past, and if the sons of "The Old Man," as we used to call him, have solved it, it will indeed be gratifying, because the machine, if successful, would be something more than a blessing to the business, and, incidentally to the house of Selby.

The principle involved seems to be somewhat different from anything I have looked at up to date—and you may take it from me, I have looked at a few schemes evolved by inventors for this particular purpose. Without going deeply into details the general proposition is a continuous prism, forming, in effect, the outer edge or periphery of a wheel which would come between the film and objective in about the position formerly occupied by the inside shutter of the old style projection machine. They assure me that chromatic aberration has been entirely overcome and it seems to me that this ought to work out. One stumbling block I can see is the price of a lens of that kind. I am afraid the boys will find it to be more costly than they imagine, though I most sincerely hope not. But that is a matter for the future. As soon as the machine is completed and I have seen a demonstration of the same in actual operation, I will give it an extended photographic description, provided, of course, it appears to be a practical projection machine.

I enjoyed my visit with the Selby boys very greatly, for they knew many of the old timers with whom I worked in days long past.

Wants Help.

H. Daley, Claremont, New Hampshire, says:

> I am having trouble with the power company regarding current. Conditions are as follows: Am using a Simplex machine, taking current through a Bell-Howell inductor built for 110 volts, 60 cycles. The voltage of the line is 118. My leads get hot, as also does the inductors and my arc shows on the screen when projecting slides. Have asked them for 110 volts, but this they claim they cannot supply, as they have to maintain a high voltage to take care of their lights on the outskirts of town. Could you give me a little help on this subject?

You can take care of the matter by hooking sufficient resistance into the primary circuit to cut the voltage to 110, but that would be wasteful. It seems to me the best thing for you to do is to make an arrangement with the Bell-Howell Company, Chicago, to supply you with an inductor wound to take care of 118 volts, making you an allowance for your present machine. That would be costly, but it is the practical thing to do.

High Grade Lenses.

Article by Collin N. Bennett, Escot, Penzance, England.

For a considerable time the editor has had a large life-size suspicion that the moving picture industry, as a whole, was coming very close to making an ass of itself. I am now pretty thoroughly convinced that that is the exact fact. What I mean by this is that we are, or rather the film manufacturer, is sparing no expense to get the very best obtainable camera lens; he is willing to pay a hundred or even a hundred and fifty dollars for a highly corrected lens which will give the necessary flat, sharp field, detail and depth. He gets all this registered on the film with his high grade lens, and then we deliberately, and almost with malice aforethought, proceed to wipe out the good effects of the high grade camera lens by projecting the picture with the cheapest thing we can get. They are recovering from that particular form of insanity over in England. Correspondence with Mr. Colin N. Bennett, Escot, Penzance, England, who belongs to the staff of the Kinematograph Weekly, London, and is an acknowledged expert in matters of this kind, still further strengthened our suspicion that the cheap projection lens was wrong, and other things seem to point toward the same thing. Finally we engaged Mr. Bennett to prepare an article which appears herewith. In reading Mr. Bennett's contribution, please remember that he is a recognized authority in matters of this kind, and it is largely due to his efforts that high class objective lenses are being used in the projection machines in the better theaters of England today.

Mr. Bennett says:

I have been requested by the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World, New York City, to give some account of what we are doing in Great Britain towards improving the quality of projection lenses. First of all let us come to an agreement that the ordinary run of projection lens thrown in with the projector outfit should be, and can be, improved upon.

For instance, when focusing with the ordinary sort of lens we have to choose a point on the screen somewhere about mid-way between center and edge, and concentrate on getting that point critically sharp. Unless the lens is of very long focus for a M. P.: objective, that is to say, unless the picture is rather small for the throw, we shall still find the edges, and especially the corners might be improved upon. Vitagraph title borders, in particular, illustrate this fact to an unpleasant extent. Again, when an insert such as a hand-written letter comes on the screen the fine penmanship in the centre may also look woolly. In either of the above-mentioned instances the operator is faced with the three alternatives of (1) putting up with things as they are, (2) refocusing before the audience, always an objectionable proceeding where it can be avoided, and (3) getting the management to supply and fit a projection lens free from the limitations of his present one, always providing such an ideal lens is obtainable. So much, then, for the case of the high class objective as a means of obtaining uniform critical definition to the edges of the screen, and so doing away with the re-focusing trouble. But this matter of increased sharpness is not the only one in which a good lens may score over a merely ordinary one. Nor is it, perhaps, the first point to be urged. with some managers, at any rate, as a means of ingratiating the better class instrument.

A better quality lens, properly used, may be expected to pass a considerably augmented amount of the light from the arc to the screen. That means better illuminated pictures for the same expenditure of current, or, if you prefer it, it means equally well-lit pictures with greater economy of current. In other words, a high class lens costing perhaps fifty dollars or so, will give better screen results for all time, while it only takes a little while to pay for itself in current saved. I think we shall most of us agree, then, that if this ideal kind of lens is to be had it is well worth obtaining.

At the present moment there are at least four thoroughly British firms of lens makers, the names of all of them known in the States, which have seriously taken up this question of improving kinematograph projection. Had not the European war (from the disastrous trade effects of which none of us over here can escape) switched all four firms temporarily on to government work the effect of what they are doing for the motion picture exhibitor would by this time be considerably more apparent than it is. The optical firms to which I allude are Messrs. J. H. Dallmeyer, Ltd., Willesdon; Messrs. Ross, Ltd., 3 North Side, Clapham Common, whose American representatives are Messrs. George Murphy, Inc., 57 East Ninth street, New York; Messrs. R. & J. Beck, Ltd., 68 Cornhill, E. C., London, and Messrs, Taylor, Taylor & Hobson, Ltd., Leicester, England, whose American branch is at 1133 Broadway, New York. Dallmeyer's was the first of the four to see the possibilities awaiting really good kinematograph lenses.

The Dallmeyer projection lenses are marketed in foci from 1¾ inches up to seven inches, though their distinctive qualities show up to most advantage in foci from three inches upwards. They are not anastigmats but are optical modifications of the world renowned Dallmeyer "Patent Portrait" combination, which was itself the first really satisfactory modern type portrait photgrapher's lens to be invented. The fact that these Dallmeyer lenses are not astigmatically corrected means that the field of focus is still somewhat curved. That is, in order to get absolute sharpness the projection screen ought to be more or less saucer shaped, according to the size of picture and throw. In practice the falling away from theoretical perfection in this respect is too slight to be noticeable with lenses over three inches focus, as already hinted at. On the other hand the correction for spherical aberration is most perfect. A lens with much spherical aberration will not focus a critically sharp image on any part of the screen, a state of things which some of those who read this will have actually met with before now in the course of their travels. Flare and coma are other lens defects producing foggy projection. These also are done away with, and the result is that the lines of the picture fairly stand out like whipcord when a Dallmeyer lens is used. Incidentally from 20% to 40% more light gets to the screen from the arc than would ordinarily be the case. The last is due to the lens possessing a very high relative aperture.

At present Dallmeyer lenses are in use in the following English circuits which those whose knowledge extends to conditions in Great Britain will recognize as among the best kinematograph theater circuits we have: Provincial Cinematograph Theaters, Electric Palaces, Ltd., Amalgamated Cinematograph Theaters, Ltd., Gales Circuit, Associated Provincial Cinematograph Theaters, Moss Empires, New Gallery Kinema, etc.

When it comes to price, it must be owned that to our English way of viewing things Dallmeyer lenses might be cheaper. For instance a five inch, series 14 (extra wide aperture, F2.7) projection lens in barrel for rack mount (but not including the rack mount itself) costs at list price £8 15s., with, at present, an extra 10% to cover increased cost of materials during the war. Add to this figure 25% U. S. import duty and I am afraid you look like paying somewhere in the neighborhood of sixty dollars for one of these objectives. In Great Britain £12 for a new lens makes managers think, though, undoubtedly, the change over is well worth the money.

Messrs. Ross have recently brought out a projection lens which follows similar main lines to the Dallmeyer. At present it is only manufactured in foci from four to seven inches, the lenses being catalogued at a uniform price of £4 10s., plus a 15% war rise. Ross's inform me that when Messrs. George Murphy, Inc., get their first supplies of this lens, which they will do as soon as urgent government orders allow it, they will probaly be able to offer them on the American market under conditions which would bring the price out at somewhere about forty dollars. At the moment the lenses have no public record behind them, for the simple reason that they are a new introduction, only just past the testing stage. "Ross Express," anastigmatic projection: Camera lenses for ordinary use, and also "Telecentric" tele-photographic kinematograph camera lenses for negative making of topicals from a distance, are both well known and well appreciated in Britain. But that is a digression from the matter in hand.

In the "Beck Neostigmar" projection lens we come to a real anastigmat. This lens gives a perfectly flat anastigmatic field. It has covering power sufficient for a kinematograph picture in all foci from two inches upwards, though at present the stock sizes made up in barrel mounts for slipping into the rack work of the projector are three, four and five inch foci. The price is very moderate, £3 over here with, of course the inevitable war increase of 10%, so that cost of a "Projection Neostigmar" in the States should not exceed twenty-five dollars. An anastigmat lens, if it is a good genuine instrument, should project a picture as flat as the screen itself. That is to say, what I mentioned a litle way back about the screen theoretically most suitable being one with a concave or saucer shaped surface will not now hold good. Anastigmats have sometimes in the past been given a bad name because the word was used loosely to describe more or less cheap French goods which were not truly astigmatically correct at all. Unfortunately the French, although excellent allies, have not always in the past proved themselves as careful photographic lens makers as one could wish. Somehow they have not paid sufficient attention to the intricacies of refractive index of optical glass, as have the Germans, for instance. Needless to say in this sort of optical work the right glass to start with is everything. Not long ago an English lens maker and importer told me of how a French colleague consigned to him a case of lenses which were of double the nominal length. Inquiry showed that the works having run out of the original batch of optical glass for which the lens curves were computed, manufacture was continued with a new batch of glass having a refractive index that upon checking turned out to be utterly different. Latterly the French firm of Guilbert has placed on the British market a series of excellent medium priced and moderate apertured kine: projection lenses.

The firm of Taylor, Taylor & Hobson, notwithstanding its Broadway branch, is typically English. Since 1896 it has been making and successfully marketing a most perfect type of triple element uncemented anastigmat for general photographic purposes. Now, as anyone knows who studies the question of optical projection, an anastigmat combination consisting of only three thin elements without any balsam to be discolored or softened by extreme heat and light action, made up with colorless glass, is by its very nature almost ideal for the purpose. Ask many a photographer in the U. S. what he thinks of the "Cooke" lens, and he will give it the high praise it deserves. For years past it has been possible, by simply putting up this same lens in a plain barrel mount, to market it successfully for projection purposes. Yet it has not been done. Take my word for it, that is English to the core.

At last Messrs. Taylor, Taylor & Hobson have consented The "Cooke" is now being sold as an anastigmat projection lens, and an excellent and moderate priced instrument it is. I have tested out a dozen or more of them, so can speak with authority. In the ordinary way the market was going to have reached in sober earnest this year. Give the makers the inside of a year or more—what is one among so many?—and the "Cooke" will be well inside our picture theaters. Incidentally there is a new Cooke lens just perfected, either for taking or projection purposes. It has a working aperture of F2. No other anastigmat in the world is anything near as speedy as this in photography, nor as economical of light in optical projection.

In the above the endeavor has been to give just a matter-of-fact review of what steps we are taking over here towards introducing projection lenses. If any trouble is found at first in the use of lenses such as those described it will certainly be in connection with the condenser system employed. Obviously a superior objective will be proportionately more searching as regards showing up condenser faults and slovenly centering. This will be so in increased degree as the focus of the projection lens is short and the mechanical diameter of the glass (I am not now speaking of relative aperture) is small. Generally speaking, with lenses of shorter focus than three inches triple condensers should be used, while with foci from three to seven inches Herschel (double convex and meniscus) condensers are best in motion picture work. For finding the distance of the condenser behind the gate a simple method is to run two thin telescopic steel rules from top and bottom edge of condenser respectively so that they touch top and bottom edge of gate mask and just meet (or very nearly so) on the face of the back glass of the focused objective. With the lamp house position so set as to allow of this, the greatest possible part of the light that gets through the condenser is assured of a clear path to the objective, through gate aperture and film. All that now remains is to shift the arc in the lamp house so as to get the light spot of the proper size. That way the new lens will be given a fair chance.

Mr. Bennett's article speaks for itself, and ought to have the very serious consideration of every theater manager and operator in the country. Just before I received Mr. Bennett's article I was given a commission by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, New York City, to perfect the results on the screen of their projection room at headquarters. It seems they had had several "experts" there, though without much result. It required but a glance to see that there were at least more than half a dozen reasons why the projection was poor. First: daylight was shining on half the screen; second: rays from incandescent lamps were reaching the screen; third: the screen itself was not flat; fourth: rays of light from the operating room were reaching its surface; fifth: the condensers were of the wrong focal length, and the lamphouse condenser not set the correct distance from the aperture; sixth: one of the machines had an antiquated out of date lamphouse and lamp, which made it very difficult for the operator to properly handle his light; seventh: they were not using sufficient current, which compelled the carrying of a very small spot. After these items had been straightened out results were very much improved, but by no means what they should be. I tried to get the Gundlach-Manhattan people to make a special lens, but they took no action except to advise me that their stock lenses gave perfect results. The Bausch & Lomb Optical Company's New York office informed me it would be very difficult to get an order for special lenses through, by reason of the fact that the factory was very, very busy. Just at that time I discovered that the Kleine Optical Company, Chicago, was carrying in stock high class objectives, and I promptly requested them to send me one for trial. I took the lens up to the Universal and put it on the machine and was astonished at the result. The field was not entirely flat, but the improvement in detail and definition was very great. Moreover the illumination of the picture (this sounds ridiculous, but it seems to me it is the fact) was 50 per cent. brighter, although the aperture of the cheap and high grade lens was about the same. The lens is listed at $37.50. It gave too large a picture for the screen, and I was immediately instructed by the Universal people to order two of them, of focal length, used for projection to just fill the screen, and to get them as quickly as possible.

What I saw at the Universal clinched the matter in my mind, but there yet remains a question. It will be noted that Friend Bennett says that a true anastigmat lens ought to give a perfectly flat field. It will also be well to note his remarks concerning the French lens. Now I don't know just where I am going to get hold of an anastigmat, nor how I am going to know it is an anastigmat when I get it, but if such an article can be had I am going to have it. What I have myself observed backs up Mr. Benentt's contention, and I am thoroughly convinced that the objectives we are using are absolutely unsuited to the purpose for which they are used, and I may say that Mr. Skerrett, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, thoroughly coincides with my views. In discussing this matter with the editor, Mr. Skerrett made substantially the following remarks: "Why, Richardson, it is all nonsense. Where is the sense in using a high grade lens to take a picture and a low grade lens to project it. The projection is simply a reversal of the process of taking, and the worst part of it is our machines, in many instances get the blame for a fault which lies in the low grade lenses now being universally used for projection."

You will observe that Brother Skerrett puts the matter bluntly and emphatically. I am thoroughly convinced, however, that he is exactly right, but I will qualify his statement by saying that the projection lenses being supplied by our United States manufacturers are really a wonderful value for the money. That is to say, it is a wonder how they can put out any kind of a lens for the price charged. But allowing all this, still I hold with Mr. Bennett and Mr. Skerrett that the cheap objective lens is a very, very dear lens in the end, because it operates to very largely depreciate the possible result on the screen, and moreover, requires much more current to get an equal result in illumination.

Bennet says it ought to be possible to supply true anastigmat lenses, giving a perfectly flat field, at $25 delivered to the theater manager here in the United States, that being, of course, an imported lens, but even allowing that the lens giving perfect results costs fifty or seventy-five dollars, still I am firmly convinced it is more than worth the money, and as Mr. Bennett says, the illumination obtained is so much greater than the lens will pay for itself in a short time.

I do not wish to go into this matter further just now, but you have not heard the last of it by any manner of means, I assure you. Meanwhile I think it may be said that the Kleine Optical Company has the honor of being the pioneer in the introduction of high class objective lenses in the United States.

The Best Way.

Ray Titzer, Evansville, Indiana, orders the question booklets, and asks:

> Is patching non-inflammable film without scraping it the best way?

It is not.

Thanks Mr. Collins.

William H. Pemberton, Eldorado, Illinois, says:

> As an operator I take great pleasure in reading the department. In last week's issue I take note of what Mr. Vernon Collins has to say about conditions in Southern California, and wish to remark that the interest he has shown in the man who twists the crank is appreciated, not only in Southern California, but also in the state of Illinois. I have had considerable experience as operator, and what Friend Collins says regarding the working ability of a man is quite true. When the operator is expected to be a man-of-all-work during the day, he has not the energy he should have when he goes to his little 2 x 4 next the ceiling in the evening. The main trouble with managers of today seems to be that they want and expect a man to be bill poster, janitor, and several other things, at a salary which would only be adequate, or perhaps even less than adequate for the operating alone. I, for one, wish to thank Mr. Collins for the interest he has shown in the operator.

I believe this requires no comment, except to say that operators, as a rule, certainly appreciate the interest shown by picture fans in their work.

Eye Strain.

Recently the New York Sun published an editorial entitled, "The Effect of Moving Pictures on the Eyes," in which considerable stress was laid on the matter of possible eye strain to moving picture patrons. The closing paragraph of this article reads:

> The remedies suggested in this valuable symposium are chiefly to the producers of the picture shows. They should be directed by the sanitary authorities to build only well ventilated structures, to light the auditorium from the rear of the seats, to avoid dense darkness, to refuse pictures that flicker, and most important of all to improve the projecting machines by closer attention to scientific optic principles, for which Dr. J. N. Risley of Philadelphia offers a simple plan.
> Until these conditions are fulfilled the spectator may neutralize partially some of the deleterious effects by avoiding front and side seats and not exposing their eyes longer than an hour and a half. All but the latter precaution are easily adopted.

The admonition to refuse pictures that flicker, light the auditorium from the rear, and to avoid darkness is a rather mixed mess of advice, but the reference to the improvement in projection machinery is hitting pretty close to the truth. The projection machine itself does not need much improving in this respect because it has already probably reached the limit in that direction, but the operator himself can, as this department has time and again pointed out, often very largely reduce or eliminate flicker by fitting the revolving shutter of his mechanism to the local conditions under which it is working. As to darkness in the auditorium, why, I very much doubt if that has any practical effect in the matter of eye strain at all. So far as flicker be concerned, why, that is, of course, just plain common sense. The advice to avoid front and side seats is good, that is, provided it be not carried to extremes. The ordinary angle of side view has no effect on eye strain, but when the angle is such that the definition of the picture is in any degree injured, then eye strain is promoted.

As a matter of fact, occupying a seat near the screen does cause eye strain. The eye unconsciously focuses upon whatever object or portion of an object one is at the instant examining, or "looking at." You, of course, see the whole picture after a fashion, but I believe you are only actually focusing your attention at any one time on one portion of it. Now, particularly if the picture be a large one and you sit close to the screen, the gymnastics the human eye will perform in traveling around over the screen are something appalling, and added to this you will always find the definition or focus of the picture to be comparatively poor when viewed at close range, thus augmenting the strain. This department not long ago stated that the front row of seats ought never to be nearer than 20 feet to the screen and we will now add to that by saying that if the picture be a large one this minimum distance ought to be increased proportionately. Eye strain is an involved proposition. It begins with the revolving shutter of the machine, passes on to the size and character of the screen, and the nearness of the person to it, and ends in the shape of the auditorium, all of which factors must be considered when we take up the matter of eye strain. Up to date so far as I know, our law makers have given this matter little or no attention, and what attention it has received from other sources has been to a large extent fragmentary, more or less unintelligent, and in many cases foolish.

Under present conditions it is quite possible to, to all intents and purposes, eliminate eye strain in moving pictures, but in order to do this, careful attention must be given to the kind and character of the screen and to other points mentioned.

Reads It Thoroughly.

L. J. Pratt, Geneseo, Illinois, sends in a nice little assortment of patches and says:

> How is this for a bunch of patches extracted from two reels of "Chaplin"—"The Tramp." There are twenty-one of them in all, and that is saying nothing of the fourteen out of frame and mis-matched splices that had to be righted before it was possible to run the reels. The entire job required more than two hours of hard work. I read every issue of the department thoroughly, and believe it is doing wonders toward the betterment of projection. Have been an operator for several years, and expect to stay at it for several more. High class projection is a thing I glory in, though I am somewhat handicapped here with a "Royal" in the Wigwam, and a 1909 Motiograph in the Airdome, both motor driven. At the Airdome we have 74 foot 6 inch throw, projecting a 15-foot picture, with the machine set approximately 11 feet to the left of the center of the screen, and I am expected to put on a perfect picture. When you get through with the patches you can send them to the General Film Company, 17 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill., with my compliments. I have a set of the Hawkins Electrical Guide, and will send to you for a Handbook next week.

No, you won't brother, because the Handbooks are all gone. Nothing doing in the Handbook line for at least five months. Just what Friend Pratt means by having a "Royal" I don't know. Seems to me there was a machine of that kind some years ago, but it is only a hazy memory to me now. The patches are indisputable evidence of lack of inspection, but the brother has not complied with instructions, else I would be able to get action. I shall, however, send them to the president of the General Film Company, New York City, together with the suggestion that the exchange manager who is supplying Geneseo, Ill., is committing nothing less than an outrage on the operator and the business as a whole in allowing reels to leave his exchange in this condition. It is unusual, I know, because the General film is very particular about the condition of their reels. As to your getting perfect results with the machine set 11 feet off center with a 74 foot throw, why it cannot be done. You might get fairly good results, but by no means perfect. There will be distortion of the picture in spite of everything you can do. Later: have reply from General Film saying the matter will be properly dealt with.

He Likes It.

Vancouver, British Columbia, writes:

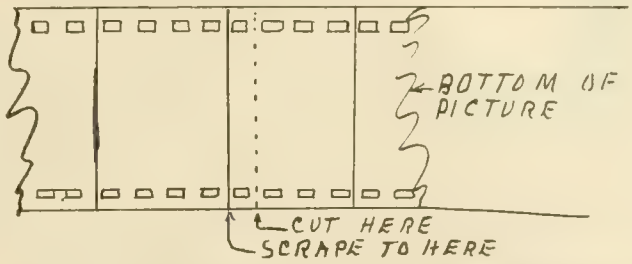
> Enclosed find 25 cents for second list of questions. These questions are the finest thing yet. Keep them up. Could you recommend a good book on Kinemacolor, theory and operation? Would it be impractical when installing a new intermittent sprocket and the pin holes in the sprocket do not match with those in the sprocket shaft to drill and tap two of the holes for small set screws instead of drilling the spindle?

Set screws would not do. There is too much strain. Stick to the pins. As to Kinemacolor, I don't know of any book dealing with that particular subject, though possibly there is. The "Handbook of Kinematography," published by the Kinematograph Weekly, London, has a chapter on kinematography in colors, but it is not very complete.

Well I Don't Know.

G. W. Mitchell, Wonderland Theatre, Kansas City, Missouri, says:

> I herewith enclose some splices which are an abomination and a source of considerable worry to the "first run" operator. The fault with these patches is, they are "made backward," and the chief trouble is they will only run about one time, and then the devil is to pay. They will almost always part on the second run through the machine, and generally open above the gate just at the top of the aperture plate, and that goes for any make of machine, as I have had the same trouble with the Edison, Simplex, Motiograph and Power's of various models, including the improved Six A. This "scratched on the head" patch just simply won't do. It's a mighty poor boob who will scrape the top of the picture. My method of splicing is, I believe, the only right way. First: cut the film in the space between holes below the line at bottom of picture. Second: scrape the stub end of the dividing line to the next picture and the back of the other end, then apply your cement and plenty of pressure.



Well, Brother Mitchell, I don't know about this. Always provided a splice be well made I really don't see why it makes any particular difference which way it is made. Now, mind you, I don't say it makes no difference, but as a practical operator I am unable to understand just why it ought to. I know we used to, when I was operating, hold learned discussions as to the right and wrong way to make a patch, but, after all, provided the patch be properly scraped and cemented together tightly, what difference does it make? Now, don't just say it does make a difference. Tell me why. Give your reasons. The patches you submit seem to me to have been made with a very poor cement, and also with insufficient pressure. One or two of them I would pronounce very good. For instance: the one in the "Romance of Elaine" title is perfectly solid and tight all over, and when I attempted to pull it apart the film itself pulled in two instead—what more would you want? I am glad to have your views in this matter, and would invite operators to set forth their ideas as to whether you are right or whether you are wrong.

Three-Phase Motor Preferable.

J. Schach, Jr., Whiting, Indiana, says:

> Referring to Brother J. C. Searey's, Canal Zone, question regarding single-phase versus three-phase motors, will say that in my estimation the three-phase motor is preferable, where three-phase service can be obtained, on account of decreased initial cost of motor and absence of any wearing parts other than bearings, whereas single-phase motors usually have commutators, clutches, etc. The best projection we have here is through the use of current through a 7½ K. W. Martin rotary converter, with a 60-cycle, 220-volt, three-phase motor driving one end, supplying the arcs and driving two Simplex projectors.

With regard to the three-phase motor, I agree with Brother Schach. As to the Martin rotary converter, why we have invited them to do what all the other manufacturers whose products have the indorsement of this department have done, viz.: submit positive proof of the excellence of their device. This they have, up to date, failed to do.

Trouble in New Kensington.

We are informed that the New Kensington, Pa., operators were compelled to strike in order to enforce certain requests made on managers for better salaries and better working conditions. The management of the Columbia theater, it seems, signed up with the union, but the four other theaters put up a fight, the result of which we have not yet learned.

CORRECTION NOTE: Owing to the cut illustrating various types of lenses being inadvertently turned upside down in the issue of August 21, the apparent order of the different kinds in reversed.

1st. Principal axis of a lens is a line passing through the thickest part of positive lenses and thinnest part of negative lenses, perpendicular to the surfaces of the lens, as in diagrams No. 30 and 31.

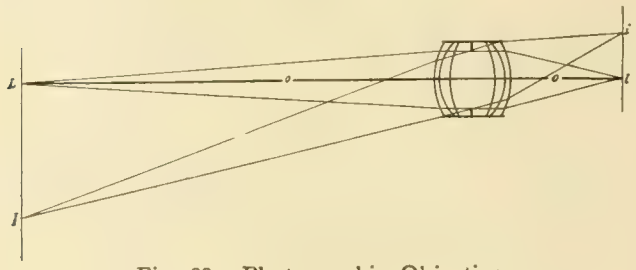

Fig. 30. Photographic Objective.
C, O, Axis of Lens. L, I, Axial Rays. I, Oblique Rays.

2d. The optical center of a lens is the point from which focal measurements are made. This does not refer to a photographic objective which (in other than single view lenses) is a combination of lenses and quite another matter for the reason that a combination may have its optical center at a number of places according to the circumstances under which it is employed. The positive optical center of a lens is determined by its form and is found as follows and shown in diagram No. 32:

Fig. 31. Types of Lenses.

Draw two parallel radi AB and ab one from each center of curvature, and both inclined to principal axis; then connect the two points B and b at which they touch the curved surfaces of lens. The point O at which the line connecting B and b cuts the principal axis is the optical center.

3d. Conjugate Foci. If a lens which has been carefully focused upon a distant object be then directed toward one comparatively near at hand, the nearer object will be found to be out of focus, necessitating the withdrawal of the ground glass from the lens before the image will assume its maximum sharpness. This establishes the fact that there exists a relation between the object that is focused, as regards its distance from the camera, and the focus of the lens. This relation is termed "conjugate foci." Foci is the plural of focus; conjugate means combined in pairs; kindred in meaning and origin. Conjugate foci are then the distances from the lens to the image and from the lens to the object. In what we have now to say we will speak of the distance between the lens and the object as the anterior or major conjugate, and that existing between the lens and the ground glass of the camera as the posterior or minor conjugate focus. Parallel rays a a—that is, rays from a great distance—falling upon a lens come to a focus at f; but those from b, which may serve to represent any object ten or twenty yards distant, have their focus at c (Fig. 33). Then f is the solar focus, b and c being the conjugate foci. The former of these is the anterior, and the latter the posterior conjugate. To facilitate reference, the lines indicating the conjugate foci are solid, while those relating to the solar focus are dotted. The points b and c are interchangeable; an object placed at either is sharp at the other.

Rule for Conjugate Foci. Now for every position of the object there is a certain position of the camera, and these two distances, the distance of the object from the lens and of the lens from the plate, are called conjugate foci.

A very simple mathematical rule connects the distance from lens to object (D) the distance from lens to plate (d) and the enlargement or reduction of the object (i. e., the number of times a given line in the object is larger or smaller in the image). Note the word line, because some prefer to calculate reduction and enlargement on the basis of area, which introduces different conditions.

Let F be the focal length of the lens and r the ratios of enlargement or reduction.

Then the distance d is equal to F plus F divided by r. Expressed more shortly:

$$d = F \text{ plus } \frac{F}{r}.$$

On the other hand, D equals F plus F multiplied by r, or

$$D = F \text{ plus } F \times r.$$

An example will show how simple this rule is. Suppose one wants to reduce a picture so that a twelve-inch line becomes three inches—i. e., r = 4.

If a six-inch lens is being used, d (camera extension) = 6 plus $\frac{6}{4}$ = 6 plus $1\frac{1}{2}$ = $7\frac{1}{2}$ inches, and D = 6 plus 6×4 = 6 plus 24 = 30 inches.

Bear two other things in mind which will help to use this formula: (1) Positions of image and object are reversible. If we were enlarging 3 inches to 12 with a 6-inch lens we should place the lens and negative $7\frac{1}{2}$ inches apart and the paper 30 inches apart. (2) The smaller conjugate is just r times the larger, e. g., $7\frac{1}{2} \times 4 = 30$. This is always the case, and is useful as a check on calculation.

MR. JARR AND CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE (No. 15 of "The Jarr Family Series) (Vitagraph), Aug. 16.—An industrious camera fiend is the cause of the trouble in this number of the Jarr reels. As several of Jarr's best friends are forced to share his mishaps, and two families are nearly rent asunder, there is no lack of comic misery in the picture. Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley are supported chiefly by Charles Eldridge.

THE MARKET PRICE OF LOVE (Essanay), Aug. 16.—Ann Kirk, Frank Dayton and Arthur Clippenger are featured in this one-reel drama, which presents a truthful picture of the price a woman pays who marries solely for position. The story is ably constructed and equally well acted.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 65 (Selig), Aug. 16.—Burial of sailors at Charleston, Mass., killed at Port-au-Prince; sick children on floating hospital, New York; German-American parade, Panama-Pacific Fair; firing mine in Boston harbor; tennis match at Lake Forrest, Ill.; Scotch games, Roxbury, Mass.; San Marino sending her 48 soldiers to war; 50,000 women march in London; envoys of seven nations, Washington; near view of Gen. Hugh. L. Scott, also of Gen. Frederick Funston and Carranza, make up this number.

POLLY OF THE POTS AND PANS (Lubin), Aug. 16.—The story of Cinderella, without the happy ending, is found in this one-reel comedy by Shannon Fife. The reel is entertaining, although some of the business belongs to slapstick farce. Mary Charleson is bright and animated in the name part.

HAM AT THE BEACH (Kalem), Aug. 17.—Yes, Ham and Bud go into the water—but very reluctantly, and escape a large mob of pursuers, just at the finish. There is plenty of fun previous to this, however, and Ham appears before the mob as "M'lle Fifi," a celebrated dancer, so it is no wonder that he is chased off the end of the dock.

THE PRIMA DONNA'S MOTHER (Selig), Aug. 17.—The story of this one-reel drama is theatrically effective from start to finish, and will appeal strongly to those who do not look beneath the surface of things. It has been skillfully handled by the producer and the cameraman, also by the members of the cast.

CARTOONS ON TOUR (Edison), Aug. 18.—Four cartoons are shown in this one-reel comedy: "Tales of Silas Bunkum," "The Kelly Kids' Kite," "Mr. Hicks in Nightmareland" and "The Joy of Being a Grandpa." Raoul Barre's drawing is as skilful and as amusing as ever.

DREAMY DUD SEES CHARLIE CHAPLIN (Essanay), Aug. 18.—Wallace A. Carlson has reproduced the moving picture comedian in a very lifelike manner, although some of the feats that Charlie performs in this half-reel cartoon would prove rather difficult for the actor himself. Views in the West are on the same reel.

SHE TOOK A CHANCE (Vitagraph), Aug. 18.—To judge from this one-reel comedy, the Vitagraph Company are about to establish a Zoo of its own. At any rate, one of the biggest laugh-getters in the play is a talented young porker. The reel is capital fooling, and is acted in the true comic spirit by Kate Price, William Shea and Johnny Cahill. As for the porker, his histrionic efforts may be described as exhibiting an inherent naturalness that transcends all art—notably, during his encounter with a full-grown blackberry pie.

HIS LAST WISH (Biograph), Aug. 19.—Gus Pixley, Jack Mulhall and Irma Dawkins succeed in extracting considerable amusement from this one-reel comedy. The characters are of the small town variety, and the father of the heroine finds an efficacious method of patching up a lover's quarrel.

THE QUEST OF THE WIDOW (Vitagraph), Aug. 19.—George Stanley, Gretchen Lederer, Alfred Vosburgh and Annie Schaefer give a good account of themselves in the leading roles of this one-reel comedy, written by Frances M. Wright and produced by Ulysses Davis. Its amusing qualities are quite generous, the characters being made up of rural types.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 66 (Selig), Aug. 19.—Scenes at the War School at Plattsburg, N. Y., comes first in the list. Other items are: $52,000,000 in gold arriving in New York; Aviator Niles falls in San Francisco Bay; child farmers of Brooklyn, N. Y., gathering crops; U. S. Marines start for Haiti on Cruiser Tennessee; Naval Officer Teaching New York policemen to wig wag; working model of Panama Canal, at San Francisco Fair; selling lottery tickets in Rome to aid the war; raising the Eastland, Chicago.

DEATH'S MARATHON (Biograph), Aug. 20.—A re-issue of a D. W. Griffith, this one-reel drama again emphasizes the skill this celebrated director showed when moving picture making was in its infancy. The reel is drama in the truest sense of the word. Blanche Sweet and Henry B. Walthall are the principal actors.

WHEN SOULS ARE TRIED (Lubin), Aug. 20.—A well written domestic drama with a strong climax, the acting of Romaine Fielding, Jack Lawton and Vinnie Burns brings out the salient points of this one-reel photoplay to the best advantage.

BRONCHO BILLY'S MARRIAGE (Essanay), Aug. 20.—In this one-reel drama Broncho Billy illustrates how a stout heart wins a fair lady. The reel has action and is pervaded with the spirit of western romance. G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton head the excellent cast.

CUTEY'S AWAKENING (Vitagraph), Aug. 20.—Once again has William Addison Lathrop taken Wally Van's order for a new "Cutey" outfit and furnished him with a neat and becoming short-reel article. Seen first as a gilded youth, he becomes a dusty miller and toils merrily for his daily bread. Nitra Frazer, Albert Roccardi and Templer Saxe are in the cast. Swedish Army scenes are on the same reel.

THE ACE OF DIAMONDS (Biograph), Aug. 21.—The leading lady in this one-reel drama is Zoe Beck, a mature actress of about five years of age. Little Miss Beck plays with the ease and authority of a veteran, and holds her own in a cast headed by Charles Perley. The child interest of the story is cleverly developed, and the entire reel has merit.

ON THE WRONG TRACK (Edison), Aug. 21.—A "Safety First" film, this one-reel drama, which was produced in co-operation with the Public Service Railway Company of New Jersey, is interesting as a photoplay. It has all the elements of good drama, aside from its special motive, and is well acted by Johnnie Walker, William West, Doris Hill and the other members of the cast. Harry Beaumont was the director.

A PERILOUS CHANCE (Episode No. 41 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Aug. 21.—Nothing of a more spectacular nature than the "hazard" of this one-reel drama, has been shown in the Helen series. Miss Holmes seizes the end of a lift bridge and sails upward, to the confusion of a trio of rogues. The drama is alive with action, and all the members of the cast cheerfully risk their lives, leaping or falling from speeding railroad trains.

A LUCKY DEAL (Selig), Aug. 21.—Tom Mix wrote and produced this one-reel drama. The plot is not very strong, but Mr. Mix has filled it with live episodes, picturesque locations, and given it the benefit of a good cast, which includes Leo Maloney, Sid Jordan, Pat Chrisman and Bettie O'Neil.

THE LIFE GUARD (Lubin), Aug. 21.—In this one-reel farce, Billie Reeves adds a clay pipe and a hod to his make-up, but retains his celebrated shoes and trowsers. As a life guard, he still sticks to the last mentionel articles. There is plenty of excuse for laughter all through the film, which was clicked off on the versatile typewriter belonging to Epes W. Sargent. The scenes are set on the sands at Atlantic City, with the breakers rolling in from the ocean.

THE WANDERER (Biograph), Sept. 3. Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1175 issue of August 14.

THE BANK (Essanay), Aug. 16.—The latest two-reel Chaplin, which was a week late in arriving, is worth waiting for. It is a distinct advance in the grade of its fun, the comedian's methods being as deft as ever, but many of the familiar tricks have been dispensed with. The plot is a real one, numerous bits of new business and a neatly turned surprise finish counting largely for the picture's success.

IN THE KING'S SERVICE (Selig), Aug. 16.—This two-reel drama has a member of the Canadian Mounted Police for its hero. Thomas Santschi looks and acts the part convincingly. The story is dramatic and smacks of the soil. The producing does the subject justice.

LEGRAND'S REVENGE (Essanay), Aug. 17.—This two-reel drama is next to the final instalment of the series of crook plays, with scenes laid in Paris, which have been featuring Sheldon Lewis and Nell Craig. Mr. Lewis' return is promised in the last number. The present picture shows care in producing, holds the interest, and has the benefit of a thoroughly good cast, led by Ernest Maupain and Miss Craig.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT (Knickerbocker Star Features), Aug. 18.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1490 issue of August 28.

THE SECOND SHOT (Lubin), Aug. 18.—A two-reel drama, written and produced by George W. Terwilliger, this offering is an excellent example of photoplay making. It has an engrossing story, holds interest to the end, and offers strong roles for the cast. The part played by Ormi Hawley is the most important. Miss Hawley's work justifies her choice. This is also true of Kempton Greene, Earl Metcalfe, Herbert Fortier and Arthur Matthews.

IT WAS TO BE (Lubin), Aug. 19.—This three-reel drama, written by Shannon Fife and produced by Joseph Kaufman, with Jack Standing, Walter Hitchcock and Ethel Clayton in the leading roles, has a mysterious crime as a motif. The play is cleverly calculated to keep a firm grip on an audience, and the work of everyone concerned in its making helps to insure this result.

THE CLAUSE IN THE CONSTITUTION (Selig), Aug. 19.—This three-reel drama, written by Campbell MacCullough, has a big theme dealing with present day political conditions. The author and Edward J. Le Saint, the director, have built an excellent photoplay between them. The scenes of official life are impressive, and an interesting love story has also been provided. The thoroughly satisfactory cast includes Earle Foxe, George Hernandez, Will E. Sheerer, Joe King and Stella Razeto.

THE TIGRESS (Vitagraph) (Broadway Star Feature), Aug. 28.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1492 issue of August 28.

THE MYSTERY OF HENRI VILLARD (Biograph), Aug. 31.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1324 issue of August 21.

DORA (Biograph), Sept. 1.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1492 issue of August 28.

THE WOMAN HATER (Essanay), Aug. 21.—Viewed solely as a series of comic situations that are but little concerned with the facts of life, this three-reel photoplay by Hobart Chatfield-Chatfield Taylor is good entertainment. The characters are all well-bred persons and have been placed in appropriate surroundings. The episode of the hunt, and the scenes on the yacht, are realistic—except the interior of the boat's cabin. Henry Walthall, Bryant Washburn and Edna Mayo carry the burden of the acting with fine effect.

THE DAWN OF UNDERSTANDING (Vitagraph), Aug. 21.—Maude Moore-Clement, the author of this two-reel drama, has not strayed from the beaten path in her search for material. However, she has shown good judgment in selecting and assembling the incidents of her story, which has been sympathetically produced by Van Dyke Brooke. Maurice Costello, Leah Baird and Howard Hall are the leading members of an excellent cast.

Mutual Film Corporation.

LOVE AND LABOR (Beauty), Aug. 14.—A comedy number of fair strength, in which the girl sets her various beaus to work, as her father wants her to marry a man fond of labor. The city chap pretends to be buried alive and scares the father so he consents to his marriage with the girl. The plot is very slight.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 33 (Aug. 19). In this issue we are presented to the Suffrage Torch. Also there is to be seen Gen. Scott leaving Washington for the Mexican border, the landing of an enormous whale, Middies training on the battleship Missouri, and the testing of the stability of the steamer "Christopher Columbus" by weighting it with thousands of bags of sand.

FAITHFUL TO THE FINISH (Komic), Aug. 22.—An office story of a burlesque type, featuring Fay Tincher, Ed Dillon, Bobby Feuhrer and others. A man masquerades in woman's costume to steal some military plans and at the same time succeeds in disrupting a love affair. The plot is pleasing and the number quite successful.

FAREWELL TO THEE (Reliance), Aug. 23.—The redeeming feature of this picture lies in the excellence of some of its types. There is nothing of especial interest about the story, and the old witch is too stagily dressed to be convincing. The main thread of the story treats of how an adventuress tried to get the husband of another woman in her power for monetary purposes, using an old witch as a go-between, who tells the wife that her husband is under a spell from which he will die if not sent away. The witch, underpaid, divulges the secret in revenge.

HIS MYSTERIOUS PROFESSION (Beauty), Aug. 24.—Webster Campbell and Neva Gerber are featured in this. The young professional ball player boards with the girl's aunts, who are averse to any kind of sport. The manner in which he wins the girl makes good comedy. The number is a little stronger than the average light offering.

THE LITTLE CUPIDS (Majestic), Aug. 24.—Billy West and Joseph Henabery are featured as quarreling lovers. They board the same boat, each taking some children for an outing. The children bring them together again and the reel closes with a marriage. The story is nicely put on and of about average strength.

EDITIONS DE LUXE (Reliance), Aug. 25.—A crook story, with A. D. Sears, Billy West and G. M. Blue in the cast. The girl waitress meets up with an old pal and assists him in selling fine books as a swindling proposition. Her former lover is a detective and there is quite a dramatic scene when he arrests the girl. This is a little different from the average crook story and holds the attention.

MIXED WIRES (American), Aug. 25.—Here is a very acceptable comedy with Winnifred Greenwood and George Field, John Steppling and others making good. A couple of telegrams delivered to the wrong parties make a lot of trouble.

THAT POOR DAMP COW (Falstaff), Aug. 27.—Riley Chamberlin, whose quiet, effective comedy work is followed by many admirers, is assisted in this number by a handsome cow. So valuable is the beast that he keeps it in the house and the cow gratefully aids him in capturing two thieves. A pleasing number.

THE VAGABONDS (Thanhouser), Aug. 29.—A screen adaptation of J. T. Trowbridge's famous poem, "Roger and I." Morris Foster does some effective character work in the part of the tramp, whose sole friend is his faithful canine. He tells the story of his downfall from drink. The number is one of considerable appeal.

A MASSIVE MOVIE MERMAID (Falstaff), Aug. 30.—A beach comedy, showing some moving picture actors in the throes of producing a drama. The leading lady—a fat man in disguise—crabs the performance and then the director falls overboard, turning the intended tragedy into a farce. There are some laughable situations in this.

MAKING MATTERS WORSE (Cub), Sept. 2.—This features George Hovey as Jerry again. He resorts to disguises to evade the police. Some of the situations are quite amusing and the photography is clear.

Mutual Film Corporation, Specials.

THE BATTLE OF AMBROSE AND WALRUS (Keystone), Aug. 16.—A two-reel subject, featuring Ambrose and Chester as military leaders in Mexico. The action is entirely of a burlesque sort and the chief amusement comes from the small business, which is acceptable throughout. The plot itself is practically nil, but a good many laughable incidents occur just the same. Toward the close the girl is tied to a target and bombs are fired at her.

THE LITTLE LUMBER JACK (Reliance), Aug. 21.—A prettily set picture. The majority of the scenes of the production, which is in two reels, are set among the mountains and lumber camps of the west. The story is of how a little lumber jack was the means of the rescue of a young girl of whom he was fond. The child was kidnapped by a couple of greasers after having blown up the cabin of the lumbermen, and the canoes racing along the winding river in pursuit present a pretty picture.

THE FATAL HOUR (Majestic), Aug. 22.—This two-reel production contains a fair amount of interest, but is slightly forced in some of its situations. The story treats of how a young man was saved from being tried for murder by the discovery that a cartridge lying on the table beside the dead man had been exploded through the focusing of the sun's rays upon it, causing the death of the man. Here also there is a lack of moral backing, for it is not made clear that the thief of the jewels previous to the old man's death has been punished.

DRAWING THE LINE (American), Aug. 23.—The intention of this two-reel production is good, but the idea has been clumsily handled, with the result that justification of some questionable actions, such as the stealing of the money with which to go away and start life anew, is absent. A good production might have been made out of the story had the main idea been developed with more care.

THE LIVING WAGE (Dominio), Aug. 26.—A two-reel number, by Ince and Hawks, with Richard Stanton and Enid Markey in the leads. The story is that of a young millionaire who tries to live in his own tenement at six dollars a week. As a joke he plans to rob his own apartments with the brother of the girl he loves. The weakness of the plot is that the brother agreed to this and helped in what he thought was a real crime. The story is well presented and contains much of interest in spite of its mixed motive.

MONSIEUR LECOQ (Mutual Masterpicture—Thanhouser), Aug. 20.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1491 issue of August 28.

KENO BATES, LIAR (Kaybee), Aug. 27.—A two-reel number, featuring Wm. S. Hart, Margaret Thompson, Herschel Meyell and Louise Glaum. The plot is a strong western one and presented in an appealing manner. Mr. Hart is seen at his best in this part of the gambler who lies to the girl about the cause of her brother's death. When the adventuress in a fit of jealous rage tells her the truth, the girl shoots the gambler, but he later recovers and all ends well. The settings are fine and the story has splendid dramatic interest.

A DIVINE DECREE (American), Aug. 30.—This is a two-reel production of moderate interest. The story treats of how the child of a criminal grows to young womanhood believing that her father is at work in Alaska. The illusion, we are led to believe, is never destroyed, even after the father comes home and takes up life anew.

MAN AND THE LAW (Gaumont), Sept. 2.—A two-reel story, with Norbert A. Myles, Edna Payne and others in the cast. The chief setting is the familiar jury room, where the jury fails to agree on the guilt or innocence of the man on trial for murder. The hero tells a story in which he was a near-victim to circumstantial evidence, thus converting the jury and clearing the man on trial. This is old subject matter, but is handled effectively and makes quite an entertaining offering.

INFATUATION (Mutual Masterpicture—American), Sept. 2.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1014 issue of August 7.

North American Film Corporation.

KING OF DIAMONDS AND QUEEN OF HEARTS (American), Aug. 23.—Chapter XVII of "The Diamond from the Sky." The sharp, clear photography and excellent regard for scenic effects characterizing this series is particularly noticeable in this number. The plot jumps forward considerably, Esther obtaining both the diamond and the Stanley documents. Powell and Blair are lured into each other's company by Vivian. Later they arrange for a yachting party and Esther boards the vessel. She meets Blair, who makes an attack upon her. In the closing scene Esther has jumped into the water.

PATHE NEWS NO. 65 (Aug. 14).—Some of the interesting items of this issue are the transferring of a huge shipment of gold to the J. P. Morgan Bank, the removal of a burning oil car from the railway track, English women at work in the munition factories, and the celebration of the anniversary of Britain's entry into the war.

WONDERS OF BIRD LIFE (Part 2), Aug. 30.—This instalment of "The Wonders of Bird Life" treats of the carrier pigeon, and is an intensely interesting study. It is on the same reel with "Colonel Heeza Liar at the Bat."

COLONEL HEEZA LIAR AT THE BAT.—On the same reel with the above, this is one of the most amusing of the Bray animated cartoons. What the Colonel does to the game of baseball is worth while seeing.

THE MARCENAY FISH PONDS (Aug. 30).—An exceptionally interesting series of views of these fish ponds in France. This subject is on the same reel with "Falls of French Guinea."

FRENCH GUINEA (West Africa).—This constitutes a beautiful series of scenes in this portion of west Africa encompassing some of its most picturesque waterfalls, and is on the same reel with the above.

A MERRY CHASE (Starlight), Sept. 4.—Aubrey and Kendig in their resolve to get a living really try to do some work in this film. They do that work so badly, however, that the result is, as the title infers, "A Merry Chase."

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

ROMANCE OF ELAINE (Episode 10), Aug. 16.—"The Flash" gives one more thrilling incident in the romance of pretty Elaine. Prof. Arnold is again on the trail of Del Mar, and for his pains gets a couple of the bullets aimed at him by the foreign agent. The map of the harbors stolen from Del Mar by Prof. Arnold, and secreted in Elaine's pocketbook keeps the ball of suspense rolling, and leaves us wondering what will happen next.

NEAL OF THE NAVY, NO. 1 (Pathe), Aug. 30.—Reviewed by Margaret MacDonald on page 1493 issue of August 28.

PRIMA DONNA (Aug. 30).—In this three-reel production there will be found a great deal that will interest the general audience. The story of the prima donna who, broken in health, sinks for a time into oblivion, but is resurrected from her hospital bed to play her last role in a play written by the man she loves, is touching. While playing the part she drops dead on the stage.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ITCHING FOR REVENGE (L-Ko), Aug. 8.—Bud Ross appears as an eccentric character in love with an eccentric servant girl. For purposes of revenge the girl puts cowitch on the clothing of her mistress's beau. The result contains some quite amusing moments.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 180 (Universal), Aug. 18.—This is a diversified number, picturing the raising of the Eastland, the immense shipment of gold from England and numerous other scenes of interest.

DR. MASON'S TEMPTATION (Laemmle), Aug. 22.—This number features Millard K. Wilson, Olive Fuller Golden and Marc Robbins. The young doctor is tempted to rob a patient in order to send his wife on a visit to her old home, but resists the impulse. Later money arrives and the story ends happily. The story is consistently worked out and quite entertaining.

THE LILT OF LOVE (Laemmle), Aug. 29.—A pretty story, written by L. V. Jefferson, with Marcia Moore, Grace Thompson and Ray Gallagher in the cast. The plot is a variation of the Cinderella theme, showing the way in which a young composer falls in love with a despised stepdaughter. There is a touch of imagination in this pleasing number.

THE EAGLE (Laemmle), Sept. 2.—A crook story, with a touch of the white slave theme worked in. Hobart Henley plays the part of the gangster whose sister from the country falls into the clutches of the other members. He saves the girl after a hand-to-hand struggle. This is admirably constructed for this type of story and the cast is evenly balanced, including Grace Thompson, Harry Mann and Ray Hanford.

GERTIE'S JOY RIDE (L-Ko), Sept. 5.—A very snappy knockabout number, featuring Gertrude Selby, Hank Mann, Reggie Morris and others. The photography is clear and attractive and many laughable stunts are shown, all of acceptable sort. The joy ride at the close is overrunning with action and almost breaks all precedents for this sort of thing.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

CORNERED (Universal Special), Aug. 23.—Episode No. 10 of "The Broken Coin" series. This contains much entertaining action, though of a somewhat disconnected character. The chase of the freight train in the second reel makes the best feature. Not enough effort is made in the costuming or settings to keep up the illusion of a foreign court; the scenes are too distinctly American in many instances. The reel closes with Kitty in possession of both halves of the coin, with Count Frederick threatening her.

THE VALLEY OF REGENERATION (Big "U"), Aug. 29.—Adele Lane is featured in this two-reel production. Others of the cast are Edward Solman, R. L. Braddon, Jack Curtis and Grace Thompson. In spite of the fact that the picture is an especially attractive one, there does not seem to be present the proper moral foundation, which is evidently a fault in the construction of the story. From a technical standpoint the production has been well made, and the dramatic action of the picture is excellent.

JEWEL (Broadway Universal Features), Aug. 30.—Reviewed by George Blaisdell on page 1322 issue of August 21.

FOR PROFESSIONAL REASONS (Victor), Sept. 1.—This two-reel picture has a good plot behind it, but the construction of the story has in a way marred the effect. An audience would, however, scarcely grasp the import of what appears in this instance wrong to the critic. There is much to be commended in the production.

TAM O' SHANTER (Big U), Sept. 2. A three-reel number, featuring Murdock MacQuarrie, Evelyn Thatcher, Marjorie Beardsley and Wm. White. This pictures the scenes described in the famous poem by Robert Burns. Mr. MacQuarrie makes a good character part of Tam, the genial Scotch tippler, who is finally cured of his drunkenness by a meeting with the devil in a country church yard. There is not much dramatic material in this, but there is a good undercurrent of humor throughout. The atmosphere of Scotland is only fairly well suggested. At the close Tam swears off and is happily reunited with his wife and daughter.

LIZZIE AND THE BEAUTY CONTEST (Nestor), Sept. 3.—A two-reel number, by Al E. Christie, featuring Victoria Forde and Eddie Lyons as two rube characters attending the Universal Beauty contest. Views of the real beauties are shown and later the country girl is converted into a prize winner at a beauty shop. Some knockabout scenes are taken on the grounds of the San Diego Exposition. The plot is not strong, but there is considerable novelty and amusement in the offering.

CORAL (Bison), Sept. 4.—A four-reel subject, written by Olga Printzlau Clark, with Marie Walcamp and Wellington Playter in the cast. The artist, while painting at the seashore, meets a young girl who has a talent for sculpturing. He learns that she was cast up by the sea years before and had been raised by an old seaman named Dan. After the latter's death the artist takes the girl to the city. The scene in which the jealous wife charges the girl with theft of a diamond is the strongest feature of the story, though the train wreck later was well shown. The story as a whole is conventional in type, but entertaining and quite well constructed.

THE SHOT (Powers), Sept. 5.—A two-reel production, featuring Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn and Richard Sterling. The older brother is shot in a scuffle by the younger one, on the eve of the former's wedding. The mystery of the quarrel is well preserved, but the younger brother finally says the dead man was afflicted with an incurable disease and he killed him to save the girl. It later develops that the older brother received only a flesh wound from the bullet and really died of heart failure. Not a pleasant type of story, but well constructed and strongly presented.

W. R. Rothacker, president of the Industrial Moving Picture Co., of Chicago, who has been on the Pacific Coast for the past month and a half, has recently returned to his office. While in Los Angeles, Frisco, Seattle, Portland, Spokane, Salt Lake City, Colorado Springs, Denver and the many other cities throughout the West which he visited, Mr. Rothacker appointed camera representatives of the Industrial Moving Picture Company to procure current events for the Tribune Animated Weekly which is being made by his company.

NOW FATHER JACK, IF YOU PLEASE.

Mr. and Mrs. John Wesley Grey announce the birth of a daughter, Marguerite Luez Grey, at New Rochelle, Aug. 9th. Mr. Grey, who answers to "Jack," is a live writer of Vitagraph advertising. He has introduced a novelty in spelling as well as in advertising. To confirm which, please note how he spells his new daughter's middle name. We offer congratulations.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

IT IS hard, at times, to take a photo player. It is hard for the public to take him. It is as hard for him to go upon the screen as it is for him to go upon the stage. Yet, they will say that the line must be drawn. But where is the line to be drawn? Some of the best in the comic and sentimental line were at Brighton Beach a week ago.

They had a good time, too. But Faversham was not there, neither were some of the Barrymores, nor Fanny Ward. All those great people like Vivian Martin, Myrtle Tannehill, Anna Orr, Lenore Ulrich, Florence Rockwell and many others were not there. The poor moving picture makers like Billy Shea, Kate Price, Lillian Walker, Maurice Costello and a few others were on deck. And that was the reason that Vitagraph players won most of the prizes. As one of the players said: "Bring us on the home grounds and we will win."

"And," he continued, "I guess, that is about right. For swimmers the Vitagraph can produce the winners. For riders I think we have the same. For foot work—whether it be one hundred yards or twenty miles—we've got the material. Though they live in the country, Flatbush, they must not be ignored."

"When it came to real merit (on short call) the Flatbush district showed up pretty near to the mark. In swimming we have the best—male or female. In flat running we have the best—any distance, from 100 yards to 20 miles. In walking we have the same. Why dispute titles when we hold them?"

The great trouble with the last exhibition of the New York State Exhibitors' League was that they thought more of the day than they did of the day's doings. They thought, really, nothing of the contests, but of the monetary results. I will bet a silk hat that during the entire day not one of the exhibitors thought of anything more than the receipts for that day. If any exhibitor had that idea he was foolish. Receipts come and go. The net profit goes into the treasury. The aim should have been the general enjoyment of all concerned, for that enjoyment would have meant something for that which is to follow.

On this idea we find the Past, Present and Future of what has been spent in behalf of the cause, say nothing; what is to be spent in the present we expect every live member to uphold; for what is to come for the future we expect all members to use their intelligence. It is a question of the past, present and future.

The present and future present themselves. The past shows that the stalwart exhibitors have had a burden to carry to fight the influences that have not been prompted by serious motives. The present conditions show the producers and the exhibitors confront a condition that is not within reason. Certain elements have filed, and are pressing with remarkable strength measures, that would cut out drinking, smoking, kissing and other scenes from motion pictures. The same scenes may be typified upon the speaking stage yet not allowed upon the screen. Such legislation is a subterfuge backed by and advocated by the regular theatrical people. It is not an argument made in good faith, and at best can only be made as a case to have the distinction drawn by a court of law at the expense of the motion picture people.

Play or script (give the latter the title of scenario), the script will beat the play on a morality standpoint before any impartial tribunal. But one distinction can be drawn. The play has behind it a playwright who has financial backing that will go to the last resource. The scenario writer must pass the producer, the board of censors and the authorities. Is the law equal? What is the difference between the product of a playwright and that of a scenario writer? Police laws control both. Why should there be a law more stringent upon one more than upon the other?

Who love the freedom of this country more than the writers? The writers are the ventilators for expression. The newspapers are read by people who wish to keep in touch with the pulse of their fellow-men; the stage play is patronized by people who can better understand the teachings of the day by portrayals than they can by reading; the motion picture is patronized by the masses because they can so understand, no matter in what language it is portrayed; no matter who the writer may be; no matter from what book it may be taken; it may be Greek or Latin; it may be German or French, the screen presents the lesson.

It doesn't take a hard thinker to conclude that, after all, the moving picture screen, and all the publications with it, are engaged in a good work.

It may not have occurred to many that hours of thought and study on the part of a director, hours of almost painful effort on the part of the actor, or actress, have weaved before the spectator a lesson they never have, or could have learned from reading. You may take a volume and read it, but still there is a fault. Present it to the eye as the motion picture screen does and you dismiss a thinking audience. Some may not grasp the moral, but all compare the story with others they have seen upon the screen. What is the difference between the impression upon the dispersing audience (or congregation) of a church? See if I am right: "Dr. So-and-So seems to be going back. If I am not mistaken, he preached the same sermon on his ordination." "Don't you think they should get a younger soprano?" "Well, if I was a singer and had the same pull she has I would be up in that choir." And yet they hate to see themselves upon the screen.

Wheeler Oakman

NOT only does the Selig Polyscope Company lay claim to the possession of one of the youngest leading ladies in the world, in the person of Miss Grace Darmond, not yet eighteen years old, but the Selig Company comes to bat with the claim that Wheeler Oakman is one of the youngest leading men in point of years in motion pictures.

Oakman spent his boyhood days in Fairfax, Va., and but followed the other members of his family when he decided to go on the stage. In 1908 he began his career in the "legitimate" by playing juvenile leads in the New York productions of "Under Southern Skies," "Strongheart" and "Checkers." Following these engagements, he played in repertoire part of the time, being with his sister's company In the spring of 1912, Mr. Oakman became identified with the Pacific Coast studios of the Selig Company. He has been a valuable and versatile member of the Selig stock company ever since.

Wheeler Oakman.

It has been said that Mr. Oakman did the best work of his entire career as the Broncho Kid in "The Spoilers," but in the Red Seal plays, "The Rosary" and "The Ne'er-Do-Well," we find him rising to the topmost heights of convincing characterization.

While the Selig Company was in Panama filming scenes for the Red Seal play, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," Rex Beach's great story, Mr. Oakman produced a number of short plays, among them being "A Tragedy in Panama," which has proven very popular.

Mr. Oakman is a star of the first magnitude, and his long experience both in the spoken and the silent drama enhances his versatile work. He will be seen in many forthcoming Selig Red Seal plays.

CLYDE FITCH'S "HER GREAT MATCH."

Rene Plaissetty has just completed the direction of this masterpiece in five reels, featuring Gail Kane. It will be released on the Metro Program.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

The Animus Furandi Against Moving Pictures.

AN article in a recent issue of the New Republic betrays an animus against moving pictures, in favor of the spoken drama, that does not appear well based or fair. Indeed, the evident disposition of the writer is such that animus furandi would be a more appropriate term to apply to his treatment of the subject; for he is not only malicious, but he attempts to rob the moving picture of its plain rights, without any show of reasonableness.

This is the article:

We can well imagine that a generation brought up exclusively on moving pictures would hail the sudden introduction of the actual performer as a great invention. So simple and logical a step would seem to them truly marvelous. At first the bodily presence of the actor might seem to them almost too oppressive, as we now feel it to be when we sit close up on a Shakespearean platform stage, but they would soon wonder why they had been so long content to blink at animated photographs.

The effect upon the actor would be most salutary. He would soon find that he was making himself laughably obvious. The astonishing calisthenics with which he has been accustomed to wring our withers would no longer serve his purpose. He would have to abandon the "irascible" look, the "revenge-is-sweet" look, the "jealousy" look, the "lovey-dovey" look and all the other looks with which he now so impudently holds the camera in order to convey to us that he is feeling something, ah, so profoundly. He would have to unlearn all his looking-glass grimaces and try to regain the natural mobility of human expression.

The historian of the drama would also give a most instructive chapter on the emergence of the actor from the machine. He would hail it as a revolutionary step in the development of the drama, without which, in his opinion, the "Hamlet" that he worships would never have been possible. Knowing nothing of our pre-machine drama, he would be tempted to draw the conclusion that with the rise and decay of moving pictures the drama has gone backward in order to go forward again.

The writer can be reminded that many generations have been "brought up exclusively" on the drama, and that the moving picture has accomplished its temporary retirement in the short space of one-third the time of one generation; not because of the impotence of the drama, however, but for the reason that dramatic entertainment had become debased artistically, because it had been largely prostituted by the greed for money-making.

"The bodily presence of the actor" under such conditions had become not "almost too oppressive," but utterly oppressive, and a long-suffering public welcomed the mirage of the screen, where at least raucous voices and villainously rendered lines were out of hearing. Outraged humanity preferred "to blink at animated photographs" rather than to shed tears over the murdering of a Hamlet or the outraging of an Ophelia by actors, in "bodily presence."

The moving picture has not usurped the place of the spoken drama, and it never can. The point and pith of the spoken word, the merry quip and jest, the subtle thought that moves the heart and touches the soul, the noble speech that arouses all that is best in man like a trumpet call to courage, can never be realized in the moving picture. They can only be partially realized by means of subtitles, or announcements.

The writer of the article under consideration attempts to belittle the art in moving picture acting by sarcastic reference to the various "looks" assumed by the actors. Where can one find the "natural mobility of human expression" more aptly and more eloquently employed than in photoplay acting? Here there are no words to assist in conveying the emotion or the thought that dominates the mind. Natural facial expressions, not "looking-glass grimaces," must necessarily be employed, in order that the spectator may be convinced; and if he be not convinced the photoplay actor or actress is a failure.

Did the writer of the article in the New Republic ever cast a thought on the many advantages which the photoplay possesses over the spoken drama? Think of the matter of stage settings; of the instantaneous change of scene, which permits the rapid following of the incidents of the plot and the various characters involved. Think of the great spectacles in "Quo Vadis?" "Antony and Cleopatra," "Julius Caesar," "Cabiria," "The Birth of a Nation," etc. Where could a theatrical production present such magnificent dramatic spectacles, employing in some instances as many as 20,000 men?

But why cite other advantages of the photoplay? It needs no defender. It has already carved its own way against all odds.

Sane Treatment of the Moving Picture.

Under the heading "Movies' Place in the Sun," the Milwaukee Free Press had the following able editorial in a recent issue:

"The future of the photoplay is assured. So long as the desire remains in the human breast—and it is a primitive instinct—to look at an illustrated book, so long will the photoplay remain. There are possibilities in this form of entertainment never to be realized on the legitimate stage. Scenery cannot supplant real scenes, offered with depth and true proportions. But, on the other hand, the photoplay must always be more or less primitive. The story must be told in pantomime. What it gains in picturesque setting it loses through lack of spoken word and fine personal visualization.

"It would seem as if, in the end, a compromise must be effected. The motion picture will attain a position where, with adequate scenario writers and competent stage directors, it will fulfill the mission of the spectacular drama; and the stage, reverting to first principles, will depend upon plot, strength of story, simple scenery and histrionic achievements to gain its end.

"And in both respects, the theatergoing and photoplay following public will gain."

Good Air in Chicago Picture Theaters.

A recent bulletin issued by the Chicago health department shows that the ventilation of Chicago moving picture theaters is now safe and sane, thanks to the active efforts of the health department, backed by a special ordinance passed to enforce proper ventilation in such theaters. The following paragraphs appear in the bulletin:

The work of enforcing the ventilation ordinance of Chicago in so far as it applies to theatres has been practically completed. With the exception of a few isolated cases, all of the theaters in Chicago are equipped with a ventilating system that, if continuously operated during performances, will maintain a satisfactory air condition, in accordance with the requirements of the ordinance.

This, however, is only a good beginning in the crusade to provide pure air for Chicago's citizens. To succeed in getting the theaters equipped was the first step; to see that the systems are operated is almost as difficult. This does not apply in all cases, for where a good equipment has been carefully designed to meet the particular requirements and properly installed, the theater manager is invariably loud in the praise of the innovation; in fact, theater proprietors call at the department almost daily and state that they cannot do business when the equipment is not in operation.

There were, however, entirely too many theaters where the owners felt that the enforcement of the ordinance was a hardship and where they complied only under severe pressure. In many of these cases they bought the cheapest ventilating equipment that it was possible to procure. Many of them were installed by men unfamiliar with ventilation work, and the result is that the operation is unsatisfactory and in some cases very expensive.

Engineers from the ventilation division have been visiting theaters that fall under this category and are making a study of the situation. We find in many cases that a little careful study of conditions, with slight alterations, will make a satisfactory equipment of what was formerly very unsatisfactory. The department wishes to co-operate with theater owners in an endeavor to help them get their money's worth from the equipments that have been installed, knowing that a sanitary, well ventilated theater is the only one in the present state of public alertness that is a money-making proposition.

Chicago Film Brevities.

R. C. MacMullen, proprietor of the Colonial theater, Joliet, Ill., visited the Chicago office last week. Mr. MacMullen stated that the Colonial is now being remodeled so as to seat 600, the former seating capacity being 500. It will be reopened about September 6th. Mutual masterpictures and feature service will form the programs, at an admission of 10 cents. Mr. MacMullen had just returned from a tour of the West.

C. W. Taylor, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, Omaha, Neb., and formerly one of the most popular branch managers of the General Film Company in Chicago, paid us a visit last week. Mr. Taylor was called to his home in Chalmers, Ind., where his mother is seriously ill. He reported very good business in Omaha for his company.

Charles A. Young, operator at the Grand theater, 411 E. 43rd street, this city, left for South Haven, Thursday, Aug. 19th, on a two weeks' vacation. Charlie was at one time on the Chicago editorial staff of the World, and his articles on projection, as then seen in moving picture theaters in this city, had both pith and point. There is not a more careful, nor a better informed, operator in Chicago than Mr. Young.

Geraldine Farrar, famous prima donna and first of the great singers to join the ranks of photoplayers, stopped over in the city Thursday, Aug. 19th, on her way from the Lasky studio in Los Angeles to New York City. Miss Farrar was made very much of by the Chicago press during her three hours' stay. She informed her interviewers that three pictures, in which she played the leading parts, have been produced at the Lasky studio, namely: "Carmen," "Maria Rosa" and "The Temptation," the last being specially written for her. "The Lasky studios are wonderful," said Miss Farrar. "Everything is so harmonious, and the Lasky people are actually prodigal in their pictures. No expense is spared. The facade of the market place in 'Carmen' must have weighed eight tons, and the cost—well, I wouldn't dare estimate it." Miss Farrar will be in Chicago with the Metropolitan Opera Co. during the month of December. If the war continues after that time she will return to moving pictures. Miss Farrar was accompanied on her trip to New York by Mrs. Sydney Farrer, her mother; Mrs. David Belasco, Mrs. Morris Gest, and by James Sullivan and Frank Connor, who have been working in some of the Lasky pictures.

Emil Pathe, of Pathe Freres, was in the city Wednesday, Aug. 18th. Mr. Pathe was accompanied by Russell Hunting, an American, who for the last eight years, has been with the Pathe firm in an advisory capacity. One of Mr. Pathe's sons was also in the party, his two other sons being at present on the firing line with the French army. This is the second visit of Emile Pathe to this country, his former visit being made about twelve years ago. Mr. Pathe was enthusiastic in his praise of the great progress made in this country during that time.

"The Melting Pot" will finish its sixth successful week at the Fine Arts theater Friday, Aug. 27th.

A moving picture theater with a seating capacity of 1,200, is now in course of construction at Fifty-fifth street and Ashland avenue, this city. The house has been designed by Architect Henry L. Newhouse and is being erected for H. Schoenstadt. The buildings, which will also contain stores on the ground floor and offices in addition to the theatre, will cost about $125,000.

The Triangle Film Corporation has made arrangements for the opening of the Studebaker theater with the product of that company, some time in September. George W. Sammis, formerly of the Klaw & Erlanger forces, New York City, is in Chicago and will act as business manager of the corporation at the Studebaker. Mr. Sammis is now making the necessary changes in the theater for the presentation of $2 moving pictures. Among these will be arrangements for the installation of a large symphony orchestra. Mr. Sammis has announced that among the early presentations in the Studebaker will be the Mack Sennett farce, "My Valet," in which Raymond Hitchcock is featured; the D. W. Griffith adventure story, "The Lamb," with Douglas Fairbanks in the titular role, and a Civil war play, "The Coward," featuring Frank Keenan, by Thomas Ince.

Long lines of people waiting for their turn at the box office of the Colonial theater can now be seen daily. "The Birth of a Nation" was given its first presentation at this theater Sunday afternoon, Aug. 22nd, and showed to capacity. The "theater beautiful" has been thoroughly renovated for the housing of the big spectacle. A new ventilation system has been installed, so that the big audiences will be made as comfortable as possible. The same price scale which ruled at the Illinois will obtain at the Colonial for the daily presentations in the afternoons and evenings.

"Sarah Bernhardt at Home" was given its first presentations in this city at Orchestra Hall Monday afternoon and evening, Aug. 23rd. Large audiences were in attendance and enjoyed the program thoroughly. A strong Paramount drama was an additional feature.

The Tribune-Russian war pictures, taken at the front by Donald C. Thompson, the Tribune's war camera man, are drawing overflowing audiences to the Studebaker, where they were given their first presentation Saturday evening, Aug. 21st. R. R. McCormick, the Tribune war correspondent, introduces the pictures at each presentation and describes the difficulties of taking them. "The motion picture camera is a near-sighted animal, and some of the pictures worked for hardest and under the most difficult conditions, prove total failures," said Mr. McCormick on the opening night. "I speak frankly about it," he said. "What we have is bona fide. There isn't a thing shown that isn't true. It will be of great value to the United States army." The pictures showed the various positions during fighting, the guns in action, the aeroplanes in flights, the caring for the wounded, and many other realistic incidents of actual warfare. Mr. Thompson also lectures in accompaniment to the pictures, and the music played during the screening of the pictures has been happily selected. Much of it is Russian music, selected by Mrs. McCormick, who accompanied her husband as near to the front as a woman dared. She wasn't on the lines, but close enough to hear the fierce cannonading and the vicious spit of the quick-firing guns.

The Syndicate Film Corporation, organized by John Burnham & Co., this city, to distribute the serial, "The Million Dollar Mystery," paid a final dividend to its stockholders on Saturday, Aug. 21st. This dividend amounted to $14.95 a share. The company was organized in April, 1914, with $100,000 paid in capital, and has returned to its stockholders in cash, all told, $605,780.

The signed contracts for the Kleine-Edison service at George Kleine's Chicago office have now reached figures that bespeak a demand that may well be termed extraordinary. Alfred Hamburger has contracted for the entire Kleine-Edison service for ten of his houses, for a year. The Vitagraph and Biograph theatres have also signed up for the entire service for a year. The Kleine Optical Co., within the past week, sold ten Simplex Machines complete, Chicago approved, to the Hamburger houses.

"The First Law," one of Gilson Willets' most popular novels, has been dramatized and will be produced by a prominent theatrical concern. The premier will be given in New York City. Mr. Willets, celebrated as an author and photoplaywright, is engaged exclusively by the Selig Polyscope Company.

R. C. Seery, Chicago manager of the distributing office of the Triangle Film Corporation, was in Kansas City and St. Louis last week opening branch offices in those cities.

Fifty-nine of the guests who enjoyed a seventeen days' tour of the West aboard the Selig Exposition Flyer, enjoyed their first monthly dinner in this city, on Saturday evening, August 21. Telegrams were read during the evening from out-of-town members voicing their regrets that they were unable to attend. A splendid program was given under the direction of Clarence A. Frambers, who also appeared in several original playlets. At the conclusion of the banquet a handsome loving cup was presented to Herbert C. Hoagland, of the Selig Company. The presentation was made by Maude Clement in behalf of the Selig tourists and as a token of appreciation of the many courtesies extended the Selig guests on the westward journey. Mr. Hoagland expressed his appreciation of the beautiful gift in a few well chosen words. Following the dinner a dance was given.

On Monday, August 23, Judge Page Morris, in the United States District Court, issued a restraining order against the Zenith Film Company, of Duluth, on the charge of violation of copyright laws in the matter of duping Charles Chapin films produced by the Essanay Company and distributed by the General Film Company. Two duped copies of films were seized in Duluth. It is held that almost wholesale duping of the Chaplin films is being engaged in by the pirates. A faked Chaplin film was also seized on the date mentioned at a Madison street moving picture theater, this city.

The members of the South Shore Country Club, of Chicago, have decided to appear in a one-reel comedy written by George Ade. It will include, it is said, tennis players, golfers, daring riders and other experts in outdoor sports. The winsome girl in the plot is won out by the Simple Dub, who has never taken any interest in manly exercises. The film will be shown in a newly built palace at the country fair, to be held by the club some time in the fall.

NEW THEATER IN NORTH TARRYTOWN.

Edward Pollock has opened at 80-82 Beekman avenue, North Tarrytown, N. Y., an 800-seat motion picture theater. The floors of the structure are of concrete, and the window frames are faced with metal. The window panes have been reinforced with wire, and all material that makes for the safeguard of the public has been used. The operating room is equipped with two Power's 6-A machines and a Hallberg d. c. economizer. A stage has been built which measures 16 by 50 feet.

BLANCHARD REMODELING THEATER.

J. M. Blanchard, who formerly ran the People's theater at Sunbury, Pa., recently purchased the Hands theater property at Millville, N. J. As soon as he had the house in his possession Mr. Blanchard closed it, and began the work of extensive improvements. A metal ceiling, an artistic lobby, walls decorated prettily are a part of what is to be done to the structure, and the remodeling will cost several thousands of dollars. Mr. Blanchard expects to have the theater ready for the public by September 1, and it will be known as the People's.

LOS ANGELES LETTER

Court Upholds Los Angeles Board of Censors' Ruling—New Ordinance Constitutional.

FINAL decision was handed down Monday this week by Judge Hewitt of Superior Court, ruling that the new city ordinance regulating the exhibition of motion pictures is constitutional and that the local board of censors shall have full power to enforce same.

This ordinance was introduced in the city council a few months ago, and has been vigorously opposed, we are informed, by some of the exchanges and feature film distributors. The ordinance provides that all motion picture films must be shown to the board and a permit secured before being exhibited. If a film is exhibited without such permit, the board can instruct the Chief of Police to seize it and deliver it to the board. The censors can then either hold the film or return it to the distributor upon his giving a bond for a thousand dollars not to show the picture in the city again. The great objection to this ordinance from the distributor's point of view is the unusually severe measures provided for the enforcement of same; that such an ordinance could be constitutional was doubted.

Its validity was finally tested when suit was brought a month ago by the American Theatre Co. against Chief of Police Snively, who, by order of the board of censors attempted to stop the exhibition of the Essanay-Chaplain production, "The Woman," in the American theater, 452 South Broadway. The theater had gone to a heavy expense advertising this feature, and put it on the first thing the Monday morning the picture was released without waiting for a permit. The theater company succeeded in getting a temporary injunction, restraining the Chief of Police from seizing the film, bringing to a legal issue the question whether the courts would uphold this new ordinance.

Judge Hewitt's decision of this case was very brief. It read: "Judgment is given defendants because I believe the ordinance of the city of Los Angeles regulating moving picture exhibits to be valid. The only question in the case turned upon the point, whether the ordinance was constitutional or not."

Selig Zoo the Popular Amusement Park in Los Angeles.

Col. Selig's magnificent Zoological Gardens are becoming one of the most popular recreation and outing places in Los Angeles. Great picnic parties and evening dances are almost daily occurrences. Sunday this week, five thousand Socialists held their annual picnic in the park, and Saturday will be Shop Girls' Day, when several thousand girls from the big department stores and the two telephone companies will have a grand picnic festival and dance. Among other joyful things on the program will be a beauty contest. Prizes will be awarded to the most beautiful shop girls in Los Angeles. Another exciting event will be a free-for-all race on the elephants. Miss Thora Pederson of the New York Department Store, has challenged girls from the other stores to take part in this race. A. L. Monahan, the publicity manager of the Zoo, when giving us this information, scratched his head doubtfully and stated that positively no speed limits would be violated in this race. On Wednesday night next week, the Giles Club will give a jungle dance at the Selig Zoo Park. The members of the Giles Club, Mr. Monahan stated, are young society people from Los Angeles' North Side, who organized this club about a year ago. The most remarkable coincidence is that the name of this club spells Selig backwards. We are almost tempted to wonder if it is a coincidence, however, this promising club gives a dance every Wednesday night at the big animal park. Next Wednesday will be a costume ball and unusual preparations have been made to give a jungle atmosphere to the event.

Film Brevities.

The genial president of the American arrived in Los Angeles this week after a busy trip east lasting several weeks. He has engaged several new people for his Santa Barbara headquarters. Anna Little, who was with the Universal, has been signed to work up in the mountain studio. James Dayton, who for several years was on the staff of the Universal scenario bureau, has also been signed by Mr. Hutchinson and has departed for the Flying A plant.

Joseph Carl Breil, the well-known music writer who arranged the scores for "The Clansman" and many other famous plays and pictures, has been signed for work in making scores for Fine Arts Films, Griffith's brand of Triangle releases. The composer has built himself a studio in the interior of the projection room, where he will be near the screen and at the same time away from the crowd.

Henry Otto, the rugged and intrepid director of American features, who has been working for the past year without a minute's rest, was brought to Los Angeles this week suffering from acute nervousness, and placed under the care of a nerve specialist, who is going to make him take a complete rest and vacation before returning to work at the Flying A studios.

Sam Spedon announced this week for the Vitagraph company that a deal had practically been closed and sealed whereby that company would acquire a most desirable site of about a city block somewhere near the present location of the Griffith studios in Hollywood. The new plot will be converted into a studio layout in a few weeks.

Cecil B. De Mille, head of the western Lasky forces, has finished his last picture with Geraldine Farrar and has departed for New York to confer with Mr. Lasky and the heads of the firm in regard to the new $250,000 studio which is to be erected on a new 40-acre site in Hollywood. The plant is to be made most modern and up-to-the-minute. Efficiency and system to be two of the watchwords. The plans are practically completed, and will be definitely announced later. The plant was designed by Wilfred Buckland, head of the art department, and his assistant, R. H. Paul.

Francis X. Bushman and Fred J. Balshofer, heads of the Quality Pictures Co., with Metro release, have gone to Chicago and New York to exploit "The Silent Voice," the latest feature picture made at the Los Angeles plant. They will present the picture at a Chicago house for the press and exhibitors. They will then go on to the metropolis to open the feature at the Strand theater, where Mr. Bushman will personally appear.

A large tramp steamer which put into Port Los Angeles recently was leased by Managing Director Jesse J. Robbins for use in "Shanghaied" the latest Chaplin comedy being made in the local studios of the Essanay. The players, 18 in number, dressed in old clothes and seafaring costumes, departed one morning at one o'clock aboard the hobo vessel and sailed to some islands west of here where they did many scenes.

Harry Siegel, who won the Charlie Chaplin contest at the Republic Theatre two weeks ago, has been engaged by the Banner Film Co. of San Mateo, Cal., to appear in comedies.

A merry complimentary dance and reception was given at the new David Horsley studios on Saturday evening, the 14th of August. There were many people present who were interested in the new plant of the Mina. Many dropped in for a chat and a dance, and it was well into the early morning hours when the last lights were turned out and the gateman shut up for the night.

The Ford Motor Band of half a hundred pieces visited Universal City this week and watched the picture in the making. Big Bill Gibson, chief of the cowpunchers, roped a spirited steer from the tonneau of one of the jitneys much to the amusement of the musicians.

Captain Wilbert Melville, head of the Western Lubin forces, dropped in from Coronado and the San Diego fair long enough to pick up a few people and say hello to the old friends. He reports the southern studio as a busy place and says that as soon as possible work will be started on the new Los Angeles studio. The new place is running full blast and will be formally opened in the near future with some sort of lively celebration.

Crane Wilbur arrived this week at the Inceville studios of the N. Y. M. P. and is assembling his belongings preparatory to starting work in one of the Triangle features to be made by Mr. Ince.

The Midshipmen from Annapolis, on their tour of the war zones, visited Los Angeles and the film row. The 1915 General Committee tendered them a most delightful ball at Shrine auditorium. Many photoplayers and film people were present.

The same day the enlisted men of the small fleet of vessels were the guests of the Universal Film Company, at the capital. The "gobs," as they are called by seafaring men, enjoyed the whole day, with its Spanish barbecue rodeo and other events in addition to seeing the pictures in the making.

"Jordan is a Hard Road," picturized by Mary H. O'Connor from the book by Parker, is the first picture to feature Frank Campeau, who has just arrived at the Mutual studios to appear in Triangle feature films.

Inceville is forging ahead rapidly in its building activities, for this week the new tinting room has been finished and the carpenters are now busy on the two new projecting rooms, a new administration building and a larger cutting room. All literary and office rooms will be housed in the new administration building, and the publicity office, for so long isolated on a hill top, will have one of the best locations in the new building.

Owen Moore, who for some time has played juvenile leading parts, and who was recently with the Keystone, has joined the Mutual and is at work also in "Jordan Is a Hard Road."

Even if it is hot weather, and the desert thermometers have boiled out their mercury, some players have to go out into the sandy wastes and pose for the films. This week the Lasky players, headed by George Melford, went to Indio, way down on the rim of the desert, to film scenes for "The Red Mirage," featuring Lou Tellegen.

The Quality players, with Director William J. Bowman and players made up of Helen Dunbar, Bill Clifford, Lester Cuneo, and others numbering 18, went at midnight the other night to Calexico, on the Mexican border, where they will work for a week on the scenes for "A Corner in Cotton," the fill-in five-reel picture being made while Mr. Bushman is in New York, and while Miss Snow is recovering from a recent illness.

And the Vitagraph players also trekked into the desert at Mojave to do some exciting scenes for a current production. Sam Spedon accompanied Director Sturgeon, and when he returned said that he was glad to get back here where it is cool, and we poor things are wishing we were somewhere where the mercury was down at least in the double figure column. The story Sturgeon was doing is "The Yellow Streak," and George Kunkel and George Holt are featured. Mr. Spedon secured photographs which he will use to illustrate a magazine story that he is now preparing. Spedon fooled the players by showing them that is he used to the desert.

"Speed Ball" Frank Reicher is the name that has been prefaced to the Lasky director, who makes pictures when others are at play. Chief Billy Leonard of the construction department found him so fast at making pictures that he dubbed him "Speed Ball," and the name has stuck hard. Reicher is surely a fast worker.

Miss Violette Radcliffe, of the Mutual Kid Company, had a birthday the other day and, of course, a party. Her guests were fellow players in the films and there were many little star kiddies there. Among the prominent visitors were Billy Jacobs, Olive Johnson and others.

Director Jesse J. Robbins, of the Chaplin Essanay players, is going about the studio with both knees bandaged as a result of an injury sustained while making scenes for "Shanghaied."

Santa Barbarans were used in a recent picture for the Diamond serial by Billy Taylor, who is directing. The scenes were at the racetrack, and a large tent had been erected.

Director J. P. McGowan has left the Lasky concern and is signed with the Universal to direct big pictures there.

Another company went to the desert this week headed by Orrin Johnson, of Inceville, and Charles Swickard, who directs "Wither Thou Goest," which will be a Triangle Ince feature release. Tom Chatterton, playing in this picture, also went to the hot land as did Rhea Mitchell, the Ince girl who takes the leading part in the production.

Madam Filbert has been permanently engaged at the Mutual studios to design all costumes for Triangle releases. She is a talented modiste of Paris and her services will help to maintain the high quality of Triangle pictures.

Smiling Minta Durfee, who was badly injured some time ago in a washing machine while "doing a Keystone," is out of the hospital. She is going to San Francisco for a two weeks' vacation as the guest of the Keystone Company, and believe us she deserves it. She is Mrs. Roscoe Arbuckle in private life, and a very popular photoplay artist.

Mary Anderson, the charming young Vitagrapher who recently arrived on the coast from the eastern studios, has started her first picture on the Pacific side under the direction of Ulysses Davis. The story is "Cal Marvin's Wife," and is from the machine of L. C. Russell. In the cast supporting the new player in the west are Anne Schaefer, William Duncan, Otto Lederer and Carlton Weatherby.

Lulu Glaser and Edna Aug arrived at Universal City Wednesday. The two stars will be featured in a five-reel Universal comedy under the direction of Al Christie.

The foundation for the new stage at Universal City is now almost completed. This will practically double the present amount of exterior stage space at the Universal studios. The dimensions are the same as the main stage which is 500 by 100 feet. The addition of this new stage will considerably relieve the somewhat crowded condition at present.

Making Advertising Pay

Manager Irwin of V-L-S-E Talks About the "Big Four" Publicity and Produces Proof of Its Effectiveness.

THE motion picture industry has seen many great and startling changes, especially during the last three years; but I believe the greatest change in the manufacturing, marketing and exhibiting methods will be noted within the next twelve months," said Walter W. Irwin, General Manager of the V-L-S-E, in a recent statement. "This company was incorporated to carry out a definite policy born of a close study of the public's desires. We started in to carry out definite ideas, and put into practice certain theories which we believed would benefit the industry in its entirety. The move was an urgent necessity, to the maintenance of the industry, on a plane where it could achieve greater perfection.

"It was a sheer impossibility to produce features of real artistic quality and high dramatic value, such as picture play patrons now demand, unless the manufacturers could receive a fair monetary return on the ever-increasing cost of production. This means the calling upon exhibitors to pay higher rental prices. But in order to enable the exhibitor to pay this increase, it was absolutely necessary to show the theater managements how they could increase their box-office receipts.

"With this object in view, namely, the increase of the exhibitor's profits, the V-L-S-E as a selling organization was formed, as only through the increase of the exhibitor's profits could the business be kept in the healthy condition necessary to its progress.

"The problem of increasing the exhibitor's proceeds has as its principal solution—advertising—the most potent form of advertising—word of mouth publicity. Exhibitors have long overlooked this great force. The observations of our four companies showed that even in the case of small length productions, exhibitors had wasted a great opportunity in not taking advantage of the recommendations of their satisfied patrons.

"So, in giving to the trade its biggest dramatic offering, the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay Companies instituted the policy of advocating long runs and the heralding in advance of the exhibition of the features. The object of the advance advertising in the newspapers and on the billboards is to attract the greatest number of people to the first showing. The people that make up the first audiences become at once units in the great advertising force. The pleasure and satisfaction they receive in viewing the features converts them practically into patronage solicitors for the theater.

"The exhibitor who books strong features for long runs takes full advantage of the favorable impression the feature makes, whereas the exhibitor who books a picture for only one or two days loses all or a great percentage of that great advertising force—word of mouth publicity."

In giving out this statement, Mr. Irwin had before him reports just received from several branch managers that illustrated his declarations. From these reports, Mr. Irwin cited the case of the Empire theater in San Antonio, Texas. This theater is probably the finest and most representative motion picture theater in the Middle Southwest. W. J. Lytle, proprietor of the Empire, and several other fine theaters in San Antonio, has just closed a contract with the V-L-S-E for first, second and third runs of the Big Four productions. Mr. Lytle states that he will play "The Rosary" and "The White Sister" in the Empire theater. He will then move them to one of his other houses and will then return them to the Empire theater and still bring them back to other theaters in his chain.

In a letter to the V-L-S-E, Mr. Lytle stated that he intends using all of their subjects first and second run in his best houses, and will use all of the subjects that have already been shown in San Antonio, regardless of where they have been exhibited. "Mr. Lytle's decision was arrived at," states Mr. Irwin, "after close observation of actual tests of the Big Four contention that the personal recommendation of patrons enhance the value of feature picture plays."

Branch Manager H. D. Naugle reported that after noting the success and continued increase of patronage during the three-day run of "The Island of Regeneration" at the Cabrillo theater, San Diego, the management of the Spreckels opera house, the largest theater in that city, immediately booked the feature for a run of seven days, making a total of ten consecutive days. Incidentally, Mr. Naugle further reported that this feature has been booked solid up until the middle of October in the Los Angeles territory.

"The Blindness of Virtue" is now in its fifth consecutive week in the Loop District of Chicago, playing in three theaters, each separated from the other by two square blocks, and indications point to this production appearing in the same district for several weeks longer.

In the Far West, "The Eagle's Nest" has been brought back to one theater five different times, and is re-booked in every theater where it has been shown.

In Kansas City at the big Empress theater, "The Rosary" accumulated so much popularity by word of mouth advertising during a full week's engagement, that the management has just rebooked it for three days.

These few instances were mentioned by Mr. Irwin because they are current cases. "With slight changes," said Mr. Irwin, "they apply to practically every feature that has so far been released on the Big Four program."

Agnes Vernon in "Big U" Company

WHEN Carl Laemmle, president of the "Big U" organization, conceived the idea that Hobart Henley with his fine stage presence and talents would do even greater and bigger things in the West, he had also in mind a little leading woman who would be an ideal partner for the good-looking Hobart. After some deliberation, it was finally decided by the Universal heads that Agnes Vernon would in the future play opposite Mr. Henley, and there is no happier child than pretty Agnes in Universal City.

Agnes Vernon.

This brown-haired, blue-eyed little girl was born in Oregon, December 27, 1896, making her just nineteen years old. She was educated in a private school, after which she and her mother, with whom she lives, moved to California. Agnes always had a hankering for the stage, but her prim mother would not hear of it. However, one day, a little over a year ago, mother and Agnes visited the Universal studios, then located in Hollywood, and when they saw the happy outdoor life of the actors in the pictures consent was readily given. Miss Vernon then received her first part from Murdock MacQuarrie, and, although she had had no experience whatever, she soon learned the rudiments of acting before the camera, and before long Mr. MacQuarrie gave her some leading roles to play. That she was successful is a foregone conclusion, as those who have seen her work in "When Its One of Your Own," "The Fear Within," "Where Brains Are Needed," and many others, can testify.

As leading woman of the new company in which Mr. Henley will appear, some big things are expected of Agnes Vernon, and those who know her to be the hard, conscientious worker that she is predict that she will soon become one of the shining lights of the film world and a great credit to the "Big U" who gave her the first chance to make good. Miss Vernon is a fair-complexioned, brown-haired, demure little Miss, who just loves her work, riding and motoring. However, her hobby is dancing, and her greatest ambition is "to have friends and the ability to keep them." But the big thought of her life is to study and perfect her mind so that she will be the big success which is looming on her horizon.

LORIMER JOHNSTON JOINS SOUTH AFRICAN COMPANY.

Lorimer Johnston, formerly with the Vitagraph Company, has been secured by the African Films Trust of Johannesburg, South Africa, to take sole charge of the production plant. He sails by the St. Louis September 4. The productions of the company will be devoted at first to features showing the history of the country, past and present, and as the Union of South Africa is to furnish all aid of the Government in a proper presentation of the pictures, something entirely novel will be the result.

Cameragraph No. 6B Makes Debut

Holds Most Successful Coming-Out Party at the Biltmore—Present Are Representatives of the Trade and Scientific Press, and Publicity Experts.

MISS CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6B, the latest effort of the mind and hand of Nicholas Power and his associates, and an absolute departure in the field of projection, was officially introduced to the film world on the afternoon of Tuesday, August 24. The debut was in the form of a luncheon at the Biltmore—and with one major exception it was an unusually pleasant occasion. The exception was the unavoidable absence of the veteran inventor, Nicholas Power, head of the Nicholas Power Company. In his stead to greet the representatives of the trade, scientific and export press and publicity men and to receive their congratulations were Treasurer Edward Earl, General Manager John F. Skerrett, Will C. Smith, Arthur H. Lang and Bill Barry.

The luncheon itself was deserving of long remembrance for itself. The steak alone will stand as a memory. It leaked out that the quality was ascribable to the fine selective skill of Mr. Skerrett, a skill acquired in past years when choosing unresisting material for the delectation of sundry hungry, particular political associates.

The pleasure of the gathering was unmarred by any speech-making. Really there was no occasion for formal remarks. Power's Cameragraph No. 6B, standing in one corner of the private dining room, spoke for itself. It seemed to be built like a watch and to be as solid and businesslike as one of Uncle Sam's latest three-inch guns. At the conclusion of the repast Mr. Skerrett pointed out to an interested circle some of the more notable features of the new model. It is not an untried machine. For several months it has been running smoothly and noiselessly in one of the country's larger theaters. A few days ago the 6B was assembled at the Nicholas Power Company's section of the San Francisco Exposition. No attempt will be made here to describe the latest Power machine. That will be done thoroughly in the projection department in the succeeding issue of the Moving Picture World.

Among those present besides the representatives of the trade press were Mr. De Csesznak, Export American Industries; Mr. Caruthers, Safety Engineering; E. C. Johnston and Franklyn Johnston, American Exporter; Walter Kaempffert, Scientific American; W. H. Crane, Dun's Review, and George Vedder, Export American Industries.

Plimpton Epic Pictures

Former Edison Managing Director Makes Strong Alliance in Forming New Producing Company.

HORACE G. PLIMPTON heads a new company, "Plimpton Epic Pictures, Inc." This organization was formed by five New York men and the services of Mr. Plimpton secured for five years. They will specialize on "feature" photoplays of one type, which has been said will be of compelling interest.

The directors of this corporation are: Percival K. Frowert, who is also the vice-president of the new company, is president of the Percival K. Frowert Company, Inc., of New York and London; M. Parish-Watson, who is interested in international art matters, a member of the firm of Gorer of London and the leading authority in the United States on Chinese art; Sidney Dillon Ripley, of Hempstead, Long Island, and New York, a name prominent in social and financial affairs in New York for many generations; Charles A. de Lima completes the board. Mr. de Lima is a playwright and retains a residence in Paris and Florence, Italy, where many of the sets of the Plimpton Epic Pictures will be staged.

The executive offices of the company are in the Longacre Building, New York. It is incorporated in New York with a capital of $100,000.

CENSORS ENJOY "CARMEN."

Lasky's production of "Carmen" with Geraldine Farrar in the title role was shown to the members of the National Board of Censorship last week. Those present representing the board were:

Mrs. J. N. Whaley, Mrs. Josephine Reading and J. H. Sargent, who are among the oldest members of the National Board; Mrs. Elsie Crosby, Mrs. L. McCormick, Mrs. Elizabeth Chittenden, Mrs. M. Scudder and Mrs. O. C. Weist. There were, in addition, about twenty persons, most of whom were friends of the censors. Carl H. Pierce, of the Bosworth organization, and several other well known motion picture men were present.

At the conclusion of the exhibition the censors and their friends burst spontaneously into applause which lasted nearly a minute. After a few minutes' discussion a vote was taken and "Carmen" was passed unanimously by the censors who placed themselves on record as being highly pleased with the work of Miss Farrar and the extremely fine direction of Cecil B. DeMille. "Carmen" will be released through Paramount Pictures Corporation on November 1.

Mermaids in the Making

Annette Kellermann and Herbert Brenon Have a Swimming Pool Party in Which Fifty Swimmers, Real and Near, Figure.

THERE was some tall figuring at Dr. Savage's swimming pool, 308 West 59th street, New York, on the evening of August 23. Also, there was some short and broad and then again some very slim figuring, for the ways and waists of nature are not uniform, neither does the wearing of an Annette Kellermann bathing suit necessarily indicate the possession of an Annette Kellermann figure. Sometimes it reveals something broadly or thinly different.

Annette Kellermann herself, chicly covered by a summery frock with a Turkish towel frontispiece for protection, her feet encased in the smallest of white pumps, stood on the wet marble slab at the edge of the pool. Standing beside her was Director Herbert Brenon, running this way and that into the adjacent wetness were newspaper men, who for once in their lives came early and remained late to cover an assignment, and wherever the eye wandered, on the surface of the water, under the water, or languidly basking in the warm air, were girls a la Kellermann, with variations.

The youngest, Peggy Barnstead by name, was fourteen; the oldest—well, John H. Goldfrap, the official recorder of ages, weights and measures, wouldn't say. "They're all young, and they're all beautiful," he remarked with offhand inclusiveness, "and we're going to get the most likely mermaids that ever swam before a camera."

Fifty came to qualify and twenty remained to figure in the picture, of which Miss Kellermann, summery gown and all, was the center. This meant that they figured and swam up to the mermaidian standard and will be taken to Montega Bay, Jamaica, for the deep-sea picture Director Brenon is about to produce for the Fox Film Corporation.

With Miss Kellermann to judge of aquatic efficiency, Mr. Brenon to cast an appraising eye over physical contours, and John H. Wendelkin to proffer a long pole in time of need, each of the fifty potential mermaids took to the water as best she could. The modes of entering the pool were many and varied and not infrequently the cause of shower baths for those who looked on to wonder and admire.

One young miss, possessing the courage of ambition, jumped merrily off the springboard and landed in a position which she afterwards confessed was most upsetting. She admitted that it was her first dive; but if others could do it she didn't see why she couldn't. A few admitted inexperience in diving and modestly crawled down the iron ladder; but more preferred to leave via the springboard and reach the water in whatever position fate decreed.

These names are included on the list of those selected because of a happy blending of beauty and aquatic efficiency: Anna White, Harriet Press, Hazel Mazwell, Julia Reynolds, Loretta Argue, Gladys Bauchamp, Rosalind Morrell, Anna Willie, Elizabeth Buckley, Betty Hamilton, Marion Scheffler, May Healy, Gretchen Doty, Marjorie Wynn, Peggy Barnstead, Beatrice Shapiro, Marion Emmons, Martha Lebert, Charlotte P. Plumb and Evelyn Gourley.

CANADIAN ANIMALS FILMED.

An interesting contribution to the fast-growing animated library of wild animal lore was revealed last week at a showing in Vancouver of the first print of three reels of pictures under the descriptive title, "Big Game of British Columbia." These pictures were obtained by a party of four men who left Hazelton with dog teams early in the year, and spent five months in the Cassiar district of British Columbia, a wild, little known region extending from North of the fifty-fifth parallel to the Yukon border. The party obtained about 4,000 feet of negative, including in addition to the scenic features of the country, pictures of moose, beaver at work, cariboo, Rocky Mountain goats, etc. These goat pictures are the gems of the collection. The pictures have been indorsed by the Vancouver Board of Education and by A. Bryan Williams, provincial game warden, and with the exception of the actual film itself are exclusively a product of British Columbia, as the developing and printing were done in the laboratories of Kean's Canada Films, Vancouver. At present the owners are negotiating with the government for the purchase of a copy to be shown at the Exposition, and the Canada Wild Life Film Corporation has been formed to dispose of the rights.

JEROME LEWIS WITH KLEINE.

Jerome Lewis, well known in eastern film circles, has been added to the George Kleine forces. He will travel out of the New York office, filling the vacancy made by the resignation of Ed. Guzman.

Balboa Continues to Grow

From Small Building Taken in 1913 Has Developed to a Full Fledged Plant.

ALL four corners of Sixth and Alamitos streets, in Long Beach, Cal., are now utilized by the Balboa Amusement Producing Company for the studio and various departments necessary to make "the pictures beautiful." From modest beginnings, this big plant has grown in two years' time, in spite of generally untoward business conditions. H. M. Horkheimer, head and shoulders of the Balboa Company, took over the old Edison studio in 1913. It consisted of one small building. Now there are eight and the end is not yet, for with the increasing demand for Balboa pictures, further facilities are in prospect.

This summer, the stage capacity has been enlarged 100 per cent. It totals 8,000 square feet now. One section is entirely enclosed so that by using artificial lights work can proceed night and day, no matter what the weather. A capacious scene dock has been built next to this inclosed studio. Handy to it is a group of twelve new dresssing rooms, provided with every convenience for the players. There is also a large garage for housing a dozen cars.

On the opposite corner, are two pretty little bungalows. The one shelters the company's general offices, while in the other are the press and scenario departments. The original building has been converted into a wardrobe department and laboratory. Right now, a big steel reservoir is being erected to cool water in quantities needed to develop the film.

The vacant land on the fourth corner has been leased and will be used for accommodating large sets, such as cannot be taken care of on the stage. In addition to all this land, the Balboa Company controls eleven acres on Signal Hill, overlooking Long Beach, where some of its biggest outdoor scenes are taken.

Balboa buildings are all uniformly painted green and white. The surrounding grounds are being beautified. When Balboa started operations, its total force numbered twenty-five. In two years that number has increased a thousand per cent. It is now turning out 15,000 feet of negative a week.

Edgar Lewis Joins Lubin

LUBIN of Philadelphia announces the engagement of Edgar Lewis, the well-known photoplay director, to supervise the direction of feature films. Mr. Lewis is one of the larger men among producers and scarcely needs an introduction to the millions familiar with photoplays.

The mere fact that Mr. Lewis produced "The Plunderer," "The New Governor," "Samson," "The Thief," "The Gilded Fool," "The Littlest Rebel," "The Bondsman," and other famous photoplays, stamps him as one of the greatest producers in America.

Just which play Mr. Lewis will produce first has not yet been decided, but it will be a master film to be released through the V-L-S-E.

Mr. Lewis's connection with Lubin marks the engagement of the fourth new director in as many weeks, the others being Jack Pratt, who filmed "Shore Acres," "The Garden of Lies," and other plays, and who is now directing Louis Reeves Harrison's great war play, "The Rights of Man"; Allan Farnham, formerly artistic director for the Kalem Co., and occupying the same position with Lubin, and Edward McKim, Lubin's new comedy director.

MISS JUSTICE IN THE NORTH WOODS.

Maibelle Heikes Justice has finished the last comedy of the forthcoming Selig serial "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," and has slipped away for a quiet vacation in the North Woods of Canada, where she hopes to secure material for a series of strong dramas of the North.

Film Lands Convention

New Englanders Make Four Thousand Foot Industrial Picture and Secure Next Meeting of National Retail Hardware Association.

A combination scenario has recently been evolved for the New England Hardware Dealers' Association, with headquarters at Boston.

The New England hardware men have had an association since 1893 and have been active and up to date in their efforts to promote trade conditions in their line.

A few years ago they became affiliated with the National Retail Hardware Dealers' Association, and a Boston man had been an active officer of the national body.

The Boston Chamber of Commerce has recently formed a convention bureau with the purpose of bringing conventions to Boston and New England.

It seemed to the New England hardware merchants the psychological moment to land a Boston man as a national president and Boston as the 1916 convention meeting place.

Ex-President F. Alexander Chandler of the New England association was appointed chairman of the committee, and he arranged with the Dadmun Studio of Boston to make the film.

Sixteen of New England's prominent hardware manufacturers co-operatively contributed to the expense of the film making, and were allowed eighty feet each to show "episodes" in the making of their products.

Governor Walsh of Massachusetts, Mayor Curley of Boston and hardware manufacturer Mayor Wright of Worcester and hardware dealer Mayor Stacy of Springfield were posed, also the Massachusetts State Board of Trade, Boston Chamber of Commerce, Pilgrim Publicity House, Women's City Club, and many other trade associations were included. This added human interest, and with the industrial episodes furnished a four thousand foot film.

The film went to the 1915 convention of the National Retail Hardware Association at St. Paul and landed the Boston candidate and the convention for Boston.

It has since been shown before the convention of the Advertising Clubs of the World at Chicago, in the municipal open air series at Boston, before the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and is now being loaned on circuit "dates."

U. S. DESTROYER IN LUBIN PICTURE.

George W. Terwilliger, one of the Lubin directors, is planning a big naval scene at the Newport studio of the Lubin Company. To prevent a foreign agent from escaping with plans of something important, Captain S. Sims, U. S. N., will go into the pictures next week by permitting one of the destroyers of the Atlantic destroyer squadron to send to the bottom with her battery the 100-ton schooner Azaba, of Providence. The schooner was purchased recently from Frank White by the Lubin Company.

It appears from the play in which the destroyer will play so important a part that a foreign agent is escaping on a yacht with valuable plans. Miss Ormi Hawley, the heroine, discovers the plot and rushes to Captain Sims, the commander of the destroyer, who will be impersonated by one of the actors, and implores him to save the plans. The yacht will be destroyed by the destroyer's guns and the foreign agent is captured. After this the picture players will take another scene.

FLORENCE LAWRENCE IN AUTO ACCIDENT.

We learn on good authority that the charming little moving picture star, Florence Lawrence, who in spite of reports to the contrary is neither sick nor ailing, sported with death a few days ago when her automobile in consequence of a collision caught fire.

No ill results followed, however, more serious than a shock to the nerves of some members of the party that was being conveyed to her country home for a week-end outing, and considerably added to the debit side of her day book, for repairs to the injured car.

Since her temporary retirement from the screen something like a year ago, Miss Lawrence has been hibernating on her beautiful estate near Westwood, N. J., superintending the laying out of her gardens.

It may be interesting to picture fans and others to know that the little star, whose absence from the screen has been deplored, has, during her sojourn among the Jersey hills, grown more sylph-like and roguish than ever.

In addition to her gardening duties Miss Lawrence has paid considerable attention to music. It may not be commonly known that in addition to her screen talents, she is remarkably gifted in a musical way, having a lyric soprano voice of unusual quality.

William D. Taylor

WHEN William D. Taylor turned down several flattering offers to join the American Company at Santa Barbara, neither he nor S. S. Hutchinson had any idea that he would be directing the big "Diamond from the Sky" serial; in fact, it was understood that he would produce big, special features for the company.

The director who was making the "Diamond" serial left, and the company was in a quandary; and it is the nature of this splendid producer and gentleman to step into the breach and to offer to complete the serial with its well-known stars. Anyone in the business knows what directing a serial means; it is the hardest work in the world. It means turning out so many feet a week, good or bad weather, and it means, moreover, creating new situations and sensations, the holding together of one company and of many trials and tribulations. Mr. Taylor has proven himself one of the most capable producers by his work in this serial alone, although that was not necessary. He started producing for the Balboa Company and left that concern to put on the Favorite Players productions.

William D. Taylor.

Before becoming a director, Taylor was highly regarded as an actor, both on the speaking stage and on the screen. His last performance under direction was his Captain Alvarez, in which he took the title part at the Vitagraph studios.

"RIGHTS OF MAN," NEW LUBIN PLAY.

The Lubin Company has decided to name its great war play, now being made under the direction of Jack Pratt, with Rosetta Brice and Richard Buhler in the leading roles, "The Rights of Man, the Story of War's Red Blot." The theme of this play was suggested by Thomas Paine's reply to Burke's attack on the French Revolution, but the larger and more humanitarian thought involved in the photoplay is that of Louis Reeves Harrison, its author.

Mr. Harrison has been for some years one of the editors of the Motion Picture World, and in addition has written a number of successful five-reel photoplays.

Mr. Pratt has filmed about half the play so far, and from present indications it will be one of the few really big productions of the year. It will be released through the V-L-S-E on a date to be announced later.

Equitable's Novel Advertising Plan

Proposes to Put Experts in the Field to Help Build Local Patronage for Theaters Using Its Program.

THE Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, now drawing close to the date of its first release, September 20, at which time "Trilby," the brilliant work of Maurice Tourneur and featuring Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye, will be sent out as a regular release, announces today another impressive innovation, looking forward to the direct aid of exhibitors, as intimated in the announcement of that concern in last week's trade papers.

The plan is a simple, but effective, one, and demonstrates to what extent this new and determined organization is going to make good its pre-release promises.

There are five division points of the World Film distributional zones. At each of these division points, beginning within the next few weeks, there will be stationed an advertising and exploitation expert. These experts will have but one object, namely, to aid the exhibitor who feels that outside aid will help his business. These advertising men will be instructed that in no manner shall they talk "selling."

The men to be engaged for this experiment are well-known legitimate advance agents who for the past ten years have been traveling ahead of high-class legitimate attractions.

These advance agents will be under the control of division managers and when the division manager happens across an exhibitor whose attention to exploitation, or lack of knowledge along advertising lines, prevents him from getting what he should out of the attractions showing in his house, if that exhibitor is playing Equitable or World Film attractions, or contemplates playing them, the division manager immediately installs one of the advertising geniuses at the house, for a short period, at no cost to the exhibitor, and the work of exploitation and lobby display is handled by the agent, under the eye of the manager who, when he is given the proper start, can be relied upon to continue the good work.

The men selected by Equitable are well known in their line and men who have enjoyed prosperous, successful careers with such prominent and exacting managers as Belasco, Henry B. Harris, John Cort, the Shuberts and Klaw and Erlanger. The men will be given free hands after assignment by division managers to Equitable or World Film houses.

The agent will spend about a week at each house, or double from one house to another, until the work is well under way and so arrange that the manager can continue it.

SAM SPEDON STILL ON THE COAST.

Since my arrival in Los Angeles, meeting old friends and making new ones, who have made me feel so much at home, it seems like walking around the corner in your own home town. My trip to the coast was originally intended to be a "vacation;" it has turned out to be a matter of business. Really, there is so much to do and so much to learn out here, we can conscientiously play upon Cecil Rhodes' words: there is so much to do and so much more to be done, my time here could be profitably prolonged another month. My business superiors seem to think so too. They have extended the limit of my time here from two weeks to four, and it may be two or three more before it expires. One can keep himself as busy here as he can at his home office. There is no lack of pleasure. All work and no play would make Sam a dull boy. It is always a pleasure to work with the Vitagraph. There is only one thing that troubles me out here; to think I cannot be with the exhibitors at their field day at Brighton Beach on August 21. It will have been the first time since their organization that I will not have been with them. If a fellow were only ubiquitous, couldn't he accomplish a lot?

It would do a whole lot of people back east a world of good to come out here and get acquainted. Get a more comprehensive idea of the motion picture industry. There is a great deal of it concentrated right around Los Angeles, within a radius of twenty miles. It is simply astounding.

My visits to the different studios were a revelation. I never thought there were so many. Everywhere the same uniform courtesy and attention were accorded me. It was the same way with the press with whom I came in contact.

There is something missing here in Los Angeles. It was a disappointment to learn that the Photoplayers' Club has been disbanded, but we should worry. You can meet most of the players and producers in the leading restaurants in the evenings, or certain evenings, where you can say "howdy," if nothing more, and they are always so glad to meet you.

My visit here will send me back home with renewed energies and interests and make me look forward to coming back again with impatient anticipation. SAM SPEDON.

Marjorie Ellison

MARJORIE ELLISON, who for more than two years has been before the motion picture public in Edison films, came direct to that company after six years' stage experience, embracing the fields of musical comedy, melodrama, drama and vaudeville.

After two seasons in support of David Higgins in "His Last Dollar," in which she played the adventuress, Viola, Miss Ellison hearkened to the call of the camera aud deserted the ranks of the speaking stage.

Marjorie Ellison.

Joining the Edison Company, Marjorie gave to the screen a striking conception of the real "Manicure Girl," in a film of that name. In great contrast to that character she gave an equally artistic performance as the private secretary, the crafty villainess, in the three-reel play, "The Impostor."

Her work as Annie Jones, the express woman in the farce comedy, "The Terrible Trunk," introduced her with the same degree of success in the broad comedies, which was followed up in the part of Nora in "The Cook's Mistake."

Then back to the dramatic, Miss Ellison gave a splendid performance of "Hetty Sharp," in the three-reel picture, "What Could She Do?" Her portrayal of "Laura Leslie" in the "Olive's Opportunities" series is evidence sufficient that this clever young woman can play the adventuress roles with ability. The allurements of Sunny California have attracted Miss Ellison, and she soon will close her engagement with the Edison Company to join the motion picture colony in Los Angeles.

KEYSTONE FILM COMPANY SUIT.

Suit in equity has been brought in the United States District Court by the Keystone Film Company, Longacre Building, against Herman S. Waldman, trading under the name of the Chaplin Film Company, the Leemund Film Company, Incorporated, and A. G. Levi, as an individual, all of 145 West 45th street, alleging infringement of the copyright of the photoplay "Dough and Dynamite," owned and controlled solely by the complaining company. The suit prays for a temporary and perpetual injunction, for the delivery to the complainant of all films and parts of films rented or otherwise disposed of by the defendants in the United States and for an accounting of all profits that may have been realized therefrom. Judge Charles M. Hough made an order requiring the defendants to answer on August 23, and Marshal Thomas D. McCarthy seized all the films, etc., in defendants' possession in their city offices.

TO MAKE RADIUM SCREENS IN AUSTRALIA.

As the result of a deal which was closed a few days ago between J. L. Kempner, of the Radium Gold Fibre Screen, Inc., and Mr. Musgrove, of the Australasian Films, Ltd., Radium Gold Fibre Screens will soon be made in the Antipodes. Mr. Musgrove, for the interests which he represents, has purchased the Radium Gold Fibre sales and manufacturing rights for Australia and the Radium Gold Fibre Screen, Inc., company are at the present time training a man in their principal factory here in the states in order that he may go to Australia and take charge of the manufacture of Radium Gold Fibre Screens there in a large factory which the Australian concern will erect.

The deal between Mr. Musgrove and the Radium concern resulted from the fact that a number of Radium Gold Fibre Screens have been placed in Sidney and other of the large Australian cities and have been so well received by exhibitors in general that there is a growing demand for the product which it is thought best to supply through an Australian manufacturing branch.

"Who Are the Critics?"

Present Day Picture Audiences, and Those of the Past.

By Hugh King Harris.

IT has been some time since I sent in an article to the Moving Picture World, and I am glad to see, in the meantime, that the one real "reel" trade journal is forging right ahead.

Yes, I have written my share of scenarios and kept pace with the game, and the thought has often occurred to me if the directors and producers of today really realize the vast number of competent (and incompetent) critics the films are being shown to these days.

Speaking to you lads and lassies of the past, who used to shoot off two or three one reelers in a week, and blessed Kalem, Essanay, Selig, Edison, Vitagraph and the rest of the bunch for the occasional $25 checks that came our way —your number has increased marvelously, and the selling isn't so easy as it was.

The Cincinnati, Chicago and Oshkosh moving picture schools, and lurid, pipe-dream press work—the country over, have made embryo picture experts by the score—and it is a safe bet that no audience of any size in a moving picture house today does not number at least one to a dozen who have written scripts, or those who are avid readers of the 5c, 10c. and 15c. flood of movie magazines with their "expert" articles on all that is in, out and behind the screen business.

Oh, yes, they are a bunch of critics all right. Every detail on the screen is analyzed and dissected with avidity. Sitting in the midst of a "jitney" bunch at a corner theater the other night I saw a fat woman, of sweet forty, mopping her head with a honeysuckle scented handkerchief—she gazes at the screen, and clutching her angular companion by the arm gasps, "Oh, Gawd—just look at that Blanche Sweet —gee, ain't she getting wrinkled," and Blanche never knew how her clever pucker of distress was taken by at least one "critic."

Listen to the general talk that flies back and forth, any night—in any theater—for instance, a maid of sixteen to her father, a big hulk of a chap. "Say, Dad, that's just like Imogene in my 'Stars of Twilght'—I just know they stole my ideas, and look at that awful gown, Oh, my."

Again: "They pulled that fade-away twice too long—bet the director was piped."

Or listen to this one: "We don't pay for leaders—good way to cheat us—saves money on actors' time all right."

"I saw her in ——— and she was a lot better, but they do say she has another director, and he wants to push ——— ahead instead of this one. Hope she is saving her money, poor thing."

"Say, May, they pad these long reelers like the deuce, don't they? Give me the good old one reel for action."

"See that dirty table cloth, and in such a swell dining room—mighty poor attention to details."

And thus it goes—and some of the criticisms are sincerely good and honest. The director of today must realize this fact, and remember that the production of today is being reviewed, not only by those who desire to be amused, but those who take the pictures in the most serious manner in the world. But this is as it should be—for it all speaks for photo-play advancement.

NEW PATHE OFFICES OPENED.

The Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces the opening of new offices as follows:

Detroit, Mich., 40 E. Larned street, with L. E. Francolni as manager.

Indianapolis, Ind., 27 Willoughby Building, with Jay G. Lytle as manager.

A new office is being opened in Des Moines, Iowa, Cohen Block Building, with L. A. Sheridan as manager.

The Portland office will be re-established as an independent branch office with Mr. Wessling as manager, and W. W. Kofeldt as cashier.

F. C. Quimby, manager of the Pathe Denver office, is now engaged in establishing an independent branch office in Salt Lake City, and on completion of his work there will take the managership of the Seattle office. He will be succeeded in Denver by Harry L. Knappen, who has been a Pathe solicitor in the San Francisco territory.

ARTHUR MacHUE WITH MOSS.

Arthur MacHue, well-known press agent, until recently with the United Booking Office, has become the publicity man for the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation. He says that the new company's first release will be "The Salamander."

A Closeup of Beatriz Michelena

By Margaret I. MacDonald.

AFTER the footlights of the theater have left the stage, the bare old place that it always has been without its people, or the great patch of meaningless white has forgotten its silent interpreters, there is a peculiar satisfaction in dissecting the personalities of the players, in discovering them apart from their art.

Beatriz Michelena, in picture lore the star of "Salomy Jane," "Mignon" and, lastly, the screen interpreter of Edward Sheldon's admirable feminine type, "Salvation Nell," was breakfasting rather late, and looking particularly vivacious after what must have been a good night's rest; for she looked as happy as the poppies of her native California, emitting the sunshine of the skies under which she was reared, when I happened upon her at her hotel.

Beatriz Michelena.

There were no stiff preliminaries, no getting acquainted; just a friendly chat as is usual between women who feel the sisterhood of their kind. What I discovered was this, that Beatriz Michelena, apart from her art, is a sweet, simple-mannered woman; that her soul is in her music, and that her art, which combines music with the drama, is so developed that its constituents are capable of standing alone.

Beatriz Michelena is the daughter of the well-known tenor, Fernando Michelena, under whose tuition her musical talent has been developed. From her home in San Francisco she has migrated since her connection with the California Motion Picture Company to San Rafael so as to be nearer her work. Here she is happy, principally because she can do as she pleases. She plays with her pets, rides her horses, or romps in the sunshine with only her feet touching earth, and grows healthier each day in body and soul.

At the present time the little prima donna best known to the public in Shubert and Savage musical productions is preparing a grand opera repertoire, and is only waiting for the bomb throwing of Europe to cease to accompany her father thither for further study, preparatory to again appearing on the legitimate stage.

It is not because she does not love her work in the pictures that she contemplates leaving the screen, but because she loves her music more. "The pictures are wonderful," says she, "and the things that you just talk about on the stage you actually see in the pictures—all the little incidents that lead up to the big situations."

Her one regret with regard to playing the role of "Salvation Nell" seems to be that she was unable to discuss the character with Mr. Sheldon previous to placing on it her own conception of the part.

"I enjoy every moment I spend working in the pictures," she continued. "When I see myself on the screen I can hardly believe that it is me. It seems so uncanny. In fact, if I could really feel that it was me I would be nicer to myself."

Just why this last remark, I do not know; but it probably was invoked by sympathy for the character on the screen. And, furthermore, we who love our New York beyond all things earthly may not be able to understand why this pretty little prima donna refuses most emphatically to believe in it as an enjoyable place to live in for all time. According to her, "It is wonderful—too wonderful. All you see of the sky is up through the skyscrapers, and there are so many wonderful things, that it's confusing.

And so we must leave one of the most charming of the American women of the stage. And it will not be long before she will be again in her beloved California.

Anderson Finds Market Good

Special Representative of Lasky and Famous Players Returns With Favorable Report of Conditions in Great Britain.

CARL ANDERSON, business manager for Paramount, reached New York on August 22, after a six weeks' trip to Great Britain as a special representative of the Famous Players and Lasky companies. He came uncomfortably close to being among the killed or wounded when the Germans visited Newcastle in Zeppelins, and the ocean voyages, even on the comparatively safe American liners, St. Louis and Philadelphia, were not quieting to the nerves. He is glad to be back without having given the United States government cause for a break with Germany and is prepared to talk either war or pictures, or the two combined.

Carl Anderson.

"Paramount loaned me to Lasky and the Famous Players," said Mr. Anderson, "that I might study the situation as it exists in Europe today and if possible suggest plans for future action. I visited England, Scotland and Wales and talked with our representatives in Russia, France, Italy and Australia. They met me in London and our Russian representative urged me to visit him in Petrograd, but under the circumstances thought it wise to take his word about the condition of the picture business in his territory.

"I may say with certainty that the motion picture industry is the most prosperous of the amusement ventures in Great Britain at the present time. I may also state that the finest theaters in Great Britain are located in Scotland, and that even in the best houses the managers have little understanding of the delicate art of arranging a program. They run pictures in a haphazard fashion with little thought about the arrangement of subjects and the result, of course, is an entertainment with little balance.

"In London and other large cities I talked to many exhibitors in an effort to comprehend their viewpoint and if possible to impress them with the good features in American methods of picture presentation. The power of precedent is evident even in the arrangement of their theaters. Because it has always been the custom to construct houses with pits, the venerable pit continues to be a part of photoplay theaters, although it is of no earthly use. Then, value of the seats is judged by stage standards and it is not exceptional to find the highest prices being asked for the least advantageous chairs from which to view the screen. The the designers of the English theaters make the mistake of putting the orchestra on a level with the orchestra seats, so that the placing of the screen at a considerable elevation becomes necessary. People occupying the front stalls are forced to look upwards to follow the picture."

Mr. Anderson declares that a fortune is awaiting the man who erects a modern theater and conducts it on the plans followed by the more progressive of American exhibitors. Neither in England, nor Scotland has there been any real effort to attract discriminating audiences, such as are being catered to in this country, yet there is nothing, save the lack of suitable, clean houses to prevent the development of this new class of patrons.

"I found the exhibitors always ready to consider suggestions," continued Mr. Anderson, "but there is much in the arrangement and management of a theater that cannot be explained satisfactorily. We want them to see our theaters for themselves and draw their own conclusions. With this end in view, I will co-operate with J. D. Walker, who handles the Lasky and Famous Players exchanges in Great Britain, in bringing a party of fifteen exhibitors to America next January. They will represent about 200 theaters scattered over all parts of Great Britain."

In speaking of the possibilities for developing a world market, open to American manufacturers with aggressive branch offices in London, Mr. Anderson said that few seemed to realize how completely London is the key to the Orient. He remarked that the notion that British shipping has been seriously interfered with by the war is without foundation. Approximately 1,600 vessels are leaving and entering English ports every week and they are carrying merchandise to every far-away corner of the universe. Mr. Anderson said that he was surprised to learn that Paramount pictures were being presented at Penang in the Straits Settlements at two dollar prices. "This," he observed, "is merely a sample of the almost unheard of places in which a steady market may be cultivated." Through its English picture publication, "The Review," and through a large force of representatives, the Paramount Corporation is constantly adding to the outlet for its product.

Mr. Anderson hinted at one result of the war that may become a matter of vital concern to Germans who are producing pictures in this country. There is, it seems, a steadily growing movement to prevent films made by Germans entering England. Whether or not the agitation brings governmental action remains to be seen.

Clara Whipple

MISS CLARA WHIPPLE, the new little leading lady for the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, has golden hair, the color of sunshine, and the fine, well-bred features that mark the typical southern beauty. If you could not tell by her charming manner, that she were a southern girl, born and bred, you could tell it by the soft voice, and the adorable methods by which she contrives to have her own way—just as she contrived to get on the stage and into the pictures against the will of a most obstinate father, who wanted her to stay at home and be his little girl.

Clara Whipple.

And Clara Whipple is a southerner. She was born in St. Louis. Her education was begun in a convent in Ohio, and was then continued at Lady Cliff on the Hudson, from where she was sent to Germany, to a beautiful convent, Nonnenworth, on an island in the Rhine. Afterwards she went to Switzerland to learn French, and finished her education at the Woman's College at Trier in Germany. That was four years ago. When she arrived home with her parents at Pittsburg, she decided she wanted to be either a nurse or an actress. Her father considered acting the lesser of two evils, but he wanted her to do neither, and always found it convenient to come down with an attack of heart trouble every time she suggested doing either. But finally he consented, and gave her enough money to carry her through three weeks. She secured a letter to John Craig in Boston, but he laughed at her and told her to come back the next year when she had had experience. She did manage to become an understudy in another company for three months, but that fell through and she returned to New York. Three months in New York had not given her what she wanted, so she went home, and, by lucky chance, secured a position in the Davis stock company in Pittsburg, where she remained until she went with the rival players of that city.

But she could not give up her ambition to play in New York. She came again the next fall, and was fortunate enough to secure a part with Henry Miller in "The Dragon's Claw." It did not play long, but it gave her an opportunity to go to Canada as the only leading motion picture actress in the Dominion. She was with the Conness-Till people at Toronto for a year.

When she came to New York this summer, she was given an opportunity by Isidor Bernstein to play in "Life's Crucible," which was then about to be produced for the Equitable, to be released through the World Film.

World Film Division Managers

World Film Division Managers Meet

Called to New York to Study Plans for Marketing New Equitable Product.

FOR three days during the week of August 16 the division managers of the World Film Corporation were in executive session, in New York City, for the purpose of having placed before them a general sales campaign for the new Equitable program, which World Film will put out beginning September 20, and a general course of instructions on the sales development work and the territorial handling for that company.

The five division managers in attendance were: George J. Schaefer, Eastern Division Manager, New York; Denham Palmer, East Central Division Manager, Cleveland; W. W. Drum, West Central Division Manager, Chicago; W. E. Knotts, Western Division Manager, San Francisco, and Jos. E. Klein, Southern Division Manager, New Orleans.

The first three days and most of the first three nights were spent with the assistant general manager, Harry C. Drum, in reviewing and outlining in great detail the general sales development methods and business systems which he has inaugurated.

Tuesday night, Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, and vice-president and advisory director of the Equitable Film Corporation, held a reception to the division manager, at which time he, with A. Spiegel, president of the Equitable Film Corporation, and Milton Work, chairman of the executive board of the World Film Corporation, reviewed the work that had been acomplished and went over in detail the plans outlined.

Wednesday morning was consumed in a general outline of the Equitable sales campaign as outlined by the assistant general manager, the party being joined by Felix Feist, secretary and general manager of the Equitable Film Corporation.

Wednesday afternoon was entirely devoted to the consideration of the departmental details of the Home Office and a reviewal of the auditing, purchasing, advertising and film departments, as they relate to the branches.

The Division Managers departed for their respective territories Wednesday night and are now busy inaugurating in their branches the various methods and systems which were outlined at this meeting, as well as pushing to rapid completion the sales campaign for the Equitable.

"THE FIXER," NEW TITLE FOR "HELLO BILL."

"The Fixer" is the title of the first Kleine comedy featuring Bickel and Watson. This was selected to take the place of "Hello Bill," the original title of Willis M. Goodhue's famous stage farce. "The Fixer" is scheduled for release through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service September 15.

Yancsi Dolly in Kalem Feature.

MISS YANCSI DOLLY, one of the famous Dolly sisters, has signed a contract to appear in "The Call of the Dance," one of Kalem's four-act "Broadway Favorites" features. Miss Dolly is one of Broadway's bright particular idols and a member of Fox and Dolly, considered among the most popular of vaudeville's headline acts. As a member of this team, Miss Dolly's salary is of substantial proportions.

Miss Dolly has long been considered one of the most graceful dancers in the country. Her piquant grace and beauty won for her instant favor when she made her debut at the Brighton Beach Music Hall some years ago. One of her crowning achievements was her performance at Cornelius Vanderbilt's Newport home several years ago. Together with her sister, the actress who is to appear in the Kalem "Broadway Favorites" production was one of the features of "The Merry Countess," a musical comedy which had just opened at the Casino theater. Mr. Vanderbilt, who attended the opening performance, was enchanted by the Dollys' beauty and grace and determined to engage the girls to present their dances at the ball he was about to give.

Yancsi Dolly.

So great was the success scored by Miss Yancsi and her sister, that the management declined to allow them to leave the show even for one performance. Nor was the famous financier able to induce them to alter their decision. A compromise was finally effected by which the entire company was transported to Newport for a special performance.

In "The Call of the Dance," Miss Dolly enacts the role of an East Side girl whose inborn talent for dancing raises her out of the slums and gives her a place among the foremost artistes of the stage. Before she wins success, however, the girl's beauty comes within an ace of causing her destruction. Only the pluck and determination exhibited by a young attache of the district attorney's office saves her from the clutches of the head of the vice ring. "The Call of the Dance" will be released Monday, September 20.

Programs for the Week at the New York Motion Picture Houses.

Vitagraph Theater Bill.

"MORTMAIN" is the title of the leading photoplay at the Vitagraph theater. It is a picturization of Arthur C. Train's story, in which Robert Edeson makes his initial appearance under the Vitagraph banner. The plot is an unusual one and contains a number of situations of absorbing interest. Mortmain, a gentleman of leisure and a student of modern surgery, is interested in a case of limb grafting, carried to a successful completion by his friend, Dr. Crisp. Later in the play, his own hand is badly injured, and the doctor informs him that he must lose it or accept the alternative of having another man's hand grafted upon the stump. The working out of this theme leads to several novel scenes of an intensely dramatic nature. Mr. Edeson gives a fine performance of the title role, and receives worthy support from the other members of the cast.

An interesting feature of the entertainment is the first of a new series of "Sonny Jim" comedies by Elaine Sterne, featuring Bobby Connelly. "Sonny Jim and the Amusement Company, Ltd.," is the picture for the week, and tells how the irrepressible Sonny ran a circus in opposition to a Sunday School Picnic. "Willie Stayed Single," the comical adventures of a tramp, who preferred remaining a bachelor rather than be bossed, and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "The Professional Diner," the amusing story of a young Englishman who acts as guest No. 14 at hotel dinners, fill out the balance of the program.

Hazel Dawn at the Strand.

Hazel Dawn in "The Heart of Jennifer," a photodrama by Edith Bernard Delano, is the star attraction this week at the Strand theater. Miss Dawn's good looks and excellent acting are displayed to advantage in the picture. One of the strongest incidents in the story is the scene in which Jennifer, prompted by an unusual degree of love for her husband, accepts the guilt of his sister's crime in order that he may not know of the other's disgrace. From this point until the culmination of the plot, Jennifer becomes the object of the suspicions and even the hatred of her husband. In the end, in spite of Jennifer's efforts to keep her husband in the dark, the real situation comes to his knowledge. Miss Dawn is supported by a carefully chosen cast including James Kirkwood, Irene Howley and Russell Bassett.

Some new colored scenic and scientific studies, brought to this country by the Pharos Film Company, are also shown on the screen. The Topical Review contains the latest American and European news pictures. A new comedy and a short dramatic subject complete the screen part of the entertainment. Katherine Irving, soprano, and Vernon Dalhart, tenor, are both newcomers to the Strand and are heard in operatic arias.

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty.

"The Birth of a Nation" is in the seventh month of its run at the Liberty theater. With its 18,000 people and 3,000 horses moving through a drama that links romance with the vital periods of American history in a series of thrilling scenes to the number of over 5,000, it is easy to estimate the reasons for the wonderful success the work has achieved. The indications are that it will remain at the Liberty for the longest run in the history of the New York stage.

George Fawcett at the Broadway.

"The Majesty of the Law," a well written photoplay with scenes laid in Virginia and played by a capable cast headed by George Fawcett, is pleasing the audiences this week at the Broadway theater. Mr. Fawcett, who has a firmly established reputation for powerful character acting, finds many opportunities for satisfactory work in this play. He is supported by Myrtle Stedman, Jane Wolfe, John Oaker, and Charles Ruggles. South American Travel Pictures, Broadway Animated News and one-reel comedies round out the program.

KLEINE MAKES "THE SENTIMENTAL LADY."

"The Sentimental Lady," one of Owen Davis' delightful stories, will be Miss Irene Fenwick's next feature following her recently completed "The Green Cloak." Miss Fenwick and a cast of Broadway players are now at Lake Saranac where many of the out-of-door scenes are being made. "The Sentimental Lady" is an unusually charming story. It is a tale of big business, containing many dramatic scenes interspersed with much of summer life at the fashionable lake resorts.

Paramount Convention in Chicago

President Hodkinson Will Meet the Company's Representatives at the LaSalle Hotel.

ACCOMPANIED by the executive staff of the New York office and many representatives located in the East, W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, will journey in two private cars, said to be the first ever attached to the Twentieth Century Limited, to Chicago, where a convention of Paramount representatives will be held. Mr. Hodkinson will leave New York on Wednesday, September 1. With him will be Raymond Pawley, Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldfish, A. Weinberg, B. P. Schulberg, Carl H. Pierce, Wm. L. Sherry, W. F. Seymour, H. E. Spaulding, Frank D. Sniffen, George R. Meeker, John C. Flinn and Tarleton Winchester who will be joined by Hiram Abrams of the Famous Players Film Company of New England, W. E. Smith of the Famous Players Exchange, Philadelphia; George Mann of the Famous Players Exchange, Washington, and others. From the South will come representatives of the Southern Paramount Pictures Company, in Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas, of which C. E. Tandy is the head. From Los Angeles, Seattle and San Francisco will come the Progressive Motion Picture Company's men. The Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake City and Denver, Colo.; the Famous Players Star Feature Film Company of Minneapolis, the Kansas City Feature Film Company, Kansas City, and the Casino Feature Film Company of Detroit will all meet the Eastern contingent at the LaSalle.

It is expected that the meeting will last about three days. Matters affecting the distribution and marketing of Paramount productions will be discussed.

Little Jerry

"LITTLE JERRY," perhaps one of the most versatile of the "little people" there is, is working with Jerold Hevener, the Wizard Motion Pictures Corporation director, in a picture entitled "The New Butler," which will be released through the World Film Corporation. "Little Jerry" will play the role of the butler.

"Little Jerry," although he is only a little over two feet tall, is possessed of a marvelous voice, and he has sung both at the Hippodrome (New York) and in large auditoriums with a brass band. While he is most fond of the operas and classical songs, he is a great lover of ragtime, too. He says that he does not care what it is he is singing, just so he can make his audience respond.

Jerry was born in Russia, and he reads and speaks Russian, French and German. Singing and dancing are merely his avocations. He is a real-fledged architect, being a graduate of an architectural school. At present he is drawing plans for a laboratory for a motion picture company.

"Little Jerry" will not give his full name because he has a brother who sings in grand opera and he does not want the public to know who he really is until he, too, has gotten to the top, as he says.

Jerold Hevener (Little Jerry).

"The New Butler" will be finished this week. Mr. Hevener has just completed a picture in which Joe Schrode played the role of a stage -?- and Pearl Shepard the leading part.

The Motion Picture in Russia

Introduced Fifteen Years Ago, Motion Pictures Now a Considerable Industry—American Pictures Popular.

Written especially for the Moving Picture World by Oscar M. Kartoschinsky.

LIKE many other branches of culture and progress the Kinematograph made its appearance in Russia much later than in other parts of the globe. About fifteen years ago, when the moving picture played a vital part in all other civilized countries and was a recognized institution, it was only known in Russia by hearsay that somewhere there existed a wonder called the kinematograph. The Russian merchant during his travels abroad discovered it and transplanted it on Russian soil.

The first moving picture theaters appeared in the Russian capitals, Petrograd and Moscow, about fourteen years ago, and in a few of the other large cities such as Warsaw, Odessa and Kiev. These original theaters not only presented foreign films, but were saturated with a foreign atmosphere, the entire machinery of the stage and theater proper being imported from abroad, Pathe Freres (Paris) being the most important factor and meeting with enormous success, opened a branch in Petrograd (St. Petersburg), and their business is said to have increased tenfold within a year. This induced the French firm of Gaumont and later Cines of Rome to follow suit.

Moving picture theaters became more and more popular and fashionable throughout Russia. At first they were maintained on a modest basis, in cheap and uninviting quarters. Gradually they became larger and more costly, until now they out-rival the legitimate theater in size and splendor and promise to become worthy monuments of art. At the same time the price of admission has increased from ten and fifteen cents to a dollar and over. After the larger cities, theaters were opened in the smaller ones, until at present there is hardly a town or village where there is not at least one motion picture theater. By the way, it should be noted that some Russian villages have a population of from thirty to fifty thousand.

Until very recently all the films were imported from abroad and Russian initiative in film producing was lacking. The unfavorable attitude of the Russian press was mainly responsible for this. The kinematograph was viewed at first by dramatic critics and select audiences as a cheap, vulgar, inartistic institution, in vogue merely to amuse the masses. For a long time the newspapers maintained this skeptical attitude toward the kinematograph and indulged in considerable sarcasm and ridicule at the expense of the new art. But even the press and those critics who were imbued with the ideas of Tolstoi and Dostojewsky were finally obliged to yield to public opinion and recognize the possibilities of the motion picture.

The kinematograph rapidly began to occupy a prominent place in Russia; all sorts of enterprises became associated with it and what seemed only a dream a short time ago became an active reality. In Russia, first in Moscow and then in Petrograd, they began the manufacture of films. At first, however, they imported the entire producing equipment from abroad, not only the machinery, but also the operators, stage managers and even actors. In the beginning this venture did not meet with success, chiefly through lack of experience. Scenarios were penned by the hundreds by prominent writers, but were lacking in form and did not even meet with the elementary requirements. They were too long, lacked action and went into the psychology of things to an extent which could not be portrayed on the screen. This accounts for the fact that foreign productions met with far greater approval by the audiences than the early attempts of the Russian film manufacturer. Such firms as Pathe, Gaumont and Cines began to reproduce Russian life and customs on the screen from photos taken in Russia. Not only this, but prominent Russian actors, and Russia is full of them, were dissatisfied with the home productions and refused to pose in them, which they did with pleasure for the imported brands. Lately Russian actors were mainly engaged by the Germans, who gradually were forcing the French out of the field. The Scandinavians, too, met with considerable success.

Notwithstanding this, the Russian film manufacturers were also making some headway. As in other productive enterprises, however, foreigners monopolized this one and succeeded in pushing themselves to the front. Two Germans, Messrs. Timan and Reinhardt, the first as representative of the Cines Film Co. and the other of the French firm of Gaumont, made their appearance in Russia. Realizing the wonderful possibilities, they founded a factory in Moscow. They began with comparatively small capital and in three years made hundreds of thousands of dollars' profit and have a large factory. Chanshonkoff & Co., a Moscow firm previously engaged in the film exchange business, was the next to follow their example and commenced the production of Russian films. This company has been in existence only four years, and last year handled over three million dollars' worth of films of their own manufacture. Russian writers have also mastered the art of scenario writing and Russian directors now reproduce them very accurately. Adaptation from well-known Russian novelists such as Tolstoi and Turgeneff, portrayals of want and misery, prison life and the underworld have met with tremendous success.

Russia now has at least ten film factories and this number is sure to increase yearly. This, however, does not signify that the field is closed to foreign films. Not at all, the public is very much interested in foreign-made brands. Such American films as the Vitagraph, Lubin and Kalem appear on the screen in many of the Russian theaters and the American cowboy is as much a hero in Russia as he is in his own country. I am convinced that the American film has a wonderful opportunity in Russia. For instance, such productions as Griffith's in the matter of grouping would surely succeed. Charlie Chaplin's and similar comedies would also be welcome, as humorous sketches are greatly favored by the Russian people. Proof of this is found in the fact that the French comedian Max Linder in Pathe films was an unprecedented success with the Russian picture theater audiences.

Frank McGlynn

STEALING the thunder of the jokesmith, we might say that Frank McGlynn makes so real a screen criminal because he has been a lawyer. But, giving even the—the actor his due, it must be said that this thoroughly good "bad" actor is such because he brings a well educated mind, broad experience and a varied life to his work. For he's been professional man, actor, director, producer and dramatist—quite a list to plead guilty to.

Like many an actor, Mr. McGlynn hails from old San Francisco, where he studied law and practised for two years. He liked to study law but not to practise, and it's small wonder that the man who "always wanted to be an actor" should soon be seen in George Lederer's comic opera, "The Gold Bug," and then in "Jack and the Beanstalk."

Frank McGlynn.

Mr. McGlynn spent three years in stock, first with Proctor and then Keith. A successful venture was his own company, which played the summer season in comedies in Rochester, N. Y., when he left for San Francisco, again to stay four more years in stock, playing every kind of a character, mostly heavies and character, except juvenile. With this rich experience he went with Edison, where he directed for over a year.

Mr. McGlynn took the White Sox ballplayers, sixty-seven in the company, around the world in their famous tour, directing the taking of motion pictures in their games and journeyings in the different countries, getting the only such picture of King George at a baseball game.

Mr. McGlynn prefers dramatic and emotional roles and never hesitates to depict the criminal in all his unlovableness and reality. To him true depiction of whatever the type is valued more than popularity earned by always shining forth in likable characters. But that he is an actor of skill is shown in presenting such widely ranging characters as the criminal, and the kindly old grandfather in "In the Shadow of Death" and Abraham Lincoln in "The Life of Abraham Lincoln." Other Edison films—a few of his—are "The Man in the Dark," the westerner in "The Everlasting Triangle," Jim in "Jim's Vindication," the burglar in "Olive and the Burglar," Jude in "Joyce of the North Woods," and the doctor in "The Voice of Conscience."

New American Brand

Van Loan's Saturday Evening Post Series Will Be Pictured as "Clippers."

S. S. HUTCHINSON, president of American Film Company, Inc., announces a new feature in the way of American Film productions. A series of stories by Charles E. Van Loan, which ran for many weeks in the Saturday Evening Post under the title of "Buck Parvin in the Movies," will be filmed and released as American productions.

This new brand will be designated by the name "Clipper." President Hutchinson, as yet, is not certain whether this big feature will be presented in two or three reels. It is probable, however, that the first subject to be presented will be in three reels. The title of the first release will be "Man Afraid of His Wardrobe." The release date has not as yet been decided pending the early publication in book form, of the complete series, by George Durand & Company.

Anna Little, who is widely known as a motion picture actress, will play feminine leads in the new series of productions. Miss Little is known especially for her agility and equestrian ability. Grace and beauty are among her inherent possessions. She will take her place among the ranks of American beauties, such as May Allison, Lottie Pickford, Charlotte Burton, Winifred Greenwood, Vivian Rich, Beatrice Van, Neva Gerber and the host of others.

Art Acord, for years has been known as the champion cowboy of the world and who as motion picture actor, actually inspired Charles Van Loan to write his famous stories, has been secured by President Hutchinson to play the leading masculine roles in Clipper films.

Lawrence Ross Peyton, well known as a film actor, has signed a contract with the American to take the part of Montague, a western film director made famous by Van Loan's virile pen.

Laughable foibles of the pictures will be shown to the public in these new films. Virtually the whole world will be taken in the movie man's confidence. There will be good comedy, and plenty of it, for Van Loan's humor is the kind that lends itself well to the screen.

The members of the company are being selected by President Hutchinson and Mr. Van Loan together. Both question all candidates and decide together as to the aspirants' desirability.

Tobias Returns to Mutual

FOURTEEN bookings on "The Diamond from the Sky," the American's picturized novel, is the record for the week made by Maurice F. Tobias, who has just returned to the managership of the Mutual Film Corporation's Western Film Branch, formerly known as "The Western Exchange," with offices in New York. Mr. Tobias has had a highly interesting career, and an eventful one. He was born in New York in 1876 and was reared in Milwaukee, Wis. He attended the University of Wisconsin. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American war he enlisted and served until peace was declared. Returning to the states he went into the building trade and superintended the construction of several large structures. In 1907 he entered the employ of the William Fox enterprises. Next he went to George Kleine, going thence to the Actograph Branch of the General Film Company. When J. C. Graham, now assistant to the president of the Mutual, took charge of the Western Film Exchange, Mr. Tobias was engaged to cover the upstate territory, and in view of his record was given the task of opening the Boston office of the Mutual Film Corporation. As a reward for his efforts there he was made manager of the Western Film Exchange, remaining there almost two years. Then he became district manager of Warner's Features, Inc., and W. L. Sherry, knowing Mr. Tobias as a business getter, induced him to exploit "Famous Players" in New York state.

Now he is back on the job. All the exhibitors know him as "Toby" and a good friend.

Mrs. Rhinehart Admires Pictures

I AM firmly of the conviction that the film as a medium of expression has not only come to stay but that it is going to develop to one of the highest forms of expression we have. It is a great thing to be able to visualize an idea. I have seen things done with the motion picture camera and thrown on the screen that have left me breathless for their sheer beauty. It is a new art and a great one. I only wish I could sit down and write fully how I feel about it."

Mary Roberts Rhinehart.

The above opinion on the motion pictures was written recently to the Selig Polyscope Company by Mary Roberts Rhinehart, the novelist. Her wonderful story, "The Circular Staircase," is soon to be released by the Selig Company as a Red Seal Play. Mrs. Rhinehart recently returned from Europe where she was the only woman war correspondent to get to the front with the Allies.

In her recent letter to the Selig Company Mrs. Rhinehart says: "'The Circular Staircase' was so easy to write that it is difficult for me to remember how or why I did it. My methods of literary work are about as regular and interesting to hear about as the methods of a wagon horse. I get up in the morning and go to work. That is about all there is to it. I have a secretary, of course, and a daily mail that almost requires an extra carrier to bring it. I live in a country house and work in a study that looks out over a flower garden. The front of the house faces out over the Ohio river." Mrs. Rhinehart was recently recalled to her home, Sewickley, Pa., by the serious illness of her husband.

MARY PICKFORD ASBURY'S GUEST.

Mary Pickford, the most popular motion picture star in the world, whose amazing photographic personality has caused her to be called "the spirit of the screen," has formally accepted the invitation of Mayor Clarence E. F. Hetrick, of Asbury Park, to be the city's guest of honor during a Silver Jubilee Baby Parade held August 23-25. The request for Miss Pickford's presence at this interesting occasion was made in response to a demand of the public of Asbury Park, who had been asked to state their preference of the city's guest of honor by individual ballot. This is probably the first time that a motion picture star has ever been extended such a signal honor by the officials of a city, and in all the twenty-five years during which the City of Asbury Park has annually celebrated a baby parade, Miss Pickford is the first actress to be tendered this preference.

KODAK COMPANY LOSES CASE.

In the action brought against the Eastman Kodak Company of Rochester, N. Y., by the government under the Sherman Anti-trust Law, Judge John R. Hazel, sitting in the United States District Court at Buffalo, N. Y., has handed down his decision to the effect that the Eastman Company is operating in restraint of trade and must dissolve. Judge Hazel held that contracts between the defendant and the Motion Picture Patents Company were not violations of the law. The defendant corporation has been given sixty days in which to present a plan for the abrogation of the illegal monopoly of which it stands convicted by the court. An appeal from the decision may be taken.

"The Silent Voice"

Quality-Metro Production of Interesting Play—Francis X. Bushman Gives Impressive Performance.

WHEN shown to an invited audience at the Broadway Theter "The Silent Voice," a Quality-Metro picture starring Francis X. Bushman, ran a full seven reels. It is probable, however, that before release at least one reel will be eliminated and the story quickened and bettered in consequence. But even as it stands the adaptation of Jules Eckert Goodman's drama makes a picture of more than ordinary significance. It possesses so many admirable qualities that judicious editing will be repaid by satisfying results not possible of attainment in a superficial story. As a stage play "The Silent Voice" interested thoughtful people; on the screen it will be no less effective when some unnecessary scenes have been discarded.

In the role of Franklyn Starr, the musician afflicted with deafness, Mr. Bushman does much with a character of great possibilities. He is called upon to convey many emotional moods and to make convincing sharp transitions in feeling. We first meet him as a contented, God-fearing man, living happily with his mother. She dies, he loses his hearing and all the natural kindness of his nature is swept away in morbid ravings against the injustice of fate. From this mood he is lifted by a young woman who becomes his wife, only to sink again into blacker cynicism when he believes her love has gone to another man.

This prepares the way for the most memorable passages of the picture—Starr, always accompanied by his faithful servant, Spring, philosophizing on the rottenness of the world. He picks a rose to pieces and shows how a worm is eating out the heart. He stands on the veranda of his apartment from which the nearby park looks fair and clean, and then, studying the same scene through field glasses, sees that the green trees shelter human derelicts, poverty, misery and crime.

But Starr, because of deafness, has learned lip reading, and watching the people through the glasses that he may learn what they are talking about, fascinates him. God does not answer the prayers of the consumptive youth whose life depends upon his going to a different climate, so it suits the skeptic's fancy to supply the needed money. He becomes "the man who for a moment played God." In helping others his own nature undergoes another transformation, eventually his hearing is restored and his wife returned to him.

These incidents are sincerely presented with several ingenious bits of business to reinforce their meaning. There is a laudable attempt to get below the surface of things and reach some of the facts of life. Marguerite Snow makes an expressive Marjorie and Frank Bacon gives a flawless characterization of Starr's worshipful servant. Director William Bowman found settings at once artistic and appropriate for an admirable production of a worth while play.

"Under Oath"

A Kalem "Mystery of the Grand Hotel" in Which the Element of Suspense Is Large.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE latest of Kalem's "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel," a two-part picture called "Under Oath," makes tense melodrama in which a first rate plot has been skillfully treated by the author, Hamilton Smith, and by James W. Horne, the producer. Here, as in so many pictures of merit, success is primarily due to the cleverness displayed in the presentation of the story. One's interest is immediately caught by a dramatic scene showing a young woman at a meeting of a foreign secret society where she is placed under oath to fulfill a dangerous mission. Enough is told to explain the action and enough is withheld to maintain the element of mystery.

Much of the first reel transpires on shipboard, while Celeste is bound for the United States. And again the action advances the story without disclosing too much. We know that Fabulo, the foreign agent confined to his stateroom because of illness, is the man sought by Celeste and realize that her love affair with her fellow passenger, a young American, is destined to complicate matters; but interest is merely excited, not gratified by the incidents of the voyage. This is a hotel mystery and in a hotel it is solved, after a tell-tale ring, picked up by the American voyager, has misled Celeste and her confederate, a barber who dabbles in affairs of state. The story grips and when a melodrama does that it serves its purpose

A word should be said for the illusion of the scenes on shipboard. The motion of a vessel tossed on the waves is realistic enough to cause a sympathetic understanding of the plight of the foreign agent lying ill in his cabin. Thomas Lingham gives a capital portrayal of the agent in moments of uneasiness. The lobby of the hotel in which Celeste and her American lover meet, is a magnificent affair, possessing the look of genuineness that characterizes all of the settings, even the Max Figman Plays the Hero in Real Life.

Max Figman, who is having the time of his life playing "Blackie Daw" in the Wharton production of Pathe's "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford," has played many hero parts upon the stage, but never had the opportunity to play the hero in real life until Sunday, Aug. 15. He was sitting on the veranda of the Glenwood Hotel enjoying an after-dinner smoke, when he heard cries for help from the lake in front of the hotel. It was dark, but Mr. Figman and another man plunged into the water and, swimming out, found a sinking rowboat with two young women hanging to it. The two men helped the girls to shore just in time, as the boat soon sank.

"The Cotton King"

With George Nash in the Title Role, The World Film Corporation Makes Five-Part Adaptation of Sutton Vane's Play.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

CONSIDERED individually, many of the scenes in Oscar Eagle's production of "The Cotton King" are dramatic, interesting and at times instructive; but collectively they do not always present a clear story. The plot of Sutton Vane's drama, as adapted for photoplay use, is complicated, many characters are introduced and the rapidity of the melodramatic action is liable to cause confusion in the mind of the spectator. Careful re-editing with a view to making the story more direct in its progress would do much toward increasing the effectiveness of the good points in this picture.

Right at the opening we have some spectacular scenes of a panic on the cotton exchange, staged with the utmost care and acted with spirit by George Nash and the crowd of supers representing brokers in the excitement of a panic. This part of the production could not well be improved upon, nor could that which shows with no little detail the process of handling cotton in a southern mill. The action of the plot is so woven into these scenes that they do not impede the progress of the drama. There is likely to be confusion, however, in following the machinations of Richard Stockley, the manager of the mills and the very melodramatic villain, who breaks hearts and dissipates fortunes with equal facility.

If an audience follows the financial thread of the story it will understand how John Osborne comes to be called "The Cotton King," how he acquires the Ashton Cotton Mills and later is almost ruined by the treachery of Stockley. Then there is the emotional phase of the action which follows the development of Osborne's love affair with Hetty Drayson, and reveals the heartless behavior of Stockley, who betrays a pretty little mill girl and tries to shoulder the blame on his enemy. There is excitement and action galore in scenes such as those presenting a mob on the verge of lynching Osborne and the eventual discomfiture of his accuser. Mr. Nash at all times gives a strong interpretation of the Cotton King and is ably supported by Julia Hay, Eric Mayne, Fred Truesdell and Julia Stuart.

"The Galloper"

The Farce Comedy by Richard Harding Davis Well Presented in Five-Part Pathe Film, First of Gold Rooster Plays.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

NO FINER distinction could be drawn between genuine farce comedy, and the slapstick stuff that is too frequently dignified by the epithet, than is exhibited in "The Galloper," the first of the Gold Rooster Plays. And with one regretable exception there has been no attempt on the part of the director to improve on the business of the play as suggested or outlined by Davis.

Clifton Crawford as the young millionaire, and Melville Stewart as the War Correspondent follow up in exciting parallel two threads of a story that eventually tangle themselves into most peculiar and farcical complications.

Fania Marinoff as the ex-wife of the "Galloper," Jessie Ralph as the brewer's widow in love with the "Galloper," and Rye Alexander as the Red Cross nurse whom the young millionaire follows to the front in the hope of eventually making her his wife, are all excellent types for the roles in which they are cast. David Burton and Sam Moran also figure favorably among the supporting cast.

The adaptation of the original play made by George Seitz has been directed by Donald MacKenzie and is distinctly creditable in both particulars. The plot of the story has its origination in three innocent circumstances. Firstly the "Galloper's" first move toward liberty in the guise of a war correspondent, secondly the random resolve of the young millionaire to go on a hunting trip to India, and thirdly the determination of the fascinating young woman to enlist as a Red Cross nurse in hopes of finding an opportunity of discovering the hidden treasure, in search of which her father, an archaeologist, died.

The big situation of the story arises out of the forcing of the young millionaire, who has abandoned his hunting trip to follow the nurse to Athens where the three threads of the story meet, to impersonate the "Galloper," who decides to take flight at the unexpected arrival of both his ex-wife and the brewer's widow, leaving the manager of his newspaper, who has already secured his passports for the front, in a sorry plight.

The complications arising out of this amusing situation have been exceedingly well handled in the picture, and we predict a flattering reception for "The Galloper" by those who appreciate the genuine article in farce comedy.

"The Whirlpool"

The Story of a Man's Perfidy and the Penalty Exacted, in Three Reels, by Essanay.

Reviewed by James McQuade.

THE opening and the closing scene in "The Whirlpool" is an angry, seething mass of gray waters, boiling from unknown depths, a dread symbolism of the evil that befalls the man and the woman who stray from the path of virtue, as told in the story.

The mental impressions created by this type of story when told in moving pictures are many times intensified; as compared with those created by the same story in words. A tragic scene in the pictures is brought out as vividly as a lightning streak, and that which might only appear morbid in the book becomes gruesome on the screen. The killing of the villain in this photodrama by the woman he has wronged illustrates what I have just written.

The first reel is decidedly prosy, being chiefly devoted to the introduction of the characters and a few minor incidents that are utilized later on. The finding of the glove of Mrs. Howard, at a social hop, by Ingram Miles, the villain, is made far too much of by John Thorn, who impersonates him; and the significance of the "find" as emphasized by the unsavory butler of Miles makes the incident still more tiresome.

The second and third reels hold one's interest well, the third especially being so strong that one forgets the shortcomings of the first. The courtroom scene, near the close, compels commendation for its fine setting and for the realistic and dramatic incidents that it discloses.

Agnes Howard, the slighted wife of the state's attorney, Graham Howard, calls for strong emotional acting at certain times, and Nell Craig measures up to the requirements pretty well. The part of Annette Howell, the woman wronged by Ingram Miles, is well sustained by Warda Howard. This actress bids strongly for more important roles.

Chief interest is centered on Graham Howard, state's attorney, by reason of the fine characterization given him by John Cossar. Mr. Cossar is always the absorbed, self-contained lawyer, whose chief pleasure in life is in his work, and who forgets that his wife needs companionship in her home and a few pleasures outside of it. The scene in which the wife makes confession of a pardonable indiscretion—but one that barely misses placing her as a murderess in the eyes of the law—is the strongest in the photoplay. Both Mr. Cossar and Miss Craig deserve special mention for their realistic acting in this scene. Another well played part is that of Amos Howell, by Herbert Heyes.

The release date is September 4, through the General Film Company.

"To Cherish and Protect"

A Vitagraph Four-Part Melodrama Produced for the Blue Ribbon Brand Under the Direction of William Humphrey.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE convincing acting of Harry T. Morey, Harry Northrup and Gladden James, the three stock exchange partners whose assets are swept away in an unfavorable market, is a notable feature of this four-part melodrama, produced by William Humphrey from a scenario by William Vaughan Petit. Each of these actors gives a telling portrayal of conflicting emotions in the scenes immediately following the threatened downfall of their firm, when the instinct of self-preservation so far dominates two of the partners that they plot the ruination of the third. By his death they figure they may be saved.

The scheme devised does very well for the opening of an out-and-out melodrama and being handled with such effective seriousness by the actors named, an audience probably will not bother to question its feasibility. It appears that each member of the firm carries enough life insurance to tide over the difficulties. They draw lots to see who shall sacrifice himself, and, through the perfidy of his partners, Crane loses. Not realizing that he has been double-crossed, he believes he is in honor bound to die at midnight.

After bidding his wife and child a tearful farewell, Crane journeys to the lake where he finds the body of a man that has been washed ashore. He places papers bearing his name in the clothing and disappears, rightly believing that the body will be identified as his own. As might be expected, we find him returning years later to learn that his wife is married to one of his faithless partners. The complicated tangle resulting from the reappearance of the man who was supposed to be dead is straightened out in an interesting fashion, although no mention is made of the action of the insurance company on discovering that it had paid money on false pretences.

As in most of the Vitagraph melodramas, the atmosphere of the story is enhanced by ingenious effects in lighting and staging. Figuring prominently in an excellent cast are Estelle Mardo and Bobby Connelly.

"A Mother's Confession"

Ivan Film Productions, Inc., Makes a Forceful Five-Part Drama Out of Somber Story.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN THIS five-part picture, Ivan Abramson of the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., shows quite conclusively that he knows how to write and direct an impressive drama. "A Mother's Confession" is a well told story, direct in its construction, acted with feeling and admirably staged and photographed.

Scene from "A Mother's Confession" (Ivan).

That the narrative is essentially somber in tone, may be unfortunate, but need not detract from the credit due a painstaking producer. Mr. Abramson created his characters consistently and secured suitable actors for their interpretation. Apparently he took great care in finding the right sort of settings for the action, some of which required elaborate interiors.

Instead of the usual domestic triangle, the characters in this drama soon develop a quadrangle—a husband with two wives and the deserted wife, left in Chicago with a young child, finding solace in the companionship of an artist. For five years the husband keeps the two women in ignorance of his double responsibilities; then comes the reckoning in which he is killed by the artist. This is one climax in the story. Another, the one on which the picture terminates, finds the offspring of the two marriages about to wed when the mother of the youth rushes into the church and informs the prospective bride and groom that they are children of the same father. These concluding incidents are melodramatically effective, as is much that precedes them, for that matter.

Some of the earlier scenes between the deserted wife and the artist come close to the border line of what is permissible in love making; but do not over-reach it. The somewhat delicate situation in which the wife poses for the artist, also remains within the bounds of propriety, unless the bounds are very closely drawn. The cast is nicely balanced, with Chrystine Mayo and Austin Webb in roles of first importance, ably assisted by Sydney L. Mason, Carrie Reynolds and others.

"Poor Schmaltz"

Sam Bernard in an Adaptation of His Play of the Same Name Is Seen in a Four-Part Famous Players Subject.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

SAM BERNARD chose for his screen debut an adapation of "Poor Schmaltz," one of his old-time stage successes. The comedy was released on August 23 in four parts by the Famous Players. It is safe to say that in the original version a goodly proportion of the comedy rested in the dialect. Some of this is given to us in the sub-titles, and these contribute materially to the humor of the story. The production so far as it concerns the chief actor is frankly farcical; and the chief actor is most of the show. In his initial appearance he shows the lack of moderation which is a mark of the uncamerawise; his lightning-like stage movements do not at all times show with the clarity we may look for on his second appearance—for it is not to be expected that his initial appearance will be his last. It is more than probable that this speed was accentuated at the showing in the Strand on Monday afternoon by the operator.

Mr. Bernard will be liked as "Poor Schmaltz." His interpretation of the barber, who aspired to the honors and privileges and possibilities of a wealthy alliance that fall to the bearer of a title, will provide good entertainment. The comedian brings to his aid a measure of facial acrobatics and all-around physical agility that will compare favorably with the screen's most adept performers.

Robert Broderick is Herman Mocheimer, the millionaire pickler seeking for his daughter an alliance with a title. Mr. Broderick is a finished player and is versed in the ways of the screen as well as of the stage. His conception of Mocheimer carried a touch of the farcical, in keeping, perhaps, with the broader spirit of the piece. Dick Bernard is seen as Count Hugo Victor Von Mimmeldorf, whose facial and physical characteristics are so cleverly imitated by the star. In fact, the resemblances are so close that in the earlier stages one is inclined to look for the identifying marks of double exposures.

Scene from "Poor Schmaltz" (Famous Players).

Conway Tearle and Leonore Thompson are the lovers. What falls to them is well done.

The introduction of the principals is a fine bit of camera work, both in conception and execution, and plainly pleased the large house.

MR. HART'S story is not only characterized by originality of plot and strength of structure, but it has a big theme in the background, and it is admirably handled by Carlton King. A slight fault in the "foreshadowing" is obvious to the critical observer, but it might not be noticed by the ordinary spectator, that of preparing so carefully that the acute mind is given an inkling of what should be held up for a surprise. No little credit for success must be given to the highly intelligent and thoroughly effective interpretation given by Herbert Pryor. It is that of an active young physician addicted, as are many of the medical fraternity, to the use of cocaine. It is taken by him, as by many other over-worked practitioners, to relieve nervous exhaustion in the first place and subsequently in response to the cravings it has aroused until the dread habit is established beyond the reach of ordinary remedies.

His wife is broad enough to realize that he is to be pitied rather than condemned, but she manifests no great distress of mind when her husband is arrested for a theft no man of his calibre would commit while in his right senses. The unfortunate physician is proven guilty of the shameful crime, that of stealing from his host during a charming entertainment and is sentenced to a year's hard labor in prison. After serving six months of his sentence, he is visited by a brother physician, one his wife had consulted before the arrest, and it is found that the drug habit has been cured. His release immediately follows—it was all a scheme devised by his wife to restore his manhood, an effective form of heroic treatment.

"Mortmain."

A Mystery Drama of Extraordinary Merit Is Produced by the Vitagraph Company with Robert Edeson in the Title Role.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

CONVENTIONAL appreciation is likely to fall short of giving a correct impression of this five-part Vitagraph production to be released on the V-L-S-E program. In its particular sphere, that of mystery drama with a scientific background, it comes pretty close to being a model of motion picture craftsmanship. Theodore Marston directed the picture from an adaptation of a story by Arthur Train, and Robert Edeson acted the title role so exceedingly well that it seems safe to call it his best screen performance, without inviting contradiction. But the photoplay is so good in its entirety, such a thorough work of art, that there is no need to place emphasis on the contribution of any particular player.

"Mortmain" is like a story that one picks up indifferently, scans casually for a few paragraphs and then reads with active interest to the end. Before the first reel has been run, there is enough to arouse hope of something exceptional and the hope is justified in a picture that is original in idea, replete with weird suggestions and developed with extraordinary plausibility.

The basis for the strange experience of Mortmain is established at a clinic where it is shown that modern surgery makes possible the grafting of the limb of one animal onto the body of another. A cat with a paw seemingly grafted into place is used for illustration. Then step by step we are led into an engrossing story, too involved for a brief summary, but presented so clearly and logically that there is no excuse for an audience missing any of the points. The significance of the surgical operation with which the picture opens is readily appreciated when Mortmain's left hand is crushed under a falling piece of furniture. He is told that the hand must be amputated and that $10,000 will buy the hand of another man. As Mortmain loses consciousness under an anesthetic, the screen shows fleeting visions of faces as they appear in his mind, a novel idea handled with marked success.

And the hand grafted onto Mortmain's arm belonged to his sweetheart's brother, who died under the operation. Had Poe or DeMaupassant written scenarios they would not have been ashamed of a plot with such haunting possibilities. How typical of Poe is the pleasant fancy of a lover placing the alien fingers on his fiancee's arm, not knowing their origin, and wondering why she instinctively recoils from his touch. By ghostly light effects in atmospheric settings, and expressive acting that conveys the meaning without spoiling the illusion by disclosing too much, the hidden horror that everyone feels but cannot explain is worked up with consummate skill. And then we are old that it was all a dream. This is the one artistic mistake in the picture, due, of course, to the prevalent belief that the public must have a happy ending. It seems, however, as if the concession might have been avoided in a story of this caliber.

Edward Elkas makes a truly Dickensian character of Flaggs. James Morrison is convincing as the unfortunate brother, and Muriel Ostriche is adequate as the girl, although an actress suggesting more spiritual sensitiveness might have been preferable.

"A Species of Mexican Man" do well to seek him out and, following the hint given them by the playwright, seat the gentleman firmly in the presidential chair. As conceived by Mr. Fielding, his leading character is one of those fortunate beings who is equally at home leading an army on the field of battle, playing the polished courtier to some fair dame, or directing the affairs of a nation—a veritable Count of Monte Christo, 1915 brand. This will undoubtedly insure him a warm welcome. The love of romance is still strong within the better part of us, and we admire and applaud the deeds of these heroes of the pictured story, even when our hard, practical sense keeps telling us that there aren't any such chaps.

The details of the plot have to do with a Mexican "Man on Horseback," a mysterious being, high in the ranks of one of the warring factions, who crosses the border in order to procure arms and ammunition for his comrades. Once in the United States, he promptly walks straight into a romantic adventure, the charming American girl whom he rescues from peril, becoming his bride and the future Mrs. President of Mexico.

Taking the tale on its own grounds, it is uncommonly good entertainment, and has been produced with care and a nice appreciation of its needs. Several night scenes are especially well done.

Romaine Fielding's performance of the "Man" is satisfactory to a marked degree. The character suits him in its mental and physical attributes, and he wins staunch support for a hero we know never dwelt on either side of the Rio Grande. Roscoe Karns, Roger La Verne, Vinnie Burns, and Audell Higgins justify the prominence given them in the cast.

Alice Brady as "The Ballet Girl."

Alice Brady's popularity in the picture field is advancing all the time, and the girl herself is growing more and more in love with the work. She screens well—so well that World Film has placed her under a very long contract. The fans love Alice. Some time ago Miss Grace George, the famous actress, who in private life is Mrs. William A. Brady, made one of her many successes in a play called "Carnival." This play has been converted into a motion picture drama with the title of "The Ballet Girl," and with felicitous appropriateness Miss Brady is to play the part which Miss George made so prominent.

The story is a peculiarly touching one. A little girl is a natural dancer and despite the opposition of her stern and unbending aunts, she takes lessons in the terpsichorean art, and arrived at young womanhood, gets on the stage and makes a great success. Then her trials, troubles and tribulations begin. The dainty dancer is beset by the devil's disciples, but she finally gets through with an untarnished body and soul, and settles down to a happy life with the young man of her choice.

The part thoroughly well suits fascinating Alice Brady and World Film is making the picture alike worthy the charming girl and the theme.

Anita King.

Determined to break the 18-hour record between Los Angeles and San Francisco, she was wished god-speed and good luck by Cecil B. De Mille, the entire personnel of the big Lasky studio and the major part of the population of Hollywood not actively engaged in making motion pictures at the moment of her departure.

On the hood of the car was painted in bold white letters these words: "From Koast to Koast in a Kissel Kar"; and, again, "Anita King, the Paramount Girl, from Jesse L. Lasky Studio, Hollywood, California, to Executive Offices, New York."

For the first part of her journey or until the more densely populated section is reached, Miss King is to race against time. It is planned that she stop at the many Paramount theaters along the route, drive up to the entrance, tell the patrons how Paramount pictures are made, describe in detail the Famous Players', Lasky and Morosco studios, speak of the friends she has made among the many stars appearing in the productions of these companies, otherwise deport herself as a walking Motion Picture Encyclopedia, and then dash on to the next town. From Reno to Ely and Ely to Salt Lake, she will have to cross the desert in deep sand and will be lucky to make 50 miles a day. For several days at a stretch she will have to camp out.

The cities through which she will pass en route from coast to coast are San Francisco, Sacramento, Truckee, Reno, Fallon,

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"CAUGHT" (Essanay).

"Caught" is the first of Essanay's three-act Monday releases. It is a powerful drama of love and political intrigue, the leading roles being taken by Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn. The photoplay reveals the machinations of a corrupt political machine and is extremely true to life. The methods of ward heelers and cheap politicians to gain their ends are bared in all their ugly aspects. It is a plot to besmirch the character of a political enemy through trumped-up charges. Love, loyalty and honesty are found, however, in the Governor's daughter and his secretary. They manage to foil the plot aimed at the governor of the state. In working together to save the governor's fair name the two fall deeply in love. The treachery of the girl's fiance is discovered, he playing the part of a dupe to the politicians. The girl denounces him and declares her love for her father's secretary.

"DE WOLF HOPPER TO SPEND A YEAR IN THE FILMS."

DeWolf Hopper, up from Siasconset 'cross the bay, lumbered into the Grand Central Terminal yesterday afternoon just before the Twentieth Century started for Chicago and a few minutes later was on his way to Long Beach, Cal., to spend the greater part of the coming year before the Triangle Film Corporation under the supervision of D. W. Griffiith.

"I'm going back to William A. Brady when I'm through with the films," said Hopper, "but that won't be for a year, and maybe two, for I have a sort of an understanding with the Triangle for a renewal of our contract. Mr. Brady thinks I won't like the movies a little bit, but I hope to do for Don Quixote, Gulliver, Falstaff and other famous characters of the literary classics what I have done for Gilbert and Sullivan."

Then the gate clanged behind the comedian and his valet and chauffeur, whose activities have been limited during the summer by the edict of the selectmen of Siasconset prohibiting the use of automobiles on the island. Mrs. Hopper and the celebrated baby, DeWolf Hopper, Jr., will follow as soon as the new film star is settled on the coast.

LEHIGH VALLEY LOANS BEST TRAIN FOR PATHE PICTURE.

The Pathe producers, Wharton, Inc., succeeded recently in securing a most valuable concession ever obtained from a railroad. In filming the first episode of "Wallingford" it was necessary to show the private car in which that famous high financier dazzles the inhabitants of the little "tank" towns. The Lehigh Valley Railroad not only permitted the Whartons to attach a big steel flat car, properly equipped, to their best train, "The Black Diamond" Express, but stopped the train twice to allow for the taking of scenes. The special car had to be sent all the way from Buffalo for the purpose, but the railroad supplied that also, fixing it up specially according to the Whartons' instructions.

"AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN" (Liberty).

"An American Gentleman," a five-reel production, is the latest result of the present activities of the Liberty Motion Picture Co., Germantown, Philadelphia. "An American Gentleman" is one of the famous plays of the provinces, having toured for a number of years throughout the United States and Canada, with its author William Bonelli in the title role. Mr. Bonelli takes the title part in the filmization of the story and is assisted in its presentation by such well known photoplayers as Charles C. Graham, Wilbur Hudson, Virginia Fairfax, Douglas Sibole, Geo. W. Middleton and a company of about fifty others.

It is a particularly strong drama of gypsy life and as a stage play was a pronounced financial success. The picturized version gives latitude for much greater efforts and the result is a story full of splendid situations and many thrilling incidents all held together by an absorbing heart narrative.

BONNELL HAS WAR FEATURE.

Harry Bonnell, director of publicity for the Western States Vaudeville Association of San Francisco, has secured the California State rights for the feature five-reel European war film "The Fall of Przemsyl", a late release by the American Correspondent Film Company of New York City. The attraction will be booked out of the offices of the W. S. V. A., the actual State right purchasers, and the public launching will be under the personal direction of Mr. Bonnell, who is negotiating for the territorial rights of other Far Western States and also for the Hawaiian Islands.

"THE FATHER" (Reliance).

Some decidedly intense and dramatic contrasts are presented in "The Father," two-reel Reliance feature which was written and produced by Francis Powers. These contrasts deal with the love of a father, who is a criminal, for his son and wife, and with the relation between a wealthy manufacturer who has adopted the convict's son, and the boy himself.

Francelia Billington and Ralph Lewis are features in this drama of the life story of Bill Kenare, convict, and his son and wife. Bill Kenare is sent to prison for a long term because he robbed Charles Spaulding, wealthy manufacturer. Spaulding adopts Kenare's son, little Henry. Mrs. Kenare is taken to Spaulding's house as a nurse.

Kenare, out of prison, joins a band of child-stealers. They plot to obtain possession of little Kenare, whom they believe to be the son of Spaulding. They intend to hold him for ransom.

Kenare disguises himself as a tramp. In order to win the interest and affection of the little boy whom he contrives to meet, he tells to a group of children many fanciful tales.

This plan succeeds. The little boy is attracted to him. He is easily able to draw the little fellow away from his companions. He finds out in time, however, that the boy is his own son, so he is saved from kidnapping his own progeny. The little boy draws father and mother once more together.

Mr. Lewis is Kenare, while Miss Billington is Mrs. Kenare. Chandler House is little Henry. William H. Brown, the Reliance character actor, is Spaulding, the manufacturer.

"THE UNSUSPECTED ISLES" (Gaumont).

"The Unsuspected Isles," a powerful romantic drama in three reels, first of the Rialto Star Features produced by the Gaumont Company for release in the regular Mutual program, presents Fania Marinoff, popular Broadway star, in the leading role. For her initial bow to Mutual audiences, Miss Marinoff was surrounded by a notable cast of screen players, each of whom has won distinct success as a player in the silent drama.

"The Unsuspected Isles," the scenes of which are laid in the South Sea Isles and later along Broadway in New York City, is from the fertile brain of the Rev. Dr. C. J. Harris, known the world over as the Gaumont editor. Dr. Harris, in preparing "The Unsuspected Isles" for the screen, had a wealth of material to work on, considerable of which he gathered while on a tour of the far off island some few years ago.

Miss Marinoff as the chief character in "The Unsuspected Isles," appears as a West Indian princess, a part to which she is singularly fitted. The accompanying photograph depicts Miss Marinoff and John Reinhard, who plays the heavy, in one of the many interesting scenes from the first of the Rialto Star Features to be released in the regular Mutual Program. "The Unsuspected Isles" will be released Sept. 8.

"GUARDING OLD GLORY" SELLING FAST.

W. H. Rudolph, eastern representative for F. O. Nielsen of Chicago, and general manager of the Eiko Film Company of New York, reports great success with "Guarding Old Glory," the peace and preparedness picture by that name, on which a big advertising campaign is being launched. Both Mr. Nielsen and Mr. Rudolph were dumfounded at the interest immediately taken in the picture by exhibitors and state-right buyers alike. As soon as the first big four page advertisement appeared announcing that "Guarding Old Glory" was released on the state-right plan a flood of mail arrived at both the Chicago and New York offices. Mr. Nielsen hurried home to take care of that end, while Mr. Rudolph remains to conduct the selling and advertising campaign from New York.

U. S. Artillery "Guarding Old Glory."

Mr. Rudolph also reports that he has disposed of the following territory for "Little Sunset:" New York State, All Theaters Film and Accessory Company; Greater New York, Greene Photo Play Company, Inc.; New England, Boston Photo Play Company; Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio and Indiana, F. O. Nielsen, of Chicago; Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas City Feature Film Company; Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, Notable Feature Film Company; Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Zenith Feature Film Company; East Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, and District of Columbia, Electric Theater Film and Supply Company; Southern States to Southern Film Company; Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Noted Plays Feature Company.

VIVIAN MARTIN IN A PIQUANT ROLE.

Vivian Martin is a test of directorial ability. She is the despair of some; the pride of others. For Miss Martin has a style, method and personality, indefinable and elusive, which requires to be extracted in picture work with exceptional care and skill. Maurice Tourneur, James Young, Emile Chautard have all had this dainty ingenue under direction; now it is the turn of Oscar Eagle, who, for World Film, has started on the preparation of "The Little Madamoiselle" with Vivian Martin in the title role. Eagle's "Cotton King," just about to be released, with George Nash and Julia Hay, is recognized as a piece of fine dramatic technique. "O. E." has the gift of humor in a marked degree, as well, and may also be expected to give Miss Martin every chance of registering her gifts as an exquisite comedienne to their best advantage.

VITAGRAPH TO MAKE BRADY'S "BUCCANEER."

Rollin S. Sturgeon, the director of the Western Vitagraph Company, has been given the pictured manuscript of Cyrus Townsend Brady's remarkable story of piratical adventure, "Sir Henry Morgan, Buccaneer." As the principal scenes will be enacted in mid-ocean, Mr. Sturgeon is selecting his cast from among expert swimmers of the Stock Company. As the players will have to live in a craft that is a replica of the sailing ships used by lawless rovers who fought under the skull and cross bones, Mr. Sturgeon has secured a staunch, rakish looking craft. It is now in drydock being rebuilt and overhauled to comply with the design of the vessel in Mr. Brady's story. The between-decks, however, will be outfitted so the players will be comfortably housed during the time they will be compelled to remain on the ocean.

"THE FAMILY CUPBOARD" (World).

World Film is to convert the Owen Davis drama, "The Family Cupboard," which was produced by William A. Brady into a motion picture under the direction of Frank H. Crane. Irene Fenwick's part in the drama is to be played in the film by Frances Nelson, the actress who made such a pleasing success in World Film's "Stolen Voice."

"TRILBY" (Equitable).

Almost every street in lower New York was made to contribute its quota to the production of "Trilby," recently completed by Director Maurice Tourneur for the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation.

"Trilby", the story of which is familiar to almost every reading person, entailed, in the director, the necessity of absolute local color. For several thousand feet "Trilby" and Svengali are made to travel through strange lands. Galicia, Poland, Southern Russia, Italy and Hungary, are shown in the pictorial story and it was absolutely essential to a good production that the atmosphere and detail, be perfect. Mons. Tourneur, however, met the authors' obligations by drawing upon the disfricts of the lower East Side with the result that a most elaborate production is counterbalanced by perfect detail.

As Trilby, Clara Kimball Young does, by far, her very best work. Under the powerful, unseen influence of the dreadful Svengali (Wilton Lackaye is, indeed, a dreadful Svengali) the frail Trilby is given a personality and lovableness that even Phyllis Neilsson Terry failed to instill into the character.

"Trilby" is in five acts and three hundred and sixty one scenes and required a cast of extreme excellency to portray. Paul McAllister, recently starred in "The Scales of Justice" by the Famous Players Film Company; Chester Barnett and other players of stellar rank, support Miss Young and Mr. Lackaye. "Trilby" will be the initial release of the Equitable Corporation, but before being sent through World Film will be seen at a Broadway house beginning September 6. September 20th is the Equitable release date for "Trilby."

Scene from "Trilby" (Equitable).

"OIL AND WATER" (Biograph).

IN this two-reel Biograph re-issue, released in the regular service, Friday, September 10, we have Blanche Sweet, assisted by a company of fifty professional dancers, performing the sensational Dance of the Fleeting Hours. It is a symbolic interpretation of life's insecurity. Henry Walthall, a young idealist attends the theater, and the dance affects him profoundly. After the performance his friend, Lional Barrymore, takes him behind the scenes and introduces him to the dancer. She is a good actress on and off, but to him she appears the most desirable woman in the world. He proposes marriage and she accepts

Years pass; she has borne a child; her husband is still the same adorable lover, but she is not happy. She craves the old excitement and an ill-timed visit of old stage acquaintances brings matters to a head. She flouts the idealist, surrenders her claim to the child and goes back to the old life. One evening, the child, having wandered away from home, is found by the mother, and for a moment her heart yearns to reclaim all she has lost. But it cannot be. "My ways are not your ways," she tells the idealist in a tremendous scene, and parts from him forever.

The dance in the prologue is a magnificent spectacle, the equal of which has never been seen on the screen. The drama is exceptionally well acted and directed, and has for a cast Blanche Sweet, Henry Walthall, Lionel Barrymore and Walter Miller. The cast in the prologue includes Charles H. Mailes, Lillian Gish, Alfred Paget, W. Chrystie Miller, Dorothy Gish, Robert Harron, Harry Carey and Jack Dillon. The entire production is under the direction of D. W. Griffith.

"Oil and Water" is a stupendous dramatic spectacle, quite on a par with "The Battle at Elderbush Gulch," and is destined to meet with the same big success as the previous two-reel Biograph re-issue.

"A LITTLE BROTHER OF THE RICH" (UNIVERSAL).

Among the strikingly beautiful scenes in "A Little Brother of the Rich," which was adapted by Hobart Bosworth from the book of Joseph Medill Patterson, and which is being produced at Universal City by Director Otis Turner and his special feature company, are those taken at the lawn fete given by Mrs. Muriel Potter, the wife of Paul Potter, who is the "little brother of the rich."

These scenes were made on the magnificent grounds of the Huntington Hotel in Pasadena, Director Turner devoting several days to securing remarkable photographic results.

As a part of the entertainment provided for her guests by Mrs. Potter a reproduction of the celebrated painting, "The Nymphs and the Satyr," is shown, and the audience is thrilled and amazed when the characters in the painting come to life and dive into the pool.

Among the guests is Sylvia Castle, who has won fame as an actress and who has been asked to give a recitation, but her finer sensibilities have been offended at the daring scene of nudity and she requests her hostess to excuse her from reciting as she does not think she "can compete with anything like the sort of art that has just been offered."

In "A Little Brother of the Rich," Hobart Bosworth plays the part of James Leamington, an old actor, Jane Novak is Sylvia Castle, Maud George enacts the role of Muriel Evers Potter and the title role is in the hands of Hobart Henley.

STRONG CAST IN PATHE'S "MARY'S LAMB."

Pathe announces the cast of Donald Mackenzie's production of Richard Carle's play "Mary's Lamb" as follows: Richard Carle, Jessie Ralph, Marie Wayne, Lillian Thatcher, James Renne and W. J. McCarthy.

Mr. Mackenzie has just started work upon his production which will be one of the Gold Rooster Plays.

"THE IRISH IN AMERICA" (Lubin).

The story of this three act Lubin photo comedy-drama plays in the hills and dales of Ireland, in the busy streets of New York, and in the boundless West. It is a story of Dan Murphy, who loves Peggy O'Sullivan, but who is too poor to think of matrimony.

Dan comes to America and has various adventures in the West before he strikes it rich. Then Peggy follows him, and, after traveling the rocky road to Dublin, finds the man of her heart, and they are married and live happy ever after.

Scene from "The Irish in America" (Lubin).

This play was filmed by Sidney Olcott in Ireland and in this country and features Miss Valentine Grant. It is a clean wholesome play and well worth seeing.

BURR McINTOSH IN "MY PARTNER."

For the past few weeks Mr. Burr McIntosh and his cast, including Marie Edith Wells, have been hard at work, in a secluded part of New York State, on a picturization of Bartley Campbell's old time drama, "My Partner," which is scheduled for release on the World Film program. Burr McIntosh himself plays the part of Joe Saunders in the film which was directed by Eugene Sanger.

"THE FORECAST" (American).

Where true love meets with opposition on the part of stern relatives, the principals will find considerable hope and encouragement in the story of "The Forecast"—a one-reel "Flying A" film to be released September 8th.

Director Henry Otto has made capital of the versatility of his leads, Lizette Thorne as Janet; Edward Coxen as Rex Booth and George Field as Forrest Keene, in an exceptionally clever drama through which a pretty love story is woven.

Keene opposes the marriage of his nephew, Rex Booth, to Janet, his housekeeper, threatening to disinherit Rex if he married her. Keene has received a knife—a relic of the Orient—from a friend. He falls asleep with the knife across his lap and dreams of his own murder. When awakened, he is so happy to learn it is all a hideous dream that he gladly gives his consent to the marriage of the young lovers.

Miss Thorne and Mr. Coxen, as well as Mr. Field, make the most of the dramatic opportunities offered, and the result is a very interesting film.

"OVER AND BACK" (Komic).

The male members of Edward "Komic" Dillon's Komic Company developed circuslike dexterity and agility in "Over and Back," the latest photoplay featuring Fay Tincher. The love rivalry furnishes the basis and necessity for this gymnastic situation.

Ed and Jake are rivals for the hand of Fay. Ed, the suitor favored by Fay, is not liked by her father. Ed, however, proves more than master of the situation. He goes to a boarding house close to Fay's home. He arranges a system of wheels running on wire clotheslines so that he is able to travel safely and swiftly from his own window to that of Fay.

Jake, however, proves equally resourceful. He has seen the successful contrivance and switches the line so that the second time Ed tries to use it he does not arrive at Fay's window, but at her father's. Then, of course, there is trouble and a conflict between the father and Ed: Ed. finally makes his getaway but Jake, meanwhile, has changed the home end of the line so that instead of running to Ed's window it runs to that of Fay's school teacher, an elderly spinster. Ed. plunges through the spinster's window. Fay enters to consult her teacher about a lesson and is angered at seeing Ed with the fainting preceptress in his arms.

Ed. finally frees himself from the situation. He decides that Jake must be punished. He ties Jake to the clothesline and sends him spinning for a ride to papa's window. While Jake is in this difficulty. Ed and Fay rush to a minister and are married.

Frank Darien is Ed; Chester Withey, author of many of the Komic scenarios, is Jake; while Max Davidson is papa.

As usual, Edward "Komic" Dillon directed the new Komic comedy.

PATHE CINCINNATI OFFICE CLOSES BIG CONTRACT.

The Pathe Cincinnati office through Manager C. E. Holah has just closed a contract with the Hurtig & Seaman enterprises whereby the Colonial and Lyric theatres of Dayton, Ohio, get the entire output of Gold Rooster Plays and the "Neal of the Navy." The approximate amount of the contract is $10,000. Naturally Mr. Holah is very much pleased with his contract.

"'NEATH CALVARY'S SHADOW" (Selig).

"'Neath Calvary's Shadow" is a Selig Diamond Special in three reels released in regular service on Thursday, Sept. 9th. This unusual Selig picture play was produced by Wm. Robert Daly, from the scenario by W. H. Lippert, and features Wheeler Oakman, Fritzi Brunette, and a carefully selected cast of Selig players.

This Selig Diamond Special in three reels tells the story of John Strong, a young Rector and his sister Anne. Misfortunes do not come singly to Strong who loses his influential parish in the East and is compelled to go West where he later organizes and maintains a little mission.

The reason for Rev. Strong's misfortunes is the fact that he has adopted a foundling which he discovered upon the parish steps and his explanation of his discovery is not countenanced by his church.

In the West, Strong falls in love with the daughter of a mine owner. The mine owner telegraphs to the East regarding Strong and is told that Strong was compelled to leave his Eastern parish because he could not prove that he was not the father of the child which he had adopted. Later it is proven that the child belonged to Anne Strong and the girl in the West who had spurned the young Rector, realizes that he was not to blame for the series of adverse circumstances affecting him.

Careful direction is shown in the succession of extraordinary scenes, backgrounds, clear cut photographs and original lighting effects.

"THE RAJAH'S SACRIFICE" (Centaur).

On Thursday, September 16, the first of the much heralded David Horsley animal productions, featuring the world famous Bostock animal performers, will be released on the Mutual program. Thereafter one of these subjects, which will be in two reels and known by the brand name of Centaur Features, will form a part of the Mutual's Thursday releases each week.

The first release is called "The Rajah's Sacrifice" and in two tenseley dramatic and lividly spectacular reels, tells the story of a young American girl who falls into the hands of a cunning and barbaric high priest, who pleads with her to marry him. She refuses, but accepts the Rajah, whom she truly loves. At the Rajah's temple the sacred animals are kept, and, one day, upon entering the lion's den the Rajah is attacked and killed. It is the custom of the country that upon the death of a husband his widow is to be burned at the stake, and pursuant to this custom the Rajah's widow is led to the stake and the funeral pyre lighted. But the high priest, desiring the girl for himself, has arranged a means of escape. After liberating the girl he places her in charge of the keeper of the sacred animals, who is in love with the high priest. Upon learning of her lover's inconstancy the keeper dispatches a note to the girl's friends who immediately organize a rescue party and after a thrilling battle amid the collection of sacred animals take the girl from the place. Enraged at the keeper's infidelity to her trust the high priest commands that she be thrown to the animals, but before the hirelings can obey the order the keeper springs upon the dictator and kills him. She then escapes and joins the homeward bound rescue party.

While there are many scenes and situations which, by the use of the animals, are made remarkably exciting, the most thrilling of all is the scene in which the Rajah rushes into the lion's den and in saving his wife meets his own death. In this scene several of the lions spring upon him just as he enters and bear him prostrate to the ground. It is so well done that the effect is without doubt easily the most wonderful ever put into pictures.

Besides a big array of Bostock animals the cast of human players is large and includes: Capt. Jack Bonavita, Roy Watson, M. Gay, Herr Batty, Mlle. Ottowa, Vera Robsom, Mlle. D'Orsey, Gavette and Ora Cecil. Capt. Jack Bonavita and Frank Montgomery directed.

"HER OATH OF VENGEANCE" (Majestic).

"Teddy" Sampson and Charles West are featured in the two-reel Majestic production "Her Oath of Vengeance." They are supported by an unusual cast including Wilbur Higby, the character actor; Frank Bennett, Joseph Hennaberry, who was Lincoln in "The Birth of a Nation," and Eleanor Stone.

"Her Oath of Vengeance" tells the story of Russian love and hatred against a background of California orchards. Sergius, a Russian fugitive, comes to America with his daughter, Sophia. He is employed in a cannery while Sophia picks fruit in the orchards. Ivan, the overseer, knows that Sergius has been a Nihilist in Russia and has a criminal record. So he forces Sergius to promote a marriage between himself and Sophia. Sergius knows, however, that Sophia and Nicholas, another worker, are in love.

Ivan's plans are temporarily thwarted by Mrs. Gray, whose husband owns the cannery and orchards. Ivan out of revenge compels Sergius to foment a strike. There is a bomb incident through which the cannery is in danger. Nicholas, however, saves the cannery, but the bomb explodes killing Ivan.

Scene from "Her Oath of Vengeance" (Majestic).

During these exciting incidents Sergius is shot by accident by Mr. Gray. Sophia believes her father dead. She goes to the Gray home to avenge his fate. She is met there by Mrs. Gray who has her infant in her arms. The likeness between the unconscious pose of the woman and the pictures of the Madonna which Sophia has known, moves the girl deeply. She gives up her revengeful purpose. Eventually she marries Nicholas.

Single Reel Biographs

Biograph Company Will Continue to Specialize in Single Reel Productions, Releasing Four Each Week.

DESPITE the fact that most producing companies are replacing their one reel releases on the regular program with two and three reel productions, the Biograph Company announce they will continue to specialize in strong one reel dramas and comedy-dramas as heretofore, releasing four single reel productions, of the same quality that has made the A-B trademark famous the world over as a guarantee of a dependable one-reel picture.

In a recent interview, an official of that organization said: "We have always been, and always will be, firm believers that the one reel production, containing an interesting story and properly produced, will have its position on the better class of programs everywhere. On a program consisting of a variety of short subjects it is, of course, established. On a program that is composed of a multiple reel production principally, a one reel subject offers that element of variety which is essential to balance the evening's entertainment. It is peculiar, but nevertheless true, that there is always a feeling of discontent among audiences unless they are offered at least one short subject in addition to the multiple reel production. In a sense, it satisfies that natural desire for quantity that is common of all people. This is especially true of the audiences in small towns where theaters do not offer a program of more than six reels.

"It must be understood, of course, that the proper attention be given to the production of one reel subjects. To this organization there is no such thing as a feature, every production, no matter what the length, is handled under precisely the same condition. Our directors are given a story to produce, with instructions that they make the most of the story without regard to length. After the negative is developed it is cut and trimmed until the story is told as briefly as possible. It might make a one reel picture, or a two or three reel picture; but in any event the quality is the same. It is difficult at the outset to say how long a picture will be, that can only be determined after the negative is cut. As an illustration, when we produced 'Judith of Bethulia' we had no idea it was going to make the remarkable four-reel production it has, quite the contrary, we were of the opinion it would make a two reel production. The same was true of 'Under Two Flags,' which we released recently in three reels and which we originally intended for a two reel production.

"In connection with our one reel releases, we have obtained the film rights for the entire world on 'Queer Stories' from 'Truth,' a widely read publication in London, and which, in all probability will make mostly one-reel subjects. These stories are a selected list of the strangest stories contributed by the foremost writers of Europe to the English magazines, and as the name implies, are odd stories, of a nature that is outside the ordinary realm of motion picture stories. From the stories we have already selected, we find they are especially adapted to motion picture work, their plots being unique and in almost every instance a surprise to the average reader. "The Wheel of the Gods," released September 4, is the first of the 'Queer Stories.'

"One thing is certain, we shall always adhere to the fundamental policy of this organization since its inception, eighteen years ago, namely; action plus brevity in motion pictures, a policy that is not only as firmly established as our A-B trademark; but is symbolic of that trademark as well."

MORE AUTHENTIC WAR PICTURES.

Central Film Company of Chicago announces the securing of new Chicago Tribune war films. Five reels, entitled "The German Side of The War" and four reels entitled "With The Russians at The Front." The German picture were taken with the German and Austrian armies in the Eastern theater of war, by Edwin F. Weigle, staff photographer of the Chicago Tribune, the man who took the famous Tribune Belgian war pictures with which exhibitors all over the country packed their theaters. The Russian picture were taken under the personal supervision of R. R. McCormick, war correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, who was the guest of the Czar's highest military authorities in Poland and Galicia. He obtained exclusive motion picture rights within the Russian lines.

Central Film Company, 110 South State Street, Chicago, has complete charge of the distribution of these films. For particulars exhibitors are urged to write at once, or to wire, the Central Film. Elaborate posters, consisting of one sheets, three sheets, and six sheets, by the famous poster artist, Palenske, have been prepared and will be furnished exhibitors. High art heralds on both the Russian and German features also have been prepared for the exhibitors.

LESSONS IN GEOGRAPHY.

"It's like a lesson in geography—only more so," said one of the members of the Lasky Feature Play stock company in telling of her work the other day at the studios in Hollywood, Cal. She was quite right. In "Carmen" this young woman had acted a Spanish girl in costume and in a setting that for all the world was Spain transplanted to California. Now she is looking forward to an experience as a central African beauty, as one of the important scenes in the play, "Explorer," by W. Somerset Maugham, and in which Lou Tellegen, the romantic star, appears, is laid in an African village. This village is being constructed on a part of the Lasky 10,000 acre ranch.

Metro Advance Schedule

Many Notable Subjects by Well Known Players Dated for Early Release.

Announcement of the Autumn offerings of the Metro Pictures Corporation contains a notable list of stars of the stage and screen in a series of pretentious feature productions during the month of September and October, the schedule for which is now complete. Emily Stevens is the first of the September stars. She will appear in "The Soul of a Woman," announced as a five-act play supremely contrived by Director Edwin Carewe of the B. A. Rolfe forces. This picture will be released on September 7.

Francis X. Bushman in "The Silent Voice," a Quality picture, will be released on September 13.

"The Silent Voice" will be followed by "The Better Man," the Rupert Hughes play produced on the speaking stage with Guy Bates Post, under the name of "The Bridge." The stars are Henry Kolker, well known to Broadway by his career on the legitimate stage, and Renee Kelly. This five-act feature has just been completed by Director John W. Noble, of the B. A. Rolfe company. "The Better Man" will be released on September 20.

George Bronson Howard's "An Enemy to Society," with Hamilton Revelle and Lois Meredith as the stars, will follow on September 20. This is a Columbia product in five reels.

Mary Miles Minter in "The Storks' Nest," a five-act picture, will be released in October. The play is now in preparation at the Rolfe studios with Edgar Nigh directing.

For Ethel Barrymore a new play by George Scarborough has been secured, and Miss Barrymore found the vehicle so much to her liking that she expressed a desire to present it later on the speaking stage. Edwin Carewe has already begun work upon its presentation.

The third week in October will see Olga Petrova in "My Madonna' 'and William Faversham in "One Million Dollars," to be followed by Edmund Breese in 'The Song of a Wage Slave," the second series of plays from poems which began with "The Shooting of Dan McGraw."

Booth Tarkington's "The Turmoil" will follow, and a special announcement concerning this picture is to be made later.

"JERRY AND THE GUNMAN" (Cub).

To have a rival for the hand of one's girl means trouble enough in ordinary circumstances; but when that rival is a six foot Westerner, carrying around a young arsenal, besides a reputation as a general bad man, one may expect almost anything to happen. That's one of the situations confronting "Jerry" in the latest Cub Comedy called "Jerry and the Gunman," to be released September on the Mutual program. Dead Shot Dick, for that is the name of the Westerner, wanted the coast clear for himself to the heart and hand of pretty Jessie, so he ruthlessly cast Jerry into the distant shrubbery.

Determined upon revenge Jerry prowled around until he found out that Dick had a big price hanging over his head. This reward Jerry set out to get—and he did get it. So Jerry was happy. But his joy was short lived, for the police took his reward away and, to add insult to injury, he was thrown into jail with the man he captured.

This briefly outlines the story of "Jerry and the Gunman." It is one of those rollicking, rapid fire farces of exciting happenings amid wild Western surroundings. It has a wealth of comedy situations which have cleverly been turned into surprises by excellent handling on the part of Director Fahrney. The Cub Company, headed by George Ovey, the funniest man in America, as "Jerry," plays the farce with a reckless abandon that will draw forth plenty of laughs.

"Jerry and the Gunman" is one of the best releases to come from the Horsley studios.

HOW MISS FENWICK SAVED THE DAY.

"Dear me," sighed pretty little Miss Fenwick during a conference with George Kleine and her director relative to the making of a scene in "The Woman Next Door." "There seems to be an awful lot of bother about a little scene showing me walk out of a stage door!"

"It's not so unimportant as you think," admonished the director. "Remember, that you're supposed to be a famous actress leaving the stage door of the theater where you are starring. This fellow Lake comes up to the door-keeper, tips him and asks that he take in his card. In your dressing room you refuse to see him and later you exit from the stage door with Lake in the background observing you intently. "And," added the director, "I'll be switched if I can think of a stage door in New York where we can get the sun and all the rest of it."

The blue eyes of the star of "The Song of Songs" widened with inspiration.

"Am I or am I not the leading woman of 'The Song of Songs' at the Eltinge theater?"

This was readily agreed.

"Then," continued Miss Fenwick, "why not use the Eltinge stage door? I am an actress in real life as well as in the film play and there's nothing like good local color."

The director blushed sufficiently to appease Miss Fenwick's wrath. "By Jove, you're right," he confessed. "I never thought of it."

So accordingly it was arranged to make the scene during the last week of Miss Fenwick's engagement in "The Songs of Songs." A banner was made bearing her film-play name which replaced the correct one on the iron canopy of the theater. Crowds leaving an afternoon performance were taken, after which Miss Fenwick herself was photographed leaving the stage door just as she has done in real life since the opening of the Eltinge engagement.

There were other touches of "local color," too. The regular stage door attendant was used to go through the familiar action of taking the Johnnie's card (and any small change that might accompany) to the actress' maid. He did it like a seasoned film veteran, showing great familiarity with the role.

Another actor who did his share in creating this curious analogy but who is quite unconscious of the fact is Al. H. Woods, producer of "The Song of Songs." The camera caught him fairly while politely bowing Miss Fenwick into her car.

"GUARDING OLD GLORY" WELL ENDORSED.

"Guarding Old Glory" not only has the endorsements of the various government chiefs, but has the solid backing of the patriotic leagues throughout the country. The following letter from Col. Robert M. Thompson, executive chairman of the Navy League, shows the strength and value of the picture as a drawing card for exhibitors:

"New York, Aug. 23, 1915.

"Mr. F. O. Nielsen,
"Chicago, Ill.

"Dear Sir: I have seen your moving picture, 'Guarding Old Glory.' Every American should see this picture. It is interesting, instructive, and of immense value to the country. The Navy League will co-operate with you in every way to secure a wide publication for the picture. Yours very truly, (Signed) "ROBERT M. THOMPSON,

"Executive Chairman."

KLEINE'S "THE WOMAN NEXT DOOR" BOOKS HEAVILY.

George Kleine's recently completed "The Woman Next Door," featuring Irene Fenwick, is booking heavily throughout the New York state territory as a result of the private showing for exhibitors at the Candler theater last week. Practically every house on Broadway from Greeley Square to Yonkers booked the attraction, the Kleine Offices granting only the usual territorial protection. The entire Marcus Loew and B. S. Moss Circuits, Shea's Hippodrome, the Strand theater, Hartford, Conn., along with representative houses in the principal cities of the East, booked the feature immediately after the showing.

AUGUST TO PRODUCE "THE CITY."

"The City," the well known drama which is to be produced as a motion picture by Edwin August for the F. Ray Comstock Photoplays Company, will be cast this week. Mr. August has made the statement that he prefers to handle motion picture stars than players from the legitimate stage in the pictures which he will produce for the Comstock company, and that he will choose an all star cast of well known screen favorites for "The City."

FIRST GRANDIN FEATURE ON G. F. PROGRAM SEPTEMBER 6.

After more than eight weeks' preparation, the first of a series of two-reel subjects, featuring Miss Ethel Grandin, will be released by George Kleine on the General Film program, commencing September 6th. "Her Secret" is the title of the first release, a vehicle especially chosen for Miss Grandin's entry into the licensed ranks. It is a drama conspicuous for the exceptionally clever work of the star and the splendid supporting company which surrounds her. "Her Secret" will be followed by "The Social Law," "A Woman's Mistake" and "The Mysterious Visitor" at weekly intervals.

Notes of the Trade.

DIRECTOR JOSEPH ADELMAN has finished a five-part feature, "A Continental Girl," for the Continental Photoplay Corporation, Germantown, Pa.

Paul Gilmore, actor-manager, is now in California, where he is being featured in pictures by the Pathe-Balboa Company.

The various branches of the Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Company report a very active business, with many orders booked for immediate and Fall delivery of their new 1916 model. The new machine has several new safeguards against tampering with the tickets.

The Sterling Camera & Film Company's five-part feature "The Game of Three," to be released Sept. 1st, is being quickly signed up by the state right exchange men throughout the country.

Mr. H. S. Mandelbaum has assumed management of the Big Attraction Film Company, Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. H. I. Garson, general manager of the Broadway Feature Film Company, Detroit, Mich., has secured "Silver Threads Among the Gold" and "The Magic Toy Maker" for Michigan. Both are K. & R. features.

Wright Huntington, stock manager, producer and actor, has closed his company at St. Paul, Indianapolis and other Western cities in which he operates, and has returned to New York. He has purchased a summer home in Connecticut, and after a rest of several weeks will begin operations as a motion picture producer. Mr. Huntington, after a course in technical training, will begin making pictures with his own company, appearing in some of the notable releases himself.

"The Cry of the First Born," a three-reel story by Olga Printzlau Clark, is occupying the time of Norman MacDonald and his company of Universal players. The scene of the story is laid in Hawaii, which has called for the construction of a number of elaborate sets at Universal City. William Quinn, W. L. Roger, R. C. Ryles, Jack Curtis, Yona Landowska, Peggy Norris and Antrim Short appear in the leading roles.

William F. Haddock, well known moving picture director of feature films, has placed his signature on a Gaumont contract to direct feature productions for that company. Mr. Haddock began work Wednesday, Aug. 11, at the Flushing, New York, studio.

A recent addition to the stock company at the Reliance studios in Los Angeles is Clyde E. Hopkins, who has had a varied and successful career on the speaking stage.

S. D. Pelzman of Universal fame, who handles the "Neptune's Daughter," "Williamson Submarine" and "Damon and Pythias" films, has returned from a two weeks' vacation spent at Newport and finds the field for feature films very good.

Harold Entwhistle has completed a three-reel film entitled "The Surrender," by L. V. Jefferson of the Pacific Coast Scenario staff. Marie Walcamp, W. Marks, Seymour Zeliff, Helen Wright and Clarence Burton appear in the leading roles.

Working on "The Code of the Mountains," Director Thornby took Mollie King and the company surrounding her to Lake Placid, N. Y., country to get the true mountain atmosphere. During the past winter in the same district "Hearts in Exile" was taken.

Leon Kent is staging a three-reel story featuring Hobart Henley, entitled "The Tenor." The better to secure desired effects, a number of the scenes were taken in the Majestic theater at Los Angeles, where the company staged the second act from "Carmen." Gretchen Lederer, Carmen Phillips and Walter Belasco support Mr. Henley.

All the newsboys in Santa Barbara are film actors in the "Beauty" release entitled "Green Apples," in which Neva Gerber and Webster Campbell play the leading roles. "Green Apples" has to do with stolen fruits and aching "tummies" and a lot of pleasing romance. It will be released Tuesday, Aug. 31.

Grace George's big stage success, "Carnival," which as a novel under the same name was one of the best sellers of its year, is to be Alice Brady's next vehicle in the World Film schedule of releases. It will be called "The Ballet Girl."

Thomas Walsh, assistant director of Universal Company, has joined the Quality Picture Company as assistant director to Mr. W. J. Bowman. Lee Smith, also of Universal, will act as Mr. Walsh's assistant.

Ruth Stonehouse, leading woman with Essanay, was a guest of the manager of the Vaudette theater, Springfield, Ill., Saturday, Aug. 14. She appeared on the stage both afternoon and evening after the showing of the three-reel drama, "When My Lady Smiles," in which Miss Stonehouse stars. She made a short speech to the children and gave sound advice to girls' ambitious to get into motion picture work.

Hobart Bosworth and his company of Universal feature players are working on another big four-reel feature release entitled "Big Bill Brent," in which Mr. Bosworth is cast for the leading role. The scenario for this production was written for Mr. Bosworth himself from the story by Ronald Bradbury.

Miss Margaret Snow has been ill at her home in Hollywood for the past few weeks. Her condition was so serious that an operation was necessary. This will keep her out of "Pennington's Choice," a five-reel production that is now being produced. Miss Helen Wolcott, formerly of the Bosworth Company, will play the leading role.

Cecil Owen, who has been associated with Harry Webster in Chicago, has retired to New York. Mr. Owen is to be associated with the newly formed Municipal Motion Picture Company which is to operate in Waterville, N. Y. He will have charge of a special department devoted to the making of two-reel comedies.

E. J. LeSaint and his company of feature players have returned from a short stay in the back country near Los Angeles and are again busy with the production of a filmization of Peter B. Kyne's "The Long Chance," picturized by Harvey Gates especially to meet the requirements of the Broadway star, Frank Keenan, who is being starred in the leading role. Stella Razeto plays opposite him with Blaising, Church, Newman, Merrill, Benson and Miss Boughton supporting. The film will shortly be released.

In "The Divine Decree," a two-part "Flying A" drama, released Monday, Aug. 30. Winifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen, under Henry Otto's direction, play the leading roles.

Jerold Hevener, formerly with Lubin, Scarlet, Mittenthal Brothers and Colonial, has joined the Wizard Film Corporation as a director of a company which will make comedies featuring well known comedy stars. Mr. Hevener has already finished one picture, "The Crazy Clock Maker," in which Sliding Billy Watson played the lead, supported by Betty Holton, Mabel Paige, Beatrice Miller, Nan Egleson, Myrtle Gilbert, Ray Ford, Myra Brooke, Bab Hardy, Billy Bowers, Charlie Ritchie, Clay Grant, Hod Weston and Walter Schimpf. He is now making a second picture featuring Ed Lee Wrothe. Betty Holton, Alma Mamay, Billy Bletcher and Billy Rouge have been engaged to play regularly with Mr. Hevener.

The K. & R. Film Company's production, "The Magic Toy Maker," featuring Charles T. Aldrich, was shown in a private projection room of the Celebrated Players Film Company in Chicago by R. R. Roberts and the Celebrated Players Company immediately bid for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

In "Drawing the Line," a two reel "Flying A" drama released August 23, Miss Vivian Rich gives an excellent characterization of a young woman who has lost her power of vision. Constant sewing is supposed to have ruined the young girl's eyes. The scene of the film is full of pathos.

Owing to the political situation of the United States and its relations to the other powers of the world, Isadore Bernstein, general director of the Equitable company, has decided not to produce "Madame Mystery," a photodrama written by Marc Edmund Jones for Kathryn Osterman. Instead, Miss Osterman will play the lead in "The Bludgeon," a screen version of the play by Paul Armstrong.

Violet Radcliffe forsakes the role of villain in "The Little Cupids," the latest Majestic kid comedy to be put before the camera. Little Violet becomes very much of a cupid in this photoplay. Carmen De Hue and Georgie Stone, the well-known juvenile "leading" man and woman, appear in the play.

Augustus Phillips, for the first time in his career, plays a "heavy" in the Lee Arthur Edison feature, "June Friday." That, however, is not his first time as a downright mean cuss, theatrically speaking, as some of his best hits on the speaking stage were playing that not well spoken type of gentleman. He does most convincing work in "June Friday."

Miss Mary Lawton, whose splendid work in George Bernard Shaw's "Philanderer" at the New theater won the praise of critics and public, has been secured by the Frohman Amusement Corporation to play the part of the wife in "John Glayde's Honor" in which C. Aubrey Smith is to be starred. This is Miss Lawton's first screen work and Director George Irving expects that her splendid dramatic method will lend itself to the picture play with more than usual force.

Some powerful scenes are presented in the Reliance production, "Farewell to Thee." The title is derived from a translation of the Hawaiian song "Aloha Oe." The native wife is played by Bessie Buskirk. Lucille Younge is the adventuress, while Alberta Lee is a witch. Ray Myers wrote the scenario and directed the production.

Lillian Drew has joined Joseph Byron Totten and his Eastern Company of Essanay players taking special photoplays requiring a setting along the Atlantic coast. Miss Drew is expected to remain with the Eastern Company until its return to Chicago in the fall, playing leading character roles.

Robust George Siegmann, who was recently injured in an automobile accident, has returned to the Reliance-Majestic studio in the best of physical condition. He has resumed his duties of producer and is now engaged on his second Majestic picture, "Hearts and Flowers," with Francelia Billington, W. E. Lawrence, Walter Long, and Howard Gaye as his principal players.

Mary Anderson, one of the younger players of the Vitagraph Company, who has been making rapid advancement as a member of the parent company at Flatbush, has been assigned to play leads with the Western Vitagraph Company at Santa Monica, Cal., under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon. Miss Anderson was born in Brooklyn on June 28, 1897. She first began work for the Vitagraph Company during her school vacation. In sending Miss Anderson to the coast the Vitagraph will add materially to the strength of an already efficient company of players.

Hobart Henley has written a photoplay called "The Man in the Chair." It is being directed by a new man, Leon Kent."

A complete Indian and Mexican village is being constructed at the San Fernando Valley in California, where scenes for "Blood Will Tell," the Griffith feature, starring Douglas Fairbanks, will be filmed. From present indications, Douglas Fairbanks will be a hit when his first picture is shown. He has adapted himself to the technique of the silent drama and goes into his scenes like a veteran film actor. Studio folks admire him greatly for his genial and democratic disposition.

Urges Getting Together

President Fred. J. Herrington of National Exhibitors in Letter to Picture Men Says Personal Differences Should Be Set Aside—Keystone Censors Open Office in Pittsburgh—Many New Theaters and Improvements in Western Pennsylvania.

FRED J. HERRINGTON, the newly-elected president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, who recently arrived in his home city of Pittsburgh from the convention, states that while away he visited many cities and noticed many things that were of vital importance to the motion picture men. His observations are summed up in the following letters to the Exhibitors:

To the Exhibitors:

On my way to and from the National Convention held at San Francisco, I saw many things that were of vital importance to the motion picture interests in general and to the exhibitor in particular. Following are a few of the evils that confront the exhibitors:

First—The showing of motion pictures in cafes and saloons.

Second—Motion pictures in department stores.

Third—Censorship in its drastic form, state, city and town.

Where these evils exist is where the exhibitors are inactive or have no form of organization. Divided, as they are, they become easy prey for all sorts of reformers, political and otherwise, and many of the degraders of our business could be exposed or set aside if we were only organized. Therefore, I appeal to you as men to get together, and I want to say that as National President I am at your command. So set aside your little personal differences; get together and meet the common enemy.

FRED J. HERRINGTON,
President M. P. E. L. of America.

CENSOR OFFICE IN PITTSBURGH.

A local office of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors has been established in the Vandergrift building on Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, in order that violators of laws pertaining to motion pictures may be apprehended and punished. Joseph A. Berrier, chief clerk of the Board of Censors, is in the city getting the work under way and has engaged Miss Florence Wrenshall, of Washington, Pa., who announces that she will soon have a corps of inspectors in working order.

NEW THEATER FOR PITTSBURGH.

A plot of ground measuring 60x93 feet, at 1712 and 1718 Centre avenue, Pittsburgh, has been purchased by B. Weiss, president of the Enterprise Amusement Company, which operates the Victoria theater at Centre avenue and the Rex in East Liberty. The old buildings on this site will be razed and replaced with a moving picture and vaudeville theater as soon as the present leases expire. It is intended that this theater shall be one of the finest in this district.

Mark Browarsky, manager of the company, states that the new house will have a capacity of 1,000 seats and will be one of the finest in the city. The present lease on the Victoria theater expires in eighteen months and it is the intention to abandon that house.

OUTING OF THEATER EMPLOYES

The biggest event from a social standpoint ever participated in by one concern in the motion picture business, and one that will be long and pleasantly remembered, was the outing of the various employes of the Rowland & Clark theaters, given by General Manager Donovan, in Miller's woods, out the Harmony car line, on Sunday, August 15.

FIRE DAMAGES ROYAL.

Fire did $300 damage to the Royal Motion Picture theater at 4411 Butler street, last week, when a film exploded and the flames communicated to the woodwork in the operator's balcony. L. A. Farris, the operator, received burned hands in trying to extinguish the fire, which is thought to have been started through the carbons in the lamp breaking and dropping on some film pieces on the floor. The house was nearly filled with people, but all escaped.

NEW HOUSE FOR WASHINGTON.

M. Conners has added the latest addition to the motion picture business in Washington, Pa., by opening a fine new house on the corner of Main and Chestnut streets. This house is up-to-date in every way and is one of the finest in the city.

NO FILM IN PASSENGER CARS.

Hereafter no films will be allowed in passenger cars on railroads in Pennsylvania. They must be checked as baggage and be forwarded in the baggage car. The new arrangement will prove a source of great inconvenience to exhibitors.

LAWFORD TO MANAGE MORGAN.

Announcement was made this week that C. W. Lawford, who for the past year has been manager of the new $110,000 Bradford theater at Bradford, Pa., has been engaged as manager for the Morgan Grand in Sharon, Pa., for the coming season, succeeding Harry L. Winslow. Lessee John J. Murray, who controls the Warren (Ohio) Opera house, as well as the Morgan Grand, closed negotiations with Mr. Lawford this week, and in securing him will have the services of one of the best known theatrical men in this section.

Manager Lawford formerly had charge of the Reis Circuit's theaters in Elmira, N. Y.; Erie, Columbia and New Castle, Pa.; Lancaster, Ohio; Jamestown, N. Y., and lastly, Bradford, Pa

SARVER WILL ENLARGE COLONIAL.

John H. Sarver, proprietor of the Colonial theater in Braddock, near Pittsburgh, Pa., announces that he expects to enlarge his house this fall, increasing the capacity of the theater by 200 seats. He also states that his new Colonial theater in Swissvale, which was opened in June, is doing an encouraging volume of business.

$100,000 HOUSE FOR PITTSBURGH.

A building permit has been issued to the East Liberty theater company of Pittsburgh, Pa., for a one-story brick and steel theater, at Penn avenue and Pennsylvania railroad, to cost $100,000.

PITTSBURGH NOTES.

The Bellevue theater has installed two new motor-driven Simplex machines, also a Martin rotary converter.

The Star theater in Monessen, Pa., owned by W. A. McShaffrey, is being renovated and remodeled, preparatory to reopening it this week.

In order to make a number of improvements which will make the theater one of the most up to date in the Shenango Valley, the Thomas, in Sharon, Pa., has been closed. Included in the changes to be made are new machines and a new screen.

While the M. H. Blackwell Feature Distributors have been doing business in Pittsburgh for the past month, Manager Fay announces the opening of the office, as this week marks the release of the first new subject, those handled heretofore having been confined exclusively to the list of subjects formerly handled by A. A. Weiland and which were purchased by the Blackwell exchange seven weeks ago.

Mr. Mishler of the Mishler theater, in Altoona, Pa., recently visited New York and while there studied the picture situation, and upon his return announced that he had been very favorably impressed and that within the next few weks he would change the policy of his theater, changing it from vaudeville to motion pictures.

Manager H. G. Brown, of the Star theater in Mercer, Pa., closed this house last week for the purpose of renovating, remodeling and adding of new equipment. Two new Power 6-A machines and a Mirroroide screen will be important improvements. This house seats 1,000 people, and when it is reopened in September a policy of high-class feature pictures, with changes daily, will be instituted.

M. Janicki is building a moving picture theater at Ingram, near Pittsburgh, Pa., to be opened in the near future.

Ike Berney, who is the lessee and manager of the Pastime in Lewistown, Pa., has taken a lease on the Opera House in this city, and is thoroughly remodeling it. When finished it will be devoted exclusively to a feature program. It will be known in future as The Temple.

The new motion picture theater which is rapidly nearing completion in Burrgettstown, Pa., is owned by Henry Tenneyson.

Ludwig Hommel & Company, at 422 First avenue, Pittsburgh, have again increased the size of their office and showroom.

The Luna theater at Mt. Union, Pa., has discontinued its vaudeville policy and is running a straight picture program.

James Steele has returned to the Smoky City after spending a week at the Paramount offices in New York.

JAMES STEELE RETURNS.

James Steele, president of the Famous Players Film Service and vice-president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation of Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Chicago, has returned to his home in Pittsburgh after a four weeks' auto tour, which covered six states. Mr. Steele himself drove his machine the entire distance, 2,500 miles, and although the roads were bad not an accident was encountered. He was accompanied by his wife and two sons.

IN SMOKY CITY CIRCLES.

An attractive moving picture theater is under course of construction at Ambridge, Pa., and will be completed within the next six weeks. The venture is being financed by M. Goldstein, a merchant of that place. The house will have a seating capacity of 600 and will be equipped in an up-to-date manner throughout.

The Bellevue Cameraphone, Lincoln avenue, near Rogers, recently added to the Rowland & Clark chain of theaters, has been rechristened The Bellevue. "The Ordeal" and "East Lynne," both owned by the Liberty Film Renting Company, were attractions shown lately with great success Manager Kirsch states. Architects are now working on plans for remodeling the house. An attractive new front will be put in, the entire building will be redecorated and a new heating system will be installed.

E. G. Kellet, who formerly owned and operated the Princess theater, at Canonsburg, Pa., has been engaged as special representative of the Grelle Feature Film Co. He is now on his initial trip on the main line east of Harrisburg and the surrounding territory.

The Weiland Film Company, 115 Fourth avenue, is in a particularly strong position to meet the ever-growing want for Chaplin films. This concern has about forty subjects on hand, many of which are two-reelers, and they also have quite a number of duplicate prints.

The Somerset Opera House, Somerset, Pa., recently leased by C. B. Pascoe, has been remodeled and redecorated in a pleasing manner. Mr. Pascoe, who is a well-known exhibitor and operates a chain of houses in West Virginia, has opened his newly acquired theater and is offering a high-class program of features daily.

E. C. Rockwell, manager of the Pittsburgh Metropolitan Booking Offices, is attending the Mid-West Theatrical Men's Convention in Chicago, August 12 to 14. While there he will probably secure some new film features for the local office.

INDIANA EXCHANGE FOR PATHE

By Indiana Trade News Service.

The Pathe Exchange, Incorporated, has opened a new branch office in the Willoughby Building, Indianapolis. The exchange rooms make one of the best equipped suites in the city for exchange purposes. In the same building are the Empress Film Company, Blache Feature Service and the World Film Corporation exchanges. J. C. Lytle, who has been the Indianapolis representative of the Pathe company since January 1, is the local manager. The company has placed C. E. Edwards, traveling director of exchanges, in Indianapolis to assist in organizing the office. He will be here for about ten days. The company expects to put two men on the road in Indiana.

This is the first branch office to be opened by the Pathe company since it was incorporated, as all the present exchanges of the company were already established as Eclectic exchanges when taken over by the Pathe company.

CHAPLIN LICKING RUM DEMON.

Motion pictures seem to be a foe of the liquor traffic as evidenced by statements of saloonkeepers at Hammond and West Hammond, Ind., who are complaining that business is going from bad to worse, despite the fact that the railroads and industries are taking their men back. "If you want to know who is hurting the saloons worse than any other man," said one saloonkeeper, "I can name him for you. He is Charley Chaplin."

FAMILY THEATER SURE ENOUGH

David Butts, owner of the Pastime theater, Carbon, Ind., besides managing the house, runs the gasoline engine that generates current for the picture machine. Mrs. Butts sells tickets and is cashier. Orvill runs the player piano when the other son, Arthur, is not present. Ira, a third son, plays the drums. Miss Waneta, the youngest daughter, takes tickets. The house is popular.

NEWS NOTES FROM INDIANA.

A new theater being built in Topeka, Ind., will seat 250.

O. J. Lambiotte has sold his theater, the Joy, to T. W. Dees of Browns Valley, Ind. The Joy is one of the most popular houses in Crawfordsville. Mr. Lambiotte may go to Louisville, where he said he had been offered the management of one of the largest houses in the city.

The Buschman-Traub Company, Indianapolis, has incorporated with $5,000 capital stock to operate moving picture shows; directors, F. W. Buschmann, C. R. Traub and S. K. Ruick.

Stockholders of the Jefferson Theater Company, Goshen, Ind., have lost practically all they invested. The theater was built in 1905 at a cost of $50,000. It burned in 1906 and was rebuilt at a cost of about $70,000 and before it was completed a mortgage of $30,000 was given the Elkhart Trust Company, which foreclosed in 1914. A few days ago the Trust company sold the property to Charles J. Allardt of South Bend for between $30,000 and $35,000. Mr. Allardt will run pictures and vaudeville, making the house a continuous performance house.

The theaters in Logansport, Ind., have been open two Sundays in succession, with the opposition making threats they will be stopped, but taking no action in the form of affidavits to stop them. There seems to be disagreement among the antis as to who shall sign the affidavits. It seems to be unanimously agreed that Dr. Charles Nelson will do it, and Dr. Nelson says he will "in due time."

The Wonderland theater, Clinton, is to give a ten-cent picture one night a week to test out sentiment on the price question.

Wallace Sawyer, proprietor of the Grand, Bluffton, Ind., has leased the E. S. Walmer room at Bluffton and will open a picture show about September 10. Messrs. Smith & Tangemann plan to continue operation of the Grand after Mr. Sawyer's lease expires.

Perry W. Horton, musical director and one of the owners of the Airdome at Rensselaer, Ind., was married Sunday to Leone Witham Cowger of Ft. Wayne. They will live in Rensselaer.

E. R. Fuller has sold his picture house at Summittville, Ind., to J. O. Mallen.

The Crystal theater, Columbus, Ind., is to be remodeled. The Knights of Pythias lodge has let the contract for the improvement. The remodeled house will have a seating capacity of 800.

Mayor Johnson of Gary, Ind., the steel city on the sands near Chicago, is to conduct his campaign for nomination on the Republican ticket for Governor of Indiana with moving pictures.

In a name contest at Burnettsville, Ind., William Duffey won the $5 prize for a theater name with "The Cosmo." He explains that the little theater is a place "to see the world." Manager A. J. Perigo is well pleased. He will give a ten cent show once a week.

The Jefferson School, Gary, Ind., has installed a picture machine as part of the school equipment.

The Colonial, Vincennes, under the management of Bruce Kixmiller and Harry Mitchell, is undergoing extensive repairs. A balcony to seat 200 is being added. Vaudeville will be run in addition to pictures.

Newlin and Wicker of the Star theater, Carmel, Ind., are to have charge of the public square shows to be given every Wednesday night.

Manager Matthews of the Airdome, Monticello, Ind., is trying to make a feature night for auto parties of every Friday, but wet weather has stepped in regularly. Fortunately for Matthews he has the local opera house and always gets a gate, whatever the weather.

John Dumbauld has released the rooms occupied by the Princess and Empress theaters to T. Guy Perfect, Huntington, Ind., manager of the Huntington Motion Picture Company. The lease is for five years.

Richard Harding Davis' "The Lost House" was the opening attraction at the Star, Edgar Allen's new theater in Sullivan, Ind. Mr. Allen will make a specialty of Saturday matinees, using high priced films, appealing to the farm population.

The Goshen Amusement Company, South Bend, Ind., has been incorporated with $1,500 capital stock. The directors are Charles J. Allardt, S. H. Miller and George Harrop. The company will operate the Jefferson theater, recently bought by Mr. Allardt.

John Thomas will take possession of the Irving theater, 5507 East Washington street, Indianapolis. Thomas leased from O. M. Moore.

SCREEN SUBMERGING STAGE.

Moving Picture Houses in Kansas City Displacing the Spoken Drama—Only Two Straight Legitimate Houses Now Remaining.

MOVING pictures are rapidly usurping the stage in Kansas City. The Shubert theater and the Auditorium are the only theaters that will play dramas this season. The Auditorium has a stock company. The Century theater, which usually opens the first of September with burlesque, has made no announcement, and it is thought Joe Donnegan will continue to show moving pictures there this winter, as they have proved profitable. The Grand will open September 1 with feature photoplays. The vaudeville entertainers have been replaced at the German village at Electric park by feature moving pictures. The Hippodrome is now in bankruptcy, and no announcement has been made of an opening this season. The Empress, under the management of the Martin-Estes Film Company of Chicago, has proved so good as a moving picture show that the company will continue to show pictures instead of the popular priced vaudeville shows. The Globe and Orpheum will open with vaudeville and moving pictures this fall. All the other theaters in the city are moving pictures, about 300 strong.

STATE NORMAL TO USE FILMS.

The moving picture will become an instructor in the Kansas State Manual Training Normal at Pittsburg, Kan., at the beginning of the fall term next month. Every week films will be used by the entire student body for a class, it is expected. The Normal already owns a fine machine. Educational films will predominate in the programs which will be given, but there will be other pictures to amuse and entertain. The shows will be free to the students and the public.

Pictures also will be used in the Normal extension work. Slides are being prepared and used in extension work by means of a simple projectoscope.

GIVES CHILDREN A HOLIDAY.

Balie P. Waggener of Atchison, Kan., who was 68 years old July 17, leased every moving picture theater in his city for the entire day and invited all the children from the surrounding country to make themselves at home. Throughout the day the children kept coming.

Detroit Under New Rules

Annual License Fee Reduced from $50 to $25, But Exhibitors Must Install Fire Alarm Boxes—Fire Marshal Bans Theater Front Cloth Advertising Signs—Goldstein to Have Seven Houses.

THE minor exhibitors of Detroit are working under new rules and regulations. One ordinance recently passed by the common council has reduced the annual license fee from $50 to $25. Another ordinance makes it compulsory for all minor theaters to install fire alarm boxes, the cost of which to maintain is $25 per year. The exhibitor is really nothing ahead, because what he saves by one ordinance he has to pay out the other way. Those minor theaters who already had installed the fire alarm boxes will save the cost of installation. The credit for reducing the license fee goes to Peter J. Jeup, former president of the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and part owner of the Luna theater. For years the minor exhibitors have been installing fire alarm boxes and paying the $25 annually, although there was no ordinance covering it. Mr. Jeup refused to pay this year and made a test case of the matter, which was taken into court. A decision favorable to Mr. Jeup and the minor exhibitors was rendered. The fire alarm backers got busy immediately and were behind an ordinance compelling the installation of fire alarm boxes. The councilmen were induced to vote yes on the measure on the argument of fire prevention.

Now the exhibitors are confronted with the proposition of eliminating all cloth advertising signs from in front of their theaters under penalty of the state fire marshal's ruling. It will mean that they will have to remove all cloth signs of any description, and in many instances will put exhibitors to a lot of expense in remodeling their fronts, building new frames, etc. As for the exchange men, some of them will lose considerable money, as most of them have considerable cloth stock on hand, which will be a total loss. One exchange man told the writer that he had a stock of more than $20,000 cloth signs. The exhibitors held a meeting Aug. 17, and it is likely the matter will be taken into court, to find out whether or not it is constitutional for the state fire marshal to make such a ruling and enforce it. The annual inspection of motion picture theaters starts Sept. 10, and Detroit is the first town on the list. The exhibitors will endeavor to get some action before that time, otherwise the state fire marshal's deputies will endeavor to carry out the new requirements.

FASHION SHOW DRAWS CROWDS.

The Fashion Show at the Washington theater, Detroit, in conjunction with the regular film feature, the week of Aug. 15, proved such a drawing card that on several nights it was necessary to close the box office and absolutely refuse admission on the second show. All records for the Washington for attendance were broken during the week. Manager Starr arranged the stage to suit the occasion, the scene representing that of a high-class ready-to-wear shop. Living models walked back and forth, showing everything new in outer garments, to the accompaniment of well-selected music. It was the first style show of its kind ever held in Detroit. It was so successful there will be more each year. Even the merchants who collaborated with the theater in putting on the show reported that it brought them additional business.

CAILLE BROTHERS BUSY.

Caille Brothers, of Detroit, are being flooded with responses to their double page advertisement in last week's issue of The Moving Picture World. As noted, this concern manufactures electric ticket sellers, ticket choppers, ticket boxes, ticket theater records and other theater ticket devices. They have been installed in the Majestic and other new theaters in Detroit and Michigan, and have proved highly satisfactory.

LONG CONTRACTS IN DISFAVOR.

After an interview with several of the leading exhibitors in Detroit, the writer is fully convinced that the tendency of the exhibitors is not to tie up for a definite period for first-run pictures. One exhibitor put it this way: "Why should we sign up with one producing company? The business is too uncertain. There are too many changes. Consolidations take place overnight. New concerns are bringing out features that give promise of better things. If you tie up with one company you may get a class of pictures later that are not suited to your house, or you may see something you like better. If there were only a few producing companies, and the exhibitor was sure there wouldn't be any more and that these few were absolutely certain to remain in business, then there would be some justification for signing one by contract. But the uncertainty of the business makes us believe that it is better to book features from week to week and get the best we can for the money, even though we do have to pay a little more than we would were we signed up by contract with only one house." This statement refers to houses that are downtown and that play a feature an entire week.

GOLDSTEIN TO HAVE SEVEN HOUSES.

Harry Goldstein, formerly connected with the Majestic building, Detroit, and who is behind a project to build a theater at Grand River and Sixth streets, to be called the Astor, told the Moving Picture World representative that he had plans under way for three more theaters in Detroit, that he had practically closed for the property, and that he would build a total of seven theaters in Detroit to be devoted exclusively to motion pictures.

"I will announce something before the end of the month on these new theaters, and when some of the locations are made known they will open the eyes of many," said Mr. Goldstein. "All of them will be built amphitheater style and will have large seating capacities. I also will have a theater outside of Detroit. You can say positively the new Astor will be built. We will get possession of the property as soon as the baking company moves into its new building. We will use the present walls, thus saving about $50,000."

WOODWARD OPEN 15 HOURS DAILY.

The Woodward, Woodward avenue, near the Campus Martius, Detroit, owned by the Henry S. Koppin Company, is the only moving picture theater in Michigan which opens its doors at 8 o'clock in the morning. Shows are continuous until 11 at night, which means that the house is closed only nine hours out of each day. An admission price of five cents is charged.

CAILLE & GUTHARD IN METRO.

A. Arthur Caille and Henry J. Guthard have purchased the stock of Charles M. Davie in the Michigan Company of the Metro Film Corporation, which gives them 50 per cent. interest. It is their intention to move from the Equity building to larger quarters, probably on Jefferson avenue. It is not announced who will be placed in charge, although a well-known manager now connected with one of the Detroit exchanges has been mentioned for the place. Messrs. Caille and Guthard are large stockholders and officers of the Majestic theater, and also own the Fine Arts theater, which they recently acquired. Mr. Caille is also president of the Maxine Theater Company and is a member of the firm of Caille Brothers, makers of Caille theater ticket devices.

DETROIT EXPECTS BIG SEASON.

There is every reason to believe that the coming fall and winter seasons are going to be the best in the history of the motion picture industry so far as Detroit is concerned. Business right now is far ahead of last year, despite the numerous people who are at outside summer resorts for the season and the thousands taking their annual vacations. There will be some new theaters in operation by fall, but a number of small ones built in the early days of the industry will discontinue, and with the increase in population it cannot be said that the total seating capacity in proportion to the city's population will be any greater. Detroit is unquestionably today one of the best moving picture towns in the United States.

DETROIT NOTES.

Abe E. Siegel, manager of the Detroit office of the Fox Film Corporation, was married on Sunday, August 15, to Miss Lena S. Levy, of Philadelphia. After a honeymoon trip to New York, Atlantic City and Washington, Mr. and Mrs. Siegel have returned to Detroit.

H. M. Hoffman of the Universal Company was in Detroit on August 13th.

C. W. Masterman, for the past three years associated with A. J. Gilligham theaters in Grand Rapids, has come to Detroit to manage the Empire theater, also owned by Mr. Gilligham. Mr. Masterman succeeds H. W. Smith, who resigned to became manager of the Grand Circus theater, owned by A. W. Blankmeyer. Mr. Masterman recently spent six weeks in the East for the purpose of getting new ideas.

MICHIGAN THEATER DOINGS.

E. M. Brown, of Grand Rapids, Mich., will at once commence the erection of a new theater on Stocking avenue. It will be 40 by 90 feet, one story high, of brick construction, seating 500. The architect is Pierre Lindhout. Contracts have been let for the remodeling of the Empress theater, Muskegon, Mich., which will double the capacity of the house. Three thousand dollars will be spent in remodeling the Columbia theater, Grand Rapids, one of the improvements to be a steel ceiling. August Kleist and Son (A. J. Kleist), of Pontiac, Mich., proprietors of the Howland and Eagle theaters, have taken an option on property on South Saginaw street for a period of sixty days. If the deal goes through the present building on the property will be replaced by a three-story substantial brick structure with a theater in the rear and stores in front. Architects Ladue & Rahles are preparing plans for a brick and terra cotta theater building to be erected in Pontiac. Col. W. S. Butterfield has leased the new Franklin theater in Saginaw for motion pictures. He is also having improvements made to the Jeffers and Bijou theaters in Saginaw, which he controls.

MICHIGAN SHORT NOTES.

The new Cooper street school building in Jackson will be the first in that city to be equipped for using motion pictures. If the plan is a success it will be extended to all the other schools in Jackson.

Bert C. Whitney, of Detroit, has succeeded E. R. Smith as manager of the Post theater at Battle Creek.

The Isis Theater Company, of Grand Rapids, which will erect the new Isis, at Monroe and Crescent avenues, in that city, has been incorporated with capital stock of $45,000. The incorporators are John W. Goodspeed and George C. and William S. Nichols.

H. E. Rehfield, who recently sold the Caldwell theater, at St. Joseph, has purchased the Stadium theater, at Eighteenth street and Blue Island avenue, in Chicago.

Edward Winkelmeyer, of Beacon Hill, who has been operating a motion picture show at the Beacon Hill school, has purchased a tent and will operate under canvas.

The addition to the Vaudette, at Nashville, which increases the seating capacity by 250, and adds a stage for vaudeville, has been completed and the house reopened.

The Eagle theater is the new name of what was the Star, in Hancock, Charles A. Schwarz having taken a lease and reopened the house. A coupon is given with each admission, forty of which entitle the holder to a dozen photographs at the Schwarz studio.

The Ideal theater, at Grand Rapids, is installing a new front.

The Columbia theater at Grand Rapids is getting $3,000 worth of improvements. One of them is a steel ceiling.

The Frank Farrington Company, of Detroit, has been awarded the contract for the erection of the Regent theater building for the Paul J. Schlossman Amusement Company, of Muskegon, Mich. The contract price was $55,000. It is expected to have the theater operating by December 15.

The police have been asked to look for Mrs. Ella Hooper, of Ann Arbor, who left that city in June for California, after which she was to go to Egypt as a scenario writer for a motion picture company. She has not been heard from since.

John T. Connors, who is interested in six motion picture houses in Chicago, has purchased the Gem theater at Hartford and will operate it in connection with his chain. He is contemplating erecting a new house in Hartford next spring.

The Delmont theater at Cheboygan had pictures of 1,000 local persons and industires as a two days' attraction.

Harry S. Goseline has sold Harry's theater on North Washington avenue, in Saginaw to Clyde Crampton, owner of the Washington theater in Saginaw. A five-piece orchestra will be featured by the new management.

Merchants of Laurium are giving tickets with purchases and entertaining their customers on Monday and Friday afternoons at the People's theater.

Ellison & Johnson have opened the Butterfly theater at St. Ignace, a modern photoplay house. It will be operated as a five and ten-cent house with no increase for features.

Charles Stofer has sold the Family theater at Ionia to Frederick Jacobi, who recently disposed of his photoplay house at Sheboygan, Wis.

The Wolverine Amusement Company of Jackson has been incorporated with a capital stock of $20,000.

H. M. Marvin, of the National Educational Film Company of Detroit, filmed Alpena citizens and scenes for exhibition at the Rex theater.

Gilbert Genesta, proprietor of the Genesta theater at Ithaca, has purchased the motion picture theater at Breckenridge.

The new Strand theater has been opened at Battle Creek, Nat. C. Goodwin in "The Master Hand" being the initial attraction. A feature is the operating room which is composed of asbestos lumber and crushed rock. Two Power 6-A cameragraphs and one Iris double dissolver are used. A Kimball pipe organ has been installed.

Henry Fisher, who has been operating a motion picture show at the village hall in Plymouth, and W. J. Thompson, manager of the Alswum theater at Northville, have formed a partnership to operate a show at Plymouth. "The Christian" and "Cabiria" are early bookings.

The Censor theater, the newest theater at Albion, has been opened with a Paramount program.

MORE HOUSES FOR MICHIGAN.

Work on Detroit's $60,000 Stratford Progressing—Stock Now Being Sold for Building the Astor in Same City.

IT LOOKS very much as if Harry Goldstein, promoter of the Astor Theater Company, of Detroit, which proposes to erect a big structure at Grand River avenue and Bagg street, often described in the World, had fully intended to go through with the project. Stock for the enterprise is now being placed on the market.

Work is progressing satisfactorily on the new Stratford theater, Dix and Ferdinand avenues, by the Dix Theater Company, at a cost of approximately $60,000. The type of design resembles the Italian Renaissance. The structure will have a frontage of 60 feet and a depth of 130 feet and will be of fireproof construction with steel frame and reinforced concrete floors and roof. The exterior will be faced with cream terra cotta and brick, trimmed with colored terra cotta in recessed panels. Entrance doors and box office will be mahogany finished, the lower part of the box office being in marble. A marquise will project over the sidewalk, ornamented with concealed lights recessed in glass panels. Night illumination will be made attractive by concealed lights in the cornices of the building.

GILLIGHAN'S HOUSE A BEAUTY.

New Majestic Gardens at Grand Rapids Will Have Italian Garden Effect on Stage—New House for Ishpeming.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

MANY distinctive features are embodied in A. J. Gillighan's New Majestic Gardens at Grand Rapids, scheduled to open August 28. The general effect is that of an Italian garden, with vine-covered trellises and a large electrical fountain in the center of the stage. The color scheme is in keeping with the general effect, old ivory and gold, old rose and French gray, with expensive draperies and curtains, the complete effects being worked out by Frederick Drouillard, of Detroit, a well-known expert on color schemes.

The lobby is decorated with thirty oil paintings of the favorite film stars of the day, in addition to two groups of Italian statuary. The sound-proof operating booth, which has been constructed in the center of the rear of the floor, is composed of concrete, hollow tile and fire brick and is the largest ever built in Michigan. It is so completely enclosed in fireproof materials that even the projection is done through heavy plate glass. On either side of the booth are to be roomy "auto boxes" for the accommodation of parties. These will be tastefully decorated and will be named after the famous makes of automobiles. The music will be one of the strongest features. An orchestra of ten pieces has been engaged and Ferdinand Warner will preside at the great duplex pipe organ.

NEW HOUSE FOR ISHPEMING.

C. J. Butler, manager of the Ishpeming theater at Ishpeming, is going ahead with plans to erect a new motion picture theater on Main street in that city. Architect D. Fred Charlton, of Marquette, who designed the distinctive Delft theaters at Marquette and Munising, has been commissioned to draw plans. It will be 35x105 and will seat about 800, of which 600 will be on the main floor. This new house and the present Ishpeming will enable Mr. Butler to handle 1,700 persons at a time.

NORTH CAROLINA NEWS.

S. A. Lynch, of Asheville, has returned from a visit in New York City, where he booked service for the various houses in which he is interested.

The Charlotte branch of the United Film Service has been closed and all business connected with that office will hereafter be taken care of from Washington, D. C.

C. O. Moss, formerly manager of the branch, is now with the Pathe exchange of Washington and will cover Virginia and a part of North Carolina for that company. W. C. Godsey, formerly assistant manager of the branch, is now with the Washington office.

G. F. Daniel, formerly manager of the Charlotte branch of the Greater New York Film Rental Company, is now connected with the Piedmont Amusement Company, and is in Greensooro.

The Southern Paramount Company has opened a branch in Charlotte as a suboffice of the Atlanta office, and Mr. Wilkes has gone from the latter place to take charge of the business in Charlotte.

The Point Theater, in High Point, formerly operated by the Piedmont Amusement Company, has been purchased by P. C. McIntyre, president of the Rose Theater Company of that place.

The Piedmont Theater at Charlotte has been closed and will remain dark for five weeks during which time it will be redecorated, repainted and various alterations made to increase the comfort of its patrons.

J. B. Craver, the popular manager of the Broadway Theater, Charlotte, is to leave that city for a season and go to Lynchburg, Va., to take charge of the Craver motion picture interests there. L. F. Valley, who has been with the Lynchburg house for several months, will succeed him. Mr. Craver is a brother of R. D. Craver, proprietor of the Broadway and a large shareholder in the Piedmont Amusement Company, which operates the Piedmont in Charlotte and other moving picture theaters elsewhere. Mr. Valley, the new manager, is a former student at Chapel Hill.

Otto Haas, operating the Ottoway Theater, Charlotte, is now using a full feature program.

A fourteen-foot mirror screen was last week installed in the new Howard & Wells theater, on Front Street, Wilmington. It was necessary to tear away a small portion of the front of the house in order to get the screen inside.

The National Film Company, of Baltimore, Md., it is said, may open a branch office in Wilmington for the production of feature films. Miss Margaret Cahill, president of that company, is reported to hav stated that the concern has heretofore confined its efforts to the making of industrial pictures, but that she recently had an interview with Tom Moore, and that he would in all probability become affiliated with the National Film Company as director. Other members of the concern who were in Wilmington last week during the convention of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League were William A. Gerber, general manager; Harry F. Daley, special representative, and Arthur Kurnick, cameraman.

LEXINGTON STRAND NEARLY READY.

M. Switow, president of the new Phoenix Amusement company, of Lexington, Ky., reports that the Strand theater will be completed on or about October 1. Louis Zoeller, formerly of Chicago, is general manager of the new theater, which has been in course of construction for several months. Work was tied up for a time, due to the failure of a contracting concern which had the job. The new theater will be one of the largest in the state and will have a seating capacity of 1,500. The lower floor will seat 1,050, while 450 seats will be provided on the balcony.

Pathe to Contest Ruling

Head of Concern's New Jersey Office Will Go Into Court and Try to Upset Edict of Commerce Commission Declaring Films Must Be Shipped as Express—Other New Jersey News.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Interstate Commerce Commission having ruled that films will not be allowed on trains unless shipped by express, Howard Peck, a local lawyer representing a prominent moving picture house, will request the Board of Public Utilities Commissioners to pass upon the reasonableness of the act, which would not take the films off the trains, but merely limit the shipment of them by express.

Practically all the exchange men and exhibitors contend that the possibility of accident are remote, insomuch as the films are wound on metal reels, and carried in metal cases, which are impenetrable and absolutely fireproof. There is little danger of fire because no smoking is allowed on the tubes, over which road most of the messengers travel with the films. The local exhibitors point to the fact that there have been no cases of films igniting on trains since the practice was started several years ago.

According to J. B. McNally, manager of Keeny's theater, several managers have banded together, and hired an automobile truck for the transportation of the films. This method, however, is not as desirable, because it would be much better if each theater could send its own messenger, who would be personally responsible for the prompt and safe delivery of the films. Then again the expense would be $3 per week for each house.

A test case of the new law will be made of the arrest of Samuel Kaiser, employed by the Pathe Exchange, of 288 Market street. Kaiser was arrested in New York City while carrying several reels from the local branch to the main office of the company in Manhattan. Leo Singer, manager of the Pathe interests in New Jersey, will probably employ every means for winning this test case.

BABIES CONTEST IN SCENARIO.

The Scenario theater, Newark, N. J., under the personal direction of Mr. and Mrs. Ansbach, is conducting a babies' contest. Gold prizes to the value of $30 will be awarded the lucky contestants. Last Monday a moving picture of all the babies entered in the contest was taken, and later exhibited at the theater. The contest, which will end September 15, has proved itself very popular in the Roseville section, and has added much to the patronage of the Scenario.

ORPHEUM NOW PICTURE HOUSE

The Orpheum theater, which for three years has been occupied by a stock company, opened its doors Saturday with a new policy, that of showing first run pictures. Morris B. Schlesinger will direct the affairs of the newest exclusive showhouse in Newark. The house has been thoroughly renovated and cleaned.

SHOWS HEALTH PICTURES.

Under the auspices of the Irvington (N. J.) Board of Health moving pictures of tuberculosis conditions were shown last week before crowds of interested spectators. So great, in fact, was the interest evidenced in the moving picture exhibit that the film, originally intended to be shown only one week, was ordered to be exhibited one more night by the board. The Essex County Mosquito Extermination Commission also showed pictures displaying its activity in ridding the county of the pest.

NEW HOUSE FOR MORRISTOWN.

The Park theater, which is being built for former Assemblyman James J. Lyons, on the site of the Park House, in Park street, Morristown, N. J., is rapidly nearing completion. The seating capacity will be 1,200. A ventilation system has been installed. The house will be devoted to vaudeville and moving pictures.

PASSAIC'S PLAYHOUSE TO OPEN.

Under the management of Leslie G. Baldwin, the United States Playhouse, Main street, Passaic, will open August 30. The Playhouse, which formerly showed exclusive first-run feature films, will this season change to a vaudeville house, but will continue to show high-class pictures between the acts.

ODEON THEATER TO CHANGE.

It is announced that the Odeon theater, Springfield and South Orange avenues, Newark, N. J., will next season adopt a straight moving-picture policy. The Odeon ran burlesque shows last season with disastrous results, and finished the season with pictures. William Okin, the manager, contemplates giving a continuous performance.

JERSEY JOTTINGS.

Henry Siegel is the new manager of the New Jersey branch of the World Film Corporation, with offices in the Strand theater building, Newark.

The Supreme Features, whose offices are in the Strand theater building, has opened up a branch known as the Diamond Film Company, at 607 Broad street. H. D. Smith, and F. D. Hunt are the managers.

Loew's theater, Springfield avenue, is showing first class feature films in connection with the regular vaudeville show.

The North End Community Boys' Work Association will show moving pictures for the next three weeks. The pictures will be shown out of doors at four centers. The chosen places are Seventh Avenue School, Webster School, Franklin School, and also in a vacant lot in the Silver Lake section of the city.

AMONG MAINE PICTURE MEN.

Emmett Corrigan Returns to Stage—Portland Musicians Ask Pay Increase—Griffith Film to Be Shown in Portland.

By John P. Flanagan.

EMMETT CORRIGAN, who has been spending his vacation at Corrigan Lodge, Verona Island, Bucksport, Me., has returned to New York very unexpectedly for rehearsals of a new play, "Our Children," in which he is to star. It was not to be produced until Oct. 1, but Oliver Morosco, the producer, has changed his plans, and it will open in New York about Sept. 6. George Lessey, a director of the Universal Film Company, was in Bucksport recently to see about doing a picturization of "Caleb West, Master Driver," from the book by F. Hopkinson Smith. The plans were under way, but Mr. Corrigan had to cancel them, as he got word to report for rehearsals from Mr. Morosco, he having Mr. Corrigan under contract for "Our Children."

Manager Arthur A. Allen of the Palace theater, Bangor, has taken a yearly contract with the World Film Company, to use one of its five-reel features weekly.

Earle B. Tinker, local manager for the Phoenix Film Corporation of Massachusetts, returned last week from a conference in Boston. Mr. Tinker advises that the Phoenix has had a very good summer, and, in spite of the heavy buying which has been necessary, that a good dividend has been paid. The Phoenix will continue to release one big feature each week, and will also continue the Chaplin comedies at the rate of two releases each week.

The musicians of Portland theaters have asked for an increase in salary. Both Manager George I. Appleby of the Empire and Manager James W. Greely of Greely's have expressed their willingness to meet the demands of the musicians. Manager W. E. Reeves of the Strand and Manager Moxley Blumenburg of the Portland theater did not state positively what their action would be. The attitude of the majority of Portland's managers, so far as has been ascertained, is friendly to their musicians rather than otherwise.

"The Birth of a Nation" is to be seen at Keith's theater, Portland, for the entire week of August 30. This is the first definite announcement that the subject will be shown in Maine.

FROM THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, of the Treasury Department, has just rendered a preliminary report to the Secretary of the Treasury which shows that during the fiscal year which ended June 30 last $789,997.07 was paid in by theaters, museums and concert halls, while exhibitions "not otherwise provided for" under the law added $15,414.36. No separate mention is made in the reference to the former sum with respect to motion picture theaters, but naturally these contributed by far the greater proportion. In all probability a re-enactment of this tax law will be sought shortly after the convening of Congress in December as the provisions of the present law expire at the end of that month.

Ned Spitzer, special representative of the Fox Film Corporation, of New York, and Jerome Abrams, of the same concern, who have been traveling through the West, were visitors at the local office On leaving the city they went to Louisville, Ky., where Mr. Abrams is located, prior to making a tour of the cities in which the corporation maintains offices for the purpose of installing a new booking system.

The Prominent Stars Feature Film Company, formerly of 418 Ninth street, is now located at 903 E street, northwest.

An airdome exclusively for negroes has been opened in Deanwood by Francis Wells.

VIRGINIA NOTES.

The Smart Set Film Company was last week incorporated at Alexandria, under the laws of the State of Virginia, with a maximum and minimum capital stock of $100,000. The object of he company is to engage in the production of motion picture films, etc. The officers are Alfred Higbee, president, and F. W. Sprague, secretary, both of Washington, D. C.

The Piedmont Theater Company, operating a string of houses in the south, has recently taken over the Broadway Theater at Danville. Paul E. Castelberry is the manager.

The Superior Theater in Richmond will hereafter run only big productions, according to W. F. Harris, manager of that house.

It is reported that Mrs. A. E. Thorpe has disposed of her interest in the Rex Theater in Richmond.

Business throughout Virginia during the summer months has not been all that could be desired, but a large amount of capital is being invested in the industry, in many instances by those familiar with it. A number of the larger exhibitors are enthusiastic over prospects, and it is predicted that with the coming of cooler weather it will be found that the houses will be enjoying increased patronage.

The Strand Theater of Richmond has been reopened with R. S. Welch, a well-known theater man of that city, as manager.

A change has just been effected in the ownership of the Lyric Theater, in Blackburg, J. A. Barnes having purchased the interest of J. B. Fogelman in the business. The remodeling of this house has just been completed and its attractiveness is much enhanced by the elevation of the tiers of seats, the installation of a better ventilating system, and the placing of an electric arch above the front entrance of the theater.

CHANGES IN ATLANTA OFFICES.

Charles E. Kessnich Becomes Manager of the Mutual and A. C. Bromberg Goes to Triangle.

By A. M. Beatty, Georgia Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CHARLES E. KESSNICH, a theatrical executive for years and identified in a number of the South's successful theaters, has been appointed manager of the Atlanta office of the Mutual Film Corporation, and took charge August 15. The office carries supervision also of the Charlotte, N. C., and Tampa, Fla., branches. Mr. Kessnich succeeds A. C. Bromberg, who resigns to manage the Atlanta office of the new Triangle Film Corporation..

The Atlanta division of the Mutual organization is one of the most active in the south. The new manager is thoroughly versed in its direction, having been attached to the Atlanta office for the past thirteen months, as well as having had previous experience with the Mutual service. When the Mutual inagurated its feature department Mr. Kessnich was installed as director of features for Atlanta, Charlotte and Tampa divisions.

V. L. Walker, camera man of the Scenic Film Company, who is in charge of the making of the picture for the Georgia Chamber of Commerce to set forth the resources of the Empire State of the South, left Tuesday morning for Rome, LaFayette, Buchanan, Sargent, Chipley and Griffin, to take scenes. Parts of the film already completed have been run for inspection, and it is declared to be one of the finest pieces of camera work ever put on a screen in Atlanta.

Harry Williams, who for the last year or so has been connected with moving picture houses at Eatonton, Ga., has bought a moving picture theater at Jackson, Ga., and will take possession this week.

The Bonita theater, Columbus, Ga., closed this week on account of moving into its new home on Twelfth street. W. H. Tolbert, manager, states that the moving is due to the fact that there are too many theaters in their present location. The new location is a splendid one, and the Bonita will be the only one on Twelfth street.

The Grand theater, Durham, N. C., opened again for business on the 10th, after being closed for six weeks undergoing needed repairs.

The Georgia Chamber of Commerce has called a mass meeting for September 16, to witness a display of the motion picture film entitled "Georgia," showing the resources of the state and depicting its progress.

The moving picture campaign of the Anti-Tuberculosis Association, which has been carried on in the outlying districts of the city, came to an end Saturday night with an exhibition at the Exposition Cotton Mills, which consisted of the amusement films and the lecture with the educational films.

"The Cotton King," which will shortly be released by the World Film, was filmed at Cartersville, Ga. Director Eagle brought his entire company, including Mr. Nash and Miss Hay, to Cartersville, where they selected a well known cotton plantation for their scenes. Manager Gould, of the Dixie theater, Cartersville, was host to the company during its stay.

"The Wizard of Oz" was shown at the Strand theater Saturday morning from 9 to 11 as the weekly offering to the children of the city, the Strand having succeeded the Grand theater as the place for showing the pictures weekly censored for the children. Announcement to this effect was made Friday late by representatives of the Woman's Club of Atlanta, who initiated the weekly moving pictures for the children. The Strand orchestra had special music for the children.

Gladys Hanson Snook left Atlanta Saturday for New York to resume her work on the stage and in motion pictures. Miss Hanson has made no definite plans for the future, but Atlantians hope to see her again soon in such a play as "The Climbers" last week at the Grand.

The Bellwood is the name of a new moving picture theater now in the course of construction on Marietta street. It will be completed and ready for opening the latter part of August. The Bellwood is being built by W. L. Porter and T. L. Swift, of Atlanta. Residents of that neighborhood, which is thickly settled, have been endeavoring to get some one to establish a theater closer to them for some time.

ATLANTA KIDDIE WINS.

Miss Inez Wheeler, aged eleven, won the children's automobile, given by the Woman's Club of Atlanta, for the best essay written by the children attending the children's day moving pictures each Saturday morning at the Grand theater.

THEY ENJOYED IT; BUT—

Hesser's "White Coat," the last remaining evidence in Atlanta of the Hesser Moving Picture Acting School, received its initial showing at the Georgian theater and proved to be so thoroughly lacking in everything that makes a picture that it was thoroughly enjoyed by practically everybody who saw it. It was so distinctly different.

ANNOUNCES TWO NEW HOUSES.

Frank Montgomery announces the opening of the second neighborhood theater in at Peachtree street, near Tenth street, and the Mecca theater in Inman Park in the fall. His company is known as the "Suburban Amusement Corporation."

ATLANTA NOTES.

Because he said the sight of children in the moving pictures kept the thought of his own two little daughters always in his mind, F. O. Meyers, alleged to have absconded some time ago with about $10,000 of Aragon, Ga., mill's cash, has returned home and surrendered to the sheriff. He is now in jail at Cedartown, Ga.

The Atlanta Shriners of 1915 have been filmed. There are three reels in all—taken en route from Atlanta to Seattle through the burning sands. They will be shown to the public but once in Atlanta for two days at the Strand. They will then be placed in the archives in the basement of the Masonic Temple to be preserved for future generations.

Mutual masterpieces, first run, will be shown every Thursday at the Vaudette theater.

Mr. L. Daffin, of the Daffin theater, Tallahassee, Fla., was an Atlanta visitor Monday.

Mitchell Brothers have bought the interest of J. B. Melton in the Palace theater in Macon, Ga. In the future the management of the Palace will be under H. E. Stahler, who has made a number of changes in the theater, as well as securing the famous Guttenberger orchestra. Mr. Melton, who recently underwent a delicate operation, was an Atlanta visitor Monday.

The Rawlings theater, Albany, Ga., is running nothing now but Lasky's features and reports a splendid business.

PICTURES FOR OHIO SCHOOLS.

Cuyahoga County to Show Educational Subjects to 7,300 Pupils, According to Plan of Superintendent Yawberg.

By J. D. Raridan, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SUPERINTENDENT YAWBERG, of Cuyahoga county (Ohio) schools, has started a plan to show motion pictures in all rural schools as a regular feature of school study for more than 7,300 pupils, beginning next fall. His plan to use pictures for education and entertainment met with the approval of the county school board. A picture "show" will be held in the old court house, Cleveland, soon to convince the board of the value of the idea.

Mr. Yawberg plans to purchase a projecting machine and engage a camera man. Pictures to illustrate agricultural, geographical and historical lessons are to be taken. "We want to feature agricultural subjects," said Mr. Yawberg. "Our machine would be available for farmers' institutes. Eventually each township board may have its own machine."

CLEVELAND NOTES.

The Educational Film Corporation, through its president, G. L. Warson, has announced it will remove from Chicago to Cleveland, here to establish a studio and produce pictures. Simultaneous with this announcement came the information that Paul C. Mooney, of the Fox Film Corporation, and R. H. McLaughlin, manager of the Colonial theater, were organizing a company to use the Educational Film Corporation's studio in cooperation for the production of a new and unexploited variety of film plays.

In connection with the booking arrangements for motion pictures taken on the Stefansson arctic expedition, the management of the Alhambra theater, Cleveland, engaged Fred W. Maurer, of New Philadelphia, O., the only American survivor, to deliver a lecture at each showing of the films which were taken by the party sent to rescue the members of Stefansson's band.

Orders have been issued by Mayor F. A. Hartenstein that Youngstown picture theaters must discontinue the practice of giving prizes to holders of numbers on admittance tickets. The ruling has been placed into effect. The mayor claims such prize giving is in the nature of gambling.

SEATTLE.

O. Wog, a former newspaper man of Seattle, has been employed as road man by the Standard Feature Film Company.

The Globe theater, Albany, Ore., has been taken over by S. C. Ayers.

The Sunset theater, Portland, has made arrangements with the feature films agencies for the choice of their second run pictures. The brands include Metro, Paramount, World and Mutual masterpictures.

NORTHWEST BREVITIES.

A dispatch from Montesano, Wash., says that an employe of a motion picture theater was arrested charged with insulting little girls. The dispatch adds that he "does not bear a good reputation in the city, but has been tolerated because of his mother, who is a respected woman. He has served one term in the penitentiary for another offense." Comments on the careful selection of house employes are obvious.

The Cosmo motion picture theater at Enunclau, Wash., was destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $2,000.

George A. Pierson has sold the Zeus theater at Preston, Ida., to E. R. Needham.

C. H. Fuller has sold the Majestic theater at Canon City, Col., to Beech Stewart and T. D. Harris.

Carl Ridgeway, Gus Hertz and Roy Keely have opened a motion picture theater in the Hopkins building at Kimberly, Idaho.

Breitinger, Supercensor

Head of Keystone State Censor Board Cooperating to Extend Catholic Theater Movement in Pennsylvania, So as to Scrutinize Films from Religious Viewpoint—More Trouble for Film Men.

By Philadelphia News Service, Philadelphia Correspondent Moving Picture World.

JAMES F. HERRON, president of the Philopatrian Catholic Literary Institute, and J. Louis Breitinger, head of the Pennsylvania Board of Moving Picture Censors, are busy making final preparations for plans for the extension of the Catholic theater movement in this vicinity to include a censorship of film plays from the standpoint of general morality and their bearing upon religious principles. It is expected that definite action will be taken in the matter sometime during the month of September.

Mr. Herron is representing the Rev. Henry C. Schuyler, head of the movement and vice-rector of the Boys' Catholic High School, and the Rev. John J. Wheeler, the general secretary, who is assistant rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, on Thirteenth street above Chestnut.

Mr. Breitinger has expressed himself as being entirely in accord with the movement and will render every possible service in order to devise some plan whereby the subject can be treated in the most efficient manner. Readers of this paper may recall that an article was published some time ago remarking that the interests of the Catholic Church were about to publish a list called the "white list of moving picture theaters." However, this plan was discovered to be very impracticable, due to the wide territory to be covered, and all thoughts in this direction have been abandoned.

Thousands of members of the Knights of Columbus have recently been the recipients of notices informing them of the endeavor to restrict the showing of any film which would tend to make a wrong impression on the minds of children and adults. It is supposed that a satisfactory agreement will be reached by having representatives of the movement view all pictures while they are being censored at the headquarters of the Board of Censorship.

S. F. WHEELER RETIRES FROM FILM BUSINESS.

Samuel F. Wheeler, one of the leading lights in the local field of the moving picture industry, recently announced his intention of retiring from that line of endeavor. When the moving picture business was in its infancy Mr. Wheeler built the Fifty-second Street theater, Fifty-second and Sansom streets, and experienced remarkable success from the first. He soon began looking around for ground upon which to erect a much larger house, with the result that he erected the Belmont theater, Fifty-second street, above Market. Following this he built the Apollo theater at Fifty-second street and Girard avenue.

Following the construction of the Apollo things began to break in the wrong direction for Mr. Wheeler and he soon sold his latest theater. Business continued to fall away on account of keen competition in the neighborhood of his theaters and Mr. Wheeler came to the conclusion that he would devote his entire interest to his original occupation as a lawyer. The fifty-second Street theater and the Belmont theater may either be bought or leased. It has been rumored that the Felt brothers, proprietors of the Locust theater, Fifty-second and Locust streets, will buy the Belmont.

HAMILTON TO OPEN SEPT. 1.

Representing the last word in modern motion picture theater construction, the new Hamilton theater, on Hamilton street near Second, Allentown, Pa., is now in the final stage of completion and will open to the public with an exclusive program of feature films on or about September 1. The structure is of brick and concrete construction and is touched off with furnishings that cost in the neighborhood of $25,000. The majority of equipment in the photoplay theater has been purchased from the Calehuff Supply Company, of 1301 Race street, Philadelphia.

EXHIBITORS' BOOKING OFFICE QUITS.

News of the discontinuation of business of the Philadelphia Exhibitors' Booking Office, 1331 Vine street, caused little surprise in local moving picture circles. Since the initial appearance of the company in the field of the local film exchanges, it received strong opposition from different sources. As the object of the company was to provide local exhibitors with a cheaper film service than could be obtained elsewhere, strong opposition sprang up from the various film exchanges. Rates were changed in order to meet the prices of the Exhibitors' Booking Office and this had a most depressing effect on the morale of the new company.

A feature of the closing of the office was the fact of the failure of local exhibitors to give their support to the enterprise.

KING AND WHITMAN TO BUILD QUEEN THEATER.

The Queen is to be the name of the motion picture theater to be erected by S. E. King and Harry J. Whitman at 403-405 North Eleventh street, Reading, Pa. The new house is to be 39 by 100 feet in dimension, one story in height, and the main auditorium will accommodate about 500 people.

OPERATORS WALK OUT.

Recently, at the closing of the evening's performance at the Regent theater, Harrisburg, several moving picture operators, Harry W. Smith and Frank Creme, walked out on strike demanding more money and shorter hours. The walkout of the men caused no discomfort at the theater for, promptly at 10 o'clock the following morning, the theater was opened as usual. Peter Magaro, manager of the Regent, said that there would be no change in the performances.

PHILADELPHIA HAPPENINGS.

Bids are being received for the awarding of the contract for the construction of a film warehouse at 1227-9 Vine street. The building will be of brick construction and will have dimensions of 35 by 90 feet.

The Germantown theater, 5500 Germantown avenue, seating 1220 persons, has been sold by Mr. Stumpfig to W. G. Conover for a consideration said to be in the neighborhood of $125,000. This is one of the largest and most modern theaters in this vicinity and has always played to a large audience.

Mr. Goldenberg, former manager of the Lubin Palace, Thirteenth and Market streets, has accepted the position of manager of the Central Market Street Company, which position was created through the resignation of Mr. Ertle, former manager of the company.

Mr. Hyeman, of the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street, will leave this city on or about the first of September for an extended trip throughout the western states. He will combine business with pleasure and expects to be gone for five or six months.

The Hoffman theater, 3600 North Fifth street, has been leased by J. Read, formerly proprietor of a Virginian photoplay theater. Mr. Read announces that he will exhibit nothing but first class pictures at popular prices.

The Keystone theater, Belgrade and Cambria streets, has been leased by J. Eberhardt. This theater will present first run pictures to its patrons.

SUDEKUM BELIEVES IN FREE SUMMER SHOWS.

For several months the city parks at Nashville, Tenn., have been showing free moving pictures for the benefit of the public. These pictures are shown through the courtesy of Tony Sudekum, manager of the Crescent Amusement company, which controls a number of large theaters in the city.

The park showings have established themselves firmly, and large crowds are always present at 8 o'clock when the pictures are thrown on the screens. While the free pictures may have a bad effect on summer business at some of the downtown theaters, at the same time the public is becoming educated to pictures, and when the parks close for the cold weather the same people will naturally turn to the downtown picture theaters in quest of amusement. A good many of these people would probably not go to a closed-in moving picture theater in the summer time, and others may never have become interested in films. At the same time the downtown theaters have been doing about their customary summer business, and it is generally thought that free moving pictures in city parks will be an aid to the industry and not a detriment.

MANAGER MARCUS ON SICK LIST.

Head of Buffalo's Big Hippodrome to Rest Up in Pennsylvania—News from Lake Section.

By Billy Bison.

MUCH regret is expressed that Henry Marcus, manager of Shea's Hippodrome theater, Buffalo, has had to leave his post for a time on account of ill-health. He is now resting at Saegerstown, Pa., and his many friends express the hope that he will improve quickly and resume his duties at the Hippodrome early in autumn. Isidore Moses, an experienced showman, is acting manager of the theater during Mr. Marcus' absence.

DISPLAYS MONEY BAGS IN LOBBY.

Leon Schlesinger, manager of the Palace moving picture theater, Buffalo, placed a miniature mountain of bags in his lobby on Friday. He secured them from the People's Bank of that city and on each appeared the name of that institution. The bags were filled to overflowing and sealed and their presence in the lobby naturally attracted crowds. The purpose of the display was to draw patronage to the film, Charlie Chaplin, in "The Bank." A heavy business was the result.

MANAGER CARR HAS A COOL HEAD.

Henry Carr, manager of Shea's theater, Buffalo, owned by the same company that has the Hippodrome, successfully handled a trying affair Friday night. Not long after his show opened a $300,000 fire was eating up a building directly across the street from the theater. Mr. Carr and his staff took every precaution to prevent the slightest confusion in his audience. Doors and other openings were quickly closed and ushers and other attaches were warned not to spread any report of the fire. It was the duty of Nat Wills, comedian, to help maintain the interest of the audience and keep them seated and he succeeded admirably. When the large audience filed out everybody was surprised to see the street filled with fire apparatus, because a general alarm had been sounded. A long row of automobiles owned by persons in the theater had been removed from the fire zone as soon as the blaze was discovered. Manager Carr arranged so that his patrons had no trouble in locating their machines. In fact the plan of avoiding disorder inside and outside the theater worked perfectly and aroused much favorable comment.

GOODMAN SHOWS FRANK PICTURES.

The lynching of Leo Frank caused M. H. Goodman, manager of Keith's moving picture theater, Buffalo, to spring what he termed "a scoop" on his competitors. Mr. Goodman promptly showed pictures relating to the Frank trial and other features of the case, and as a result his house was crowded. The films were not of the offensive kind, and were not intended to cater to morbid minds. Timeliness was a feature of the program, and lively lobby advertising and newspaper publicity helped to direct the crowds to Mr. Goodman's enterprise.

BUFFALO BREVITIES.

A moving picture theater will be built in Main street, Susquehanna, Pa.

Moving pictures and vaudeville every Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and burlesque every Thursday, Friday and Saturday is the policy at the Lumburg theater, Utica, N. Y., which has opened for the season.

"Pictures with a punch" is the term applied to the program offered by Fred Gillen, manager of the Stone opera house, Binghamton.

F. J. Dion, manager of the Orpheum theater, Franklin, Pa., personally superintended the taking of moving pictures of the recent flood at Erie, Pa.

The new Regent in Elmira may be opened for the first time about October 1. The house is fireproof throughout. The interior decorations of stucco work will be in rich colors and Roman gold. Elevated seats will be arranged at the rear of the auditorium. There will be no gallery.

A new license to open the Silent theater, Albany, has been granted to Emmett Weakley and James L. Rose, proprietors. Their former license was revoked when they opened the theater on Sunday.

Samuel P. Burrill, a Rochester (N. Y.) news writer, will edit a moving picture newspaper to be published weekly in that city. The paper will be distributed at local picture houses.

Many are eager for Sunday shows in Albany. It is argued that scores of Albanians go to Troy every Sunday night to attend the shows, and as a result the Troy theater proprietors get money that should go to Albany houses. Objections to Sunday pictures in Albany have been filed by local clergymen and civic organizations.

HAPPENINGS AROUND THE HUB.

"Les Miserables" Still Drawing Capacity Houses — General New England Notes.

By Edwin H. McCloskey.

THE picturization of Victor Hugo's masterpiece, "Les Miserables," the New England rights of which are handled by Sam Grant of the Olympia Theaters, Inc., recently played a return engagement at the Union Square Olympia theater, Somerville. Capacity houses attended each performance.

President Ernest H. Horstmann and Secretary R. W. Drown of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts journeyed to the race track at Brighton Beach, last Saturday, and attended the carnival field day of the New York Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Both Mr. Horstmann and Mr. Drown have been actively interested in the work of the league throughout the country, and distance has never been known to hinder them from attending any of its functions.

Fred B. Murphy, proprietor of the New England United Film Service with headquarters at No. 209 Pleasant street, Boston, accompanied by Mrs. Murphy, motored to New York last week, remaining there several days. Mr. Murphy has been actively interested in the settlement of the affairs of the defunct United program and it is expected that he will add several new branch offices to his present domain in the near future. Mr. Murphy is the most successful independent exchange man in the New England territory. Since he started in the exchange field in his own interest, he has been forced to open offices in Springfield and Bangor.

Mrs. S. E. Harrington of the Princess theater, Brattleboro, Vt., is spending the summer at the Cottage Hotel, Winthrop, Mass.

On Sunday, Aug. 29, the male employees of the New England office of the General Film Company will hold an outing at Glen Echo Pond, Stoughton, Mass. A special car will leave Boston at 10 o'clock in the morning. Athletic events of every description will be enjoyed. Several valuable prizes have been offered, including a gold watch, traveling bag and gold pieces. Among the invited guests are President Horstmann of the Massachusetts League.

Anthony S. (Buck) Stein, formerly connected with the Mutual and later manager of the Allen Film Exchange, is now associated with R. D. Marson, handling Kleine-Edison features.

Sam Goldstein, of the Goldstein Bros.' Amusement Company, of Springfield, Mass., is enjoying his annual vacation in the Maine woods. Mr. Goldstein is the proprietor of two houses at Hampden Beach, in addition to owning several of the amusements concessions at this coast resort. Manager Jack Carney of the latest Goldstein acquisition, the Strand theater at Hampton, reports that business has been fairly good, despite the severe inclement weather of the season.

Special Representative J. J. Unger of the General Film Company was a Boston visitor during the past week.

Manager Frank Ferguson of the Boston theater announces that beginning next Monday there will be two changes of program each week at his playhouse. Metro and V-L-S-E features are used. This is the first time in the history of the theater, which is one of the oldest in the city, that it has remained open during the summer months.

Herman Sivovolos, who was formerly manager of the Dreamland theater, Boston, and more recently connected with the American Feature Film Company, is now managing the Shawmut theater, Roxbury. Mr. Sivovolos gained a reputation as a live wire theater director while at the Dreamland and is one of the most active members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts.

The policy of the Academy, Fall River, has been changed from pictures to legitimate.

It is understood that Manager J. A. Eslow of the New England Universal Film Exchange has secured the site at the corner of Church and Piedmont streets for the location of his new exchange building, which will be second to none in this territory.

Manager Catoff of the new Harvard theater in Cambridge, Mass., will open his playhouse next month.

Manager Lee Rhodenheiser of the Norumbega Park theater reports that despite adverse weather conditions he has had a most successful season.

A special local film production, entitled "A Twentieth Century Courtship," with all its scenes laid in Boston and a cast of many Bostonians, was one of the leading attractions at Keith's theater during the past week.

S. B. Leland, proprietor of the Motion Picture Supply House of Montpelier, Vt., visited Boston during the past week. Mr. Leland is seeking a location for his business in the film district of the Hub.

Assistant Manager Sam Moscow of the New England United Film Service has placed the program of his company in the Pleasant street theater, Worcester, Mass.

Louis McDuffie of the Scenic theater, Rochester, N. H., is elated over the business that has been done in his house during the present season. He says that it has exceeded his best hopes.

COMPLAIN OF GRIFFITH FILM.

Spokane Negroes Threaten Retaliation at Polls Against the Official Censor —Other News Notes.

By S. Clark Patchin.

THE negroes have not quit kicking about the presentation in Spokane of "The Birth of a Nation." On Sunday night, August 15, they held a protest meeting in the Bethel A. M. E. church under the auspices of the Colored Business Men's League and criticised Commissioner Samuel Glasgow, official censor, for allowing the picture to be shown. They will fight the officials when they come up for re-election in November and also all other candidates who will not favor an ordinance to prohibit pictures tending to cause or arouse race prejudice.

Most of the Spokane moving picture managers who are doing much in the way of newspaper advertising have publicity representatives to furnish both readers and advertising copy for the papers.

"The Devil's Daughter," which had such a stormy time in Ohio and was shown after first being stopped by the official censors, opened a three-day engagement Sunday, August 21. The picture was passed by the local censor without further suggestions than that the eliminations of the National Board of Censorship be followed.

Word has just reached the Spokane film exchanges that U. W. Rayburn of Washtucna has leased the old Post Office at Lamont, Washington, and that he will show pictures there, each Tuesday and Wednesday.

William Cutts, general manager of the Liberty Amusement Company, is here directing the production of a local scenario in which Miss Virginia Riblet and others of local prominence are appearing. The picture will be shown at the Liberty.

"Under Two Flags," and Charles Chaplin in "The Bank," have been reported as good drawing pictures for the Class A.

KENTUCKY.

It is reported that Allen Barrett, manager of the Eminence theater, at Eminence, Ky., has given up the management of the theater and left the city.

At Madisonville, Ky., the Princess theater has been leased and reopened by Mr. Barnett, who will be general manager. The opening was delayed a day or so because of confusion in shipping some films which failed to arrive on time.

The Princess theater of Henderson, Ky., has become the property of Louis Hayes, an old show man, who knows the business thoroughly. The theater is now showing a five or six-reel feature daily and is doing well. The theater is to be renovated and put in first-class condition. No change in management will be made.

BUTTE GETS $65,000 HOUSE.

The Harrison Avenue Theater Company, of Butte, Mont., has been incorporated with capital stock of $65,000, to erect a motion picture theater and recreation center to cost that amount at Georgia and Harrison avenues in Butte. Dr. F. A. Ironside, T. J. Bennetts and George Nelson are interested.

Movies' Ball a Great Success

San Francisco Operators Feature Great Event—Six Thousand People in Attendance —Benefit Fund Greatly Augmented—Spectacular Effects Produced.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent Moving Picture World.

THE third annual ball of the Moving Picture Operators' Union of San Francisco was held at the magnificent new Civic Center Auditorium on the evening of August 14 and was attended by more than six thousand persons, netting a neat sum for the sick and death benefit fund of the organization, which now exceeds $5,000. The legal right to the name, "Movies' Ball," has been granted to the organization by the State of California, and in the future there will be no balls given by other interests under this name.

The entertainment committee, headed by William Osterfeldt, presented a program such as has probably never been seen here at a public function of this kind, the leading numbers being furnished by Hubert Dane and six assistants in a repertoire of classic dances; the seven Caroline Sisters from the Empress theater, novelty dancers, and singers; moving pictures furnished by the Fox Film Corporation and electrical effects simulating the storm, the Northern Lights, the Aurora Borealis, Dante's Inferno and moonlight. R. W. Horn, of the Nicholas Power Company, furnished a late model Power Cameragraph and George Breck furnished a Simplex projection machine to display the moving pictures.

Many leading city officials attended the affair, which was by far the most successful of any held by the operators. The floor committee consisted of E. P. Jones, manager; R. M. Combs and M. P. Meyers. The chairman of the other committees were: General Committee, A. F. Howell; Finance Committee, C. E. Jones; Publicity Committee, Anthony L. Noriega, and Reception Committee Adolph Mayer.

TURNER & DAHNKEN BRANCHING OUT.

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit, which has been confining its attention up to the present time to the Northern California field, has decided, after a lengthy investigation on the part of its officials, to branch out into other parts of the Pacific Coast territory. Arrangements were completed this week for opening a fine theater at Reno, Nev. A house with a seating capacity of 1,750 is now being erected there for this firm and will be ready for occupancy, according to present plans, some time in January, 1916. The theater is being erected on a lot 60 by 166 feet, and will represent an investment of about $90,000, including the property, which is valued at $12,000. The interior decorations and furnishings will be similar to those to be found in the seven California houses that are being operated with so much success, and will be the finest in the State of Nevada. A stage is being installed in the house, but it is not intended to show anything other than moving pictures. Plans are being made for the installation of a large pipe organ, and opera chairs to cost about $5 each will insure seating comfort.

PAY-AS-YOU-ENTER DEVICES FOR THEATERS.

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit of San Francisco is making the experiment at its Sacramento and Berkeley houses of dispensing with the services of a ticket seller and has installed pay-as-you-enter machines at the entrances of these places. These devices are the same as those recently installed by the Southern Pacific Company at the Ferry Building at San Francisco, where immense crowds are handled, and up to the present time have proved to be very successful. The machine registers the amount deposited, and attached to it is a money changing device which makes correct change with amazing rapidity. At Berkeley two have been installed, one for the balcony section, to which an admission charge of 10 cents is made, the other for the downstairs section for which 15 cents is charged. The money changing device on each machine is regulated so as to give even change for admission to the section it serves. This system does away with the necessity of the patron standing in line to secure a ticket and prevents a loss of money through dishonesty, as each patron deposits his money in the machine. It does away with the ticket seller and greatly simplifies the bookkeeping, there being no tickets to keep track of. The Turner & Dahnken Circuit is considering the advisability of installing them at all of its houses.

GOLDEN GATE TAKES STANDARD.

The Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., has completed arrangements whereby it will distribute the Standard program in the Pacific Coast territory and will commence making regular releases early in September. Arrangements to this end were brought to a conclusion during the recent visit of Al Lichtman of New York. This concern has just disposed of its Seattle branch to Mike Rosenberg, who was formerly connected with the local exchange, but who has been engaged in the feature business in the Middle West for the past year. The business will be conducted under the same name as formerly and Mr. Rosenberg will expand his interests by opening a branch at Portland, Ore. E. D. Tate, formerly in charge of the Seattle house, is now in San Francisco and will continue with the Golden Gate Film Exchange.

M. CALMY ENTERS FEATURE FIELD.

M. Calmy, for some time with the Golden Gate, has purchased the rights to the four-reel Charles Chaplin feature "The Mix-up," for California, Nevada, Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico and Utah, and is now engaging in business on his own account.

GOVERNMENT FEATURES EDUCATIONAL.

According to the general plan of the Department of Education of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition the United States Government is showing the education of the negro and of the Indian and of agricultural education. One of the most effective and popular features of the complete exhibit in the first class is that of the Hampton Industrial and Agricultural Institute of Hampton, Virginia. This exhibit takes the form of two reels of excellent pictures showing the school and farm, with nine hundred students at work in the schoolroom, the shop and field. A member of the faculty gives a lecture and the Hampton Colored Quartet renders selection of plantation melodies when the films are shown in Simplex theater No. 1 in the Palace of Education. It is interesting to note that the auditorium of the school at Hampton is equipped with a moving picture machine and that motion pictures are a regular part of the curriculum.

OTHER EXPOSITION CITY NOTES.

Morris L. Markowitz, manager of the California Film Exchange, Inc., is making a two week business trip to Denver, Colo.

John Ratto, of Jackson, Calif., was a recent visitor here to look over the late releases and to inspect the Exposition before the fall rush commences.

Leon Netter, of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., returned recently from Los Angeles, where he relieved Manager E. H. Emmick for a couple of weeks, and has since left for Lake Tahoe on a vacation.

The Exposition Players Corporation has disposed of two hundred thousand feet of Exposition film which is to be shown throughout Australia.

W. J. Hartwig, of the Antlers Theater, Helena, Mont., has been here visiting the Exposition and inspecting local methods of conducting moving picture houses.

Ethelbert Bingham has purchased a late model Motiograph projection machine from Edward H. Kemp, and this is being used at the Rodman Wanamaker Indian exhibit at the Exposition.

Kenneth Hodkinson, formerly general assistant to Herman Wobber, of the Progressive exchange, has gone to New York to fill the position of private secretary to his father, W. W. Hodkinson, and his place here has been taken by J. W. Allen.

The second releases of Paramount pictures will be shown in San Francisco at the Tivoli theater and in Los Angeles at Clune's Broadway Theater.

The diamond ring and other jewels recently stolen from Mrs. William Selig of Chicago, has been recovered in a local pawnshop, and the thief, formerly a butler in the Selig family, is being sent East to stand trial.

Jang Moy, who is opening a new moving picture theater at Portland, Ore., has purchased a Baird projection machine from G. A. Metcalfe, of this city.

Fred J. Butler, for fourteen years stage director of the Alcazar theater in this city, will shortly appear in moving pictures, having joined the Reliance-Majestic stock company.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS.

The Hanford Opera House at Hanford, Cal., has been taken over by C. Roberts. It was formerly conducted by Fred. Hayter.

H. J. Richards, formerly of the Electric Theater of Angels Camp, has purchased a Power Cameragraph and is fitting up a road show. He will travel in the mountain districts of Calaveras and Tuolumne counties.

Work has been commenced on the erection of a theater for G. L. Ferguson at Tulare, Cal., and this will be rushed to completion before the rainy season sets in.

The Liberty Film Company has just completed the enlargement of its studio at San Mateo, Cal., and has resumed operations.

The Banner Motion Picture Company has been incorporated at San Francisco by C. Anderson, N. D. Stewart and R. H. Cross, with a capital stock placed at $10,000. It is planned to conduct a studio at San Mateo.

The Excelsior Film Manufacturing Company has been incorporated at Los Angeles by Capt. H. M. Joss, D. P. Sullivan, J. H. Fishenden, W. C. DeWitt and L. De Witt, with a capital stock of $24,000.

The California Progressive Independent Picture Company, of Los Angeles, has been granted permission by the State Commission of Corporations to sell 90,000 shares of its stock to net the company not less than 80 per cent. The concern proposes to specialize in the production of films dealing with temperance subjects.

"The Clansman" is again being shown in Oakland, Cal., after having been stopped by order of Mayor Davie. Certain objectionable features were eliminated and injunction proceedings against the city officials were withdrawn by the management of the Macdonough Theater.

J. W. Flood, of Fallon, Nev., has purchased a Power Cameragraph No. 6A from G. A. Metcalfe of San Francisco.

A temporary restraining order has been issued at Sacramento, Cal., to prevent the motion picture operators' union of that city from placing pickets in front of the Ray theater on K street.

NEWS FROM KENTUCKY.

S. W. Blankenbaker, manager of the Sun theater, of Louisville, has proved that a five-cent show house will oftentimes make good in a suburban district where a ten-cent house struggles along with just enough patronage to make expenses. The Sun theater was opened as a ten-cent house, and met with only mediocre popularity until the admission price was reduced to five cents some three months ago.

The Manring and Amuzu theaters, of Middlesboro, Ky., a short time ago resorted to some rather unique advertising in connection with showings made of "The Juggernaut," the railroad drama. The Middlesboro management made arrangement with one of the local papers for a portion of the front page. In this space inch type was used in announcing a terrible wreck on an assumed railroad. A line followed the announcement and stated that the whole story of the catastrophe could be seen at the two theaters on specified dates.

George Bleich, proprietor of the Queen, Empress and People's theaters, of Owensboro, Ky., was recently in Louisville. Stanley Spears, who was formerly manager of the Princess, at Henderson, is now managing the Queen theater, of Owensboro, for Mr. Bleich.

The Star Theater has been showing Charlie Chaplin pictures every day constantly for the past four months, and report that the theater attributes its success of the past few months to these pictures. Chaplin in the new comedy, "The Bank," was recently run for three days instead of two as scheduled. At the first performance the picture received strong applause which is unusual in a downtown theater.

Miss B. A. Plessinger, formerly manager of the Independent Motion Picture Service Company, with offices in the Inter-Southern building, is now proprietor of the Onxy Film Company, which is located at 414 Wayne building.

The Walnut Street theater recently played a return engagement with the big four-reel production, "Midnight at Maxims."

Louis Zoeller, manager of the new Strand theater, of Lexington, Ky., is having made a large electric sign. It will be installed on the new theater, which will open about October 1.

The Georgetown Amusement Company, of Georgetown, Ky., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $31,000. The incorporators are: Buford Hall, L. H. Sublett, George D. Lancaster, A. B. Barkley, Jr., and Jennie G. Sublett.

Miller & Sloan, of the Dixie theater, of Albany, Ky., have purchased a gasoline engine and other equipment with which to furnish power for lighting the theater and operating.

TEXAS.

John E. Davis, manager of the Princess and Zoe theaters at Houston, Tex., secured an injunction in the Fifty-fifth District Court, restraining Lucien M. Andler, president of the Houston Motion Picture Machine Operators' Protective Union, and seventeen others from asking the public not to patronize the theaters. They are also restrained from intimidating the employes of both theaters. The union operators conducted a parade up and down Main street, Davis says, accompanied by a brass band, and asking the public to withdraw its patronage. Men were stationed on both side of the theaters, he adds, for the purpose of inducing patrons not to attend the show.

A Sunday school in Hot Springs, Ark., sold tickets to the Central theater, good any time from Aug. 16 to Sept. 25, the theater sharing the proceeds. Watches were given the boy and girl selling the most tickets and a prize was given everybody who sold 500 tickets. This plan affords an opportunity to make friends and patrons of a good class of people.

Referendum Proposed

Portland, Oregon, Film Men May Appeal to Voters—Musicians Out—Another Fire Ordinance Respecting Exchanges Proposed—Majestic Raises Admission to 15 Cents—Madam Jomelli to Sing There.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

IF all other means fail to produce the desired results and the city commissioners retain the present censorship ordinance in the face of the present agitation for its repeal, the film men propose to take their case directly to the people and place the matter before the voters of Portland by means of the referendum.

The matter is now in the hands of a committee from the Portland Chamber of Commerce, which is investigating the film men's complaint, and all parties concerned are laying low and awaiting developments.

MUSICIANS OUT.

Following the troubles because of the minimum man ruling of the Musicians' Union some time ago, the moving picture theaters terminated the employment of their union musicians on Aug. 18 and non-union men were hired to take their places. The matter has been at issue for nearly two months, but the friendly feeling between the musicians and the theaters in which they played presages an amicable adjustment of the difficulties.

The trouble broke when the managers of the vaudeville theaters in the city each discharged one man and the remaining musicians in those theaters walked out. A letter from the union headquarters declared that the minimum man law would be enforced in picture theaters next, and for their own protection and not as a sympathetic movement with the vaudeville houses the exhibitors terminated the employment of their union musicians. Leeser Cohen, of the Portland Amusement Company, advises that there are plenty of good musicians to be had outside of the union and there are no indications that any other branches of the theatrical federations will walk out.

"Our box office receipts tell us how many men we shall hire," says Mr. Cohen.

ANOTHER FIRE ORDINANCE.

A new fire ordinance, covering buildings of every nature housing films except theaters, has been prepared by City Fire Marshal J. W. Stevens, Assistant Fire Marshal Percy Boardman and City Building Inspector H. E. Plummer and it will be submitted to the film men for their inspection soon. The new ordinance embodies generally the same features as the one about which the exchange men showed great concern a month or so ago, but these features have been toned down, and Mr. Boardman advised the writer he believed no fairer ordinance could be drafted that would be efficient.

By the terms of the proposed ordinance films can neither be stored in the cellar or above the first story, nor in buildings over two stories in height, nor in buildings occupied as assembly halls, lodgings or factories employing over fifty people. The specifications as to the vaults will require the reconstruction of nearly every film vault in the city, two doors being required, one an automatic fire door. Non-inflammable walls shall separate the examination and repair room, the shipping room, the wash room and the vault; 10 exposed reels are allowed in the examination room at one time and in the shipping room (the ordinance allows 10 exposed reels), 30 reels in individual containers and 75 reels in approved shipping boxes. The rooms can be used interchangeably, but no two processes can be carried on at the same time. Thirty days are given for film concerns in frame buildings to comply with the ordinance, and one year for those occupying other buildings.

Mr. Boardman stated that the ordinance was part of the fire protection campaign inaugurated by Fire Marshal Stevens, and he was confident that the ordinance would pass as redrafted.

BETTER SHOWS, BETTER PRICES.

Commencing Sunday, Aug. 22, the Majestic theater will raise its price of admission evenings and Sundays to 15 cents, the price on matinees during week days remaining 10 cents. With the increase in the admission price, Mr. James contemplates adding high-class attractions, both pictures and music, to his program and will open with Madame Jomelli, of national operatic fame, as the drawing feature.

Mr. James advises that all the exhibitors he has spoken to about his raise in price have signified their willingness to give him their moral support in his new venture, for on its success depends that of high-class picture shows in Portland.

WAR PICTURES AROUSE FEELING.

That the war films shown recently to the Portland public at the Heilig theater and the accompanying lectures were not in keeping with President Wilson's plea for repression of partisan war feeling and that the pictures and the lectures were calculated to arouse pro-German feeling were the opinions of many people who saw these films. Mrs. Colwell, secretary of the censor board, saw nothing in the films themselves that would cause them to come under the ban of that body, and as the lecture accompanying the pictures could not come within the province of her office the situation was reported to the Mayor, who has the matter under advisement at the time of this writing.

The scenes of Emperor William, General Von Hindenberg and other war scenes met with unrestrained applause and a corresponding opposite feeling on the part of the anti-German sympathizers. The lecture and its effect were not looked upon with favor at the city hall, and W. H. Warren, the Mayor's secretary, wrote the manager of the films asking that slides be shown requesting the audiences to refrain from applauding. Count Martin Pache, the lecturer accompanying the films, states the purpose of the tour: "To show the German side of the war and to make a powerful plea for world peace."

OREGON BREVITIES.

The Wexford theater, Salem, Ore., has been taken over by T. H. D'Arcy and is being repainted and refitted. It will open Sept. 1 with "Prohibition."

R. L. Herkimer has taken over R. S. Scott's interest in the only theater at Jefferson, Ore., and will remodel the house.

PORTLAND PERSONALS.

W. W. Kofeldt, recently of San Francisco, has been installed in his new position in the Pathe Exchange.

Out-of-town film men visiting Portland this week were: C. C. Cook, Empire theater, Medford, Ore.; N. E. Hanson, Opera House, Carlton, Ore.; Tom Miller, Grand theater, Camas, Washington; W. W. N. Danielson, manager, Oregon theater, Salem.

Bart Bertleson, advance man for James Clemmer of Seattle, and ahead of "The Birth of a Nation," billed to show at the Heilig Aug. 2, was in Portland expounding the merits of his picture.

G. A. Metzger, manager of the Film Supply Company of Oregon, is absent on a flying trip to Denver.

The great difference between the common-place serial and a continued photoplay in chapters is---
The former depends entirely on its advertising to make it a success,
the latter on merit.
The difference is not unlike a modern novel and the known works of the masters of literature.
You buy the highly advertisd novel because it is advertised.
But the works of Shakespeare,
Mark Twain,
Washington Irving
are read and enjoyed for the sparkle which they contain.
They are works of art that do not need advertising.

THE GODDESS

a continued photoplay in chapters, is like them in this respect -----
Enjoyed by your audiences for the sparkle which it contains.

THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE

THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE deals with the subject which is today nearest the heart of every American citizen—the problem of America's unpreparedness.

It portrays the defenseless condition of our country; the consequences to which this condition may lead; and the way to avoid these consequences.

Hudson Maxim, international authority on arms and ammunition, supplied the facts; J. Stuart Blackton made these facts live. From them he constructed a powerful drama; produced it on a stage whose limits are the boundaries of the United States itself; the actors, the most prominent names in current American history.

Vaudeville to Fight Back

Managers Admit Pictures Have Hit Their Business, But Say the Dramatic Houses Have Been Injured More—Good Plays Draw Even if They Are Not New.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

AN admission straight from headquarters, to the effect that moving pictures have seriously affected the vaudeville business, was a significant feature of the meeting last week at Cedar Point, O., of the vaudeville managers' convention. This is not, perhaps, entirely in the nature of news, as it is common knowledge nowadays that a good many of the so-called "legitimate" theaters and producers are gasping on the ropes.

Incidentally, exhibitors may prepare for a season of especially vigorous competition from the "vaudevillains," who, it is certain, will do all in their power to stop the growing trend of their audiences toward the pictures. "The moving picture people have caused a serious situation in the theatrical world, there is no denying," Secretary Ray Andrews, of the managers' association, is quoted as saying. "They have been contracting for and taking over many of the largest theaters in the country. Of course, the presentation of screen plays with all-star casts for ten cents has hurt the legitimate drama the worst, but the vaudeville people are feeling the effect also."

It was intimated at the convention, in this connection, that the giving of larger bills by vaudeville houses will probably be one of the weapons used to retain the patronage of the public, and it was declared that this will be the more feasible for the reason that the serious inroads already made on the business have freed many performers who will be anxious to get bookings at almost any price.

OLDER PLAYS COME BACK STRONGLY.

The management of the Lyric theater's summer season of moving pictures, which is now drawing rapidly to a close, with the approach of the first fall month, staged another pair of return engagements last week which drew even more heavily than earlier efforts along this line, notably the recent "Bushman Week." The first part of the week the highly successful Alco release of "The Tigress," featuring Mme. Olga Petrova, held large audiences, notwithstanding its previous exhibit, during nearly a year, at most of the better houses in Cincinnati.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance," the biggest and best of the Keystone releases, was the feature for the latter half of the week, and, as always, it drew heavily. The ability of really good features to come back again and again and repeat early successes is one of the most encouraging factors in the business, in the opinion of film exchange men and exhibitors alike.

OHIO OPEN FOR GRIFFITH FILM.

Exhibitors who have heard so much of Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" are still wondering when it is to be available for Ohio. The secret was out recently, when, it is understood, negotiations were opened for Ohio rights by A. E. Burkhardt, a prominent Cincinnati business man. It is credibly reported that $45.000 was asked for Ohio rights for the picture, but that Mr. Burkhardt balked, offering $10,000 less. The matter is still open, as far as known. However, Mr. Burkhardt is said to have acquired rights to the picture for sixteen States in the Northwest.

WEIGEL SHINES AS ATHLETE.

Charles Weigel, the popular manager of the Alhambra theater, Cincinnati, celebrated his formal admission as a member of the Chamber of Commerce, through his affiliation with the rejuvenated Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, by exhibiting unsuspected prowess as an athlete at the Chamber's big annual outing last week. In the twenty-five-yard potato race Mr. Weigel finished a bang-up third. A number of other film men and exhibitors turned out for the occasion. The latest bunch of moving picture men included in the announcements of new members of the Chamber numbered, besides Mr. Weigel, Tom Corby, who controls several houses, and Andrew G. Hettesheimer, of the Orpheum, the big house on Walnut Hills.

SETBACK FOR THEATER PROJECT.

It seems, from information obtained from A. Wolary, manager of the Wormster Hat Company's store, Cincinnati, that the project to construct a handsome new photoplay house on that site may receive a rude set-back. It was intimated when news first leaked out, a few weeks ago, of the new lease taken on this property by Charles Schaengold and I. W. McMahan, of McMahan & Jackson, that the present lease held by the hat concern had been satisfactorily adjusted, and that it would be possible for work to proceed very shortly toward construction. Mr. Wolary states, however, that the hat company is very well satisfied with its location and that it intends to remain there for the remaining two years of its lease.

OHIO HOUSES FIXING UP.

The handsome little house operated at 4032 Eastern avenue, Cincinnati, by Shober Bros., known as the Carrel theater, is being completely overhauled and enlarged, the owners having found its seating capacity too small for the business available. When the alterations are completed, the Carrel will have 570 seats, making it one of the largest of the suburban houses.

The Sun theater, Portsmouth's leading vaudeville and moving picture house, has been completely redecorated for the coming season, opening this week with an excellent combination program.

PICTURES AT THE BIG FAIR.

Fifty-four Distinct Shows Contribute to the Entertainment of Visitors.

A FEATURE pleasing to the many thousands of visitors at the Panama-Pacific Exposition is that active measures are taken for their entertainment. There are upon the grounds no less than fifty-four moving picture shows wherein are daily displayed without charge in the exhibit palaces and in state and national pavilions well selected and attractive scenes revealing the activities of the various states and countries. Lectures accompany many of the displays, and the visitor is enabled to enjoy scenes from Argentina, China, Japan, the Philippines, the Netherlands, Cuba, Sweden and forty-three other lands, while cinematographs of important works such as the Panama Canal, the New York State Lock Canal and the manufactories of the great corporations of the United States are displayed without charge.

Up to the first of August, 9,350,000 persons had passed through the Exposition turnstiles. The income from admissions from February 20 to July 11 amounted to $1,568,126.80. The receipts from concessions amounted to $676,810 02; the miscellaneous income was $775,337.40. The gross income since the opening on February 20 until July 11 was $3,020,274.22.

With the advent of August, the number of special trains and special parties from all parts of the United States is greatly augmented while the individual travel from remote sections is unprecedented. For the first time in their lives thousands of Americans are crossing the Rockies.

BUSINESS QUIET IN CANADA.

So Reports Mr. Rosenfeld in Vancouver After Visiting Thirty-five Towns—News in Film Circles.

By E. C. Thomas.

LOUIS ROSENFELD, of the Calgary office of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., was in Vancouver last week, after visiting thirty-five towns in which the Paramount Program is being shown. Mr. Rosenfeld reports that business generally is quiet, with perhaps slightly better conditions in Alberta than in British Columbia. Receipts of small town theaters are ranging from $50 to $100 per week, and exhibitors, by curtailing expenses as much as possible, are still able to show a very small profit during the warmer months. The premium coupons mentioned in the issue of August 27 are being used in all towns where there is opposition. Censorship in Alberta is on a much saner basis than in some parts of Canada.

H. L. Gage, manager of the Rex theater, Regina, Sask., was a recent visitor to Calgary.

Under the patronage of Mayor W. T. Henry, Manager Pollard of the Southside Bijou theater at Edmonton, set aside a special day on which he gave his entire receipts, afternoon and evening, to the local Red Cross Society. The six reel program was supplemented by local soloists, and the show played to packed houses.

Four thousand feet of pictures were recently taken near Winnipeg at the great military encampment at Camp Sewell, the name of which has just been changed to Camp Hufhes. Over 9,000 men and 3,500 horses are quartered here, and relatives throughout Western Canada will be able to view the life of the soldiers under actual service conditions.

C. A. C. Stewart, of the Empire theater, Penticton, B. C., who is a veteran of the Boer War, has rejoined the army for service in France. His interests are being looked after by his wife. It is also reported that R. Duncan, former manager of the Opera House at Kelowna, B. C., has also joined the forces.

Howard Douglas, formerly Dominion superintendent of parks, has been appointed to the office of censor in the Province of Alberta, and exchangemen are much pleased at his selection. Mr. Douglas succeeds R. B. Chadwick, deceased, who had held the position since September, 1913, when the provincial censorship was established.

At Banff, Alberta, Messrs. Harmon and Luxton have merged their interests and closed down the Lux theater. The two are now devoting their attention to the Harmony.

Mr. Phelps, formerly manager of the Bijou, Calgary, is now on the road for Universal.

G. Corriveau, Jr., manager of the Grandview theater, Vancouver, recently gave a benefit matinee for the Red Cross Society. Including receipts on a prize drawing, about $80 was raised. Similar Red Cross matinees have been given by Manager R. J. Dawson, of the Kitsilano theater and also by the management of the Fairview theater.

The Miners' Union of Phoenix, B. C., is running a picture show in a new $11,000 house, replacing the old one which was burned some time ago. Manager Evans reports good business. The Miners' Union is also conducting a picture show at Coleman, Alberta.

Ben Soskin, of the Vancouver Famous Players office, spent a week at Victoria with Salisbury's Wild Life Pictures, which played at the Royal Victoria theater.

C. Hague, general manager for Universal in Canada, accompanied by D. G. Walkley of Calgary, recently made a trip to the Coast.

AMONG ST. LOUIS EXHIBITORS.

William Sievers Booking Returns on Two V-L-S-E Subjects—"The Birth of a Nation" to Show Five Weeks at Olympic.

Manager William Sievers, of the New Grand Central, booked return engagements for the "Island of Regeneration," and "The Rosary," for the week of August 22. The "Island of Regeneration" will run Tuesday and Wednesday, and "The Rosary" Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Mr. Sievers secured these features for the second showing, at the urgent request of many patrons of his house who had been unable to see the pictures at the first showing and of others who were desirous of seeing the films again. When the "Island of Regeneration" was shown at the New Grand Central a few weeks ago Mr. Sievers secured an injunction to prevent the Board of Police Commissioners and other self-appointed censors from stopping the exhibition of the film.

The Olympic Theater will open on August 29 for a five weeks' run of Griffith's "Birth of a Nation." There will be a daily matinee as well as an evening performance, and a specially selected orchestra will accompany the film with the music that has been arranged for the famous feature. All sorts of electrical and mechanical devices are being installed in the Olympic to produce the sound effects.

The Union Theater, McNair and Pestalozzi Streets, is a St. Louis theater without an airdome in connection that has remained open all summer. During former years the Union has closed for two or three months on account of hot weather. Dr. A. E. Engle is owner of the Union, but turned over he active management of the place to J. Yeager in October of last year. Mr. Yeager says this has been as good a summer for the moving picture business as has ever been known in St. Louis, except for airdomes.

The Alps Amusement Company, 4124 Easton Avenue, which is controlled by G. & L. Wagner, has been showing its program in a very handsome airdome this summer. The Alps, one of the oldest moving picture shows in the city, was first established in a tent, on the spot where the airdome now stands, but it was not long until a site was secured for a building, the Alps Theater, about two blocks away from the airdome. The airdome was enlarged to a 2,500 seating capacity this year and has a handsome entrance, with growing plants in boxes on the front wall, as well as vines and flowers around the inside walls.

The Franklin Theater, a new house at 1831 Franklin Avenue, owned by Giesler & Polsdorfer, opened to the public on August 3. The Franklin is under the active management of Mr. Polsdorfer, who devised his own ventilating system, using electric fans to cool the house, and large exhaust fans to carry away foul air. The theater has a three-piece orchestra, a handsome operating booth for a Simplex projection machine, and a well-lighted and ornamental entrance and lobby.

August Roettger, proprietor and manager of the Fairy Theater, 5648 Easton Avenue, offered a novel entertainment to his patrons one night during the week of August 8. He announced that he would give an entire kitchen outfit to any couple who would get married in his theater. A young couple in the neighborhood accepted his offer, and the date of the wedding was announced. More than 3,500 paid admissions were recorded that night.

The Criterion theater, 2644 Franklin avenue, is closed temporarily, while a concrete floor and other fireproof improvements are being made.

The Easton Theater, formerly the People's on 2822 Easton Avenue, opened again on Augst 18th, under the management of Franklin S. Milberg, who comes to St. Louis from Edmonton, Canada, where he was formerly engaged in the amusement business. The Easton is a five-cent house using a program of pictures with occasional vaudeville.

William H. Young, proprietor of the Taylor-Easton theater, at Taylor and Easton Avenues, who has been away from St. Louis for several months on account of illness, returned recently, much improved in health, and took over the active management of the theater again. Mr. Young has been in charge of the Taylor-Easton for two years or more, and when he acquired the place it was considered a "dead one" by other exhibitors. Mr. Young's personal interest in his patrons and the careful study of their taste in pictures account for the excellent patronage of the house. Mr. Young says he makes it his business to get acquainted with the people that come to his theater, and while talking to him in the lobby, the World correspondent observed that not one person that came into the theater during the time he was there but had a nod or smile for Mr. Young.

A "Safety First" film, made under the supervision of the St. Louis Safety First Society, was shown at the Grand Central, Sixth and Market Streets, for the first time, on August 16. The next night the reel was shown at the Aubert Airdome, and at other theaters. Later, the film will be on the program of the free municipal pictures. The film is 732 feet long and is furnished free to theater manager on application to the Secretary of the Safety First Society, Tom L. Johnson, 613 Navarre Building.

DENVER GIRL ON VACATION.

Miss Maxine Brown, Edison Player, Meeting Old Friends in Colorado Capital—Farewell Party for E. C. Quimby.

By Muriel Lee.

MISS MAXINE BROWN, the well known Denver girl, who has made such a phenomenal success in moving pictures in such a short time, is home for a six weeks' vacation, visiting her family and her many friends. Miss Brown is well known in Denver, as her father has lived here for thirty-five years and she herself had made Denver her home until she began her professional career. When she was but six years old, Denverites will recall seeing Miss Brown in "The Littlest Girl," which was at Elitche's. At eight she played the part of the little boy in "The Squaw Man" and one or two other roles in productions at the old Baker theater. She also in that year played "Peter Pan" at Elitche's, in which she made a distinct hit, and in "Dr. Napoleon."

Two years ago, Miss Brown went to New York to begin professional work. She played in "Everywhere" and in "Sunny Brook Farm" and also gave the solo dance in the "Frivolity" section. After working with Mittenthal Brothers Miss Brown went with the Reliance, and then to the Famous Players, where she played in "His Last Dollar" and "Aristocracy." She is now with Edison.

Miss Brown is more than busy receiving her old friends and in visiting with her father, but she says she will nevertheless be glad to get back to her work. Denver is proud of the success this young woman has made.

Saturday evening, Aug. 14, the employes of the Denver office of Pathe tendered F. C. Quimby a farewell party. Mr. Quimby has been manager of the Denver and Salt Lake offices since the first of the year, and is now leaving for the Pacific Coast. There were about twenty present There were interesting talks, with Mr. Epperson acting as toastmaster.

"The Chalice of Courage," a six-reel Vitagraph, has made an unusual hit in Denver, where it was run at the Isis theater. The Isis seats 2,200 and in the three days it was run the house was full, and the walked packed to the curb. So many were disappointed in not being able to see it, that Mr. Baxter, the manager, is going to run it for several days again this week.

Mr. Frederickson, from the Cincinnati symphony orchestra, was the soloist at the Princess theater for a few nights, beginning Aug. 20. Marguerite Clark is featured at the Princess this week, and until the 21st. Paramount pictures are coming into their own in Denver, as shown in the Princess, as the houses of this theater have been breaking records in the last four weeks.

WHAT'S DOING IN MINNESOTA.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

An ordinance permitting non-fireproof motion picture theaters in Minneapolis to increase their seating capacity to 400 under certain conditions has been drafted by a special committee of the city council.

St. Mary's Catholic Church, at Le Seuer Center, had a surprise for its members for the celebration of the Patronal Feast or Feast of the Assumption. Films of "The Rosary" were secured from Chicago and shown at the Joy theater.

The city council at Minneapolis is considering increasing license fees of motion picture theaters. As all moving picture houses with a seating capacity of more than 600 now pay only $150, it was decided to change the present schedules so that such places with a seating capacity of more than 900 will pay $300, those between 600 and 900 will pay $200, those from 350 to 600 will pay $100, while the fee for all places under 350 will be $75. The theater license fee, which is now $150, probably will be doubled.

The proceedings started by Byron W. Place, attorney, to have a receiver appointed for the Minnehaha Film Company of Minneapolis, have been dismissed by the United States District Court without prejudice to either party.

The motion picture theater which will be built at Seventh and Wabasha street in St. Paul by Herman Benz probably will be operated by L. H. Rubin and M. L Firkelstein. The theater, which will seat 3,000, will be part of a seven-story fireproof hotel building.

Motion picture men of Minnesota have assured State Fire Marshall R. W. Hargadine that they are willing to co-operate with his department in making photoplay houses in the state safer from fires and panics.

William Feist is the new proprietor of the Rex theater at Easton.

The remodeled Royal theater at Albert Lea has been opened. New projection apparatus, screen, front, seats and ventilating system have been installed and the interior has been redecorated.

Herman Yost, formerly with the Princess theater at Wabasha, has been made manager of the Iris theater at Canby.

Hogan Johnson sold the Bijou theater at Fergus Falls to A. J. Lawrence, of The Dalles, Ore.

The film of the spectacle, "Fighting the Flames," recently staged at the state fair grounds at St. Paul, was shown at the New Majestic theater in St. Paul.

The Crystal theater at Fairmont has been leased by the La Rose-Newack Company of Minneapolis.

Mills, Haas & Blix have ended their management of the Cozy theater at Alexandria and it has been taken over by H. A. Fowler of the Howard.

Construction of the New Savoy motion picture theater at New Prague has begun.

The Princess theater at Minneapolis has made a number of important changes. A new organ has been installed. The entire stage has been turned into a garden with running vines and beautiful flowers. A bower has been made for the orchestra. It will be on the stage instead of in the pit as heretofore. The management also has installed an organ.

"The Eternal City" was shown at the Rex Beautiful in Duluth for two days under the auspices of the Woman's Council for the benefit of the dental clinic of the public schools.

Form Church Film Circuit

Six Religious Organizations of Elgin, Ill., Plan to Use Motion Pictures One Day Each Week—Congregational Minister Tells of the Power of the Screen is Church Work.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

FROM Elgin, Ill., center of interest because of its development of the use of motion pictures in churches, come two new things. Six churches of the city plan to circuit films to be shown in each church one night a week. A Congregational pastor confesses from the pulpit his former church's success with films has made him change his mind regarding their value in church work.

Active in the plans for a circuit are the Grace and Epworth Methodist Episcopal churches. Film exchange men have been in consultation with the members regarding the feasibility of such a plan. A portable projector probably will be used to reduce the expense to the churches.

Dr. C. L. Morgan, pastor of the First Congregational Church, in recommending the use of films, said: "While I confess to an extreme aversion to the need of any resort to such special features to constrain a Sunday evening audience, I have been compelled also to confess that the results of such effort of my old church in Boston have proved a mistake, and that the efforts of the Rev. Mr. Gable, which are proving successful in the Grace church, would be far preferable in our own to bare apology for an evening audience which for the past years have existed," the pastor said.

His sermon was from the parable of the man who, in order to secure a full house for his feast, commanded his servants to "go out into the byways and hedges and constrain them to come in."

"May I tell what one church, that of my last pastorate in Boston, has done? The new pastor ten years ago was given the liberty to do what many thought little better than sacrilege, introduce a novelty into each Sunday night service. It might be a vocal or instrumental solo or a quartet or a notable speaker. But it was always different, and each week handbills red, yellow or blue, were distributed throughout the community telling what would be a feature for the next Sunday night. The result was a full house, not once, but continuously for eight years, such a house as required the organization of special committees of men and women to visit the new-comers and help cement their interest.

"Two years ago it was found that the tremendous attraction of six moving picture shows in the immediate vicinity was telling somewhat upon the Sunday evening attendance, and the question came to the front, shall we, too, make use of this greatest attraction of the period in the interest of the gospel? Samuel B. Capen, president of the American Board of Foreign Missions, one of the most conservative men, was not only senior deacon, but chairman of trustees. They had just decided the matter when I called at his office two years ago. 'Yes,' he said, 'we have thought and prayed about it a long time. Some feel that we must not lose out in reaching the people by failure to use the most attractive method known to the public of to-day. And so we are going to do it.'

"I have to confess that I thought Mr. Capen and all the rest mistaken and that such a use of the moving picture would be a sad mistake. But I have changed my mind and I will tell you why. This summer I have been in Boston again. Inquiry as to the results show that for two years the church has overflowed every Sunday night; that there have been great additions to the church; that the Sunday school, which previously averaged about 300, now averages 600 in attendance; that a men's club had grown to more than 325, that the influence of the church in the community had been vastly increased."

SOMETHING QUEER FROM CAIRO.

Chief of Police Higlen has issued orders that billboard advertising by moving picture shows must be kept off the streets of Cairo. The case against Travis A. Kimmell, manager of the Kimmel theater in Cairo, charged with violating an ordinance by posting advertising matter on sidewalks, was dismissed upon his promise not to repeat the practice.

HAPPENINGS IN ILLINOIS.

The Apollo theater at Peoria is co-operating with the Child Welfare League in that city by giving special Saturday moving picture shows for children. A share of the proceeds goes to the league.

Bad weather has forced the Sky Dome of East St. Louis to close. The Criterion theater under the same management is being redecorated for a picture season to start early in September.

Manager Harry Redmon has booked the V-L-S-E service for the Majestic in East St. Louis.

A. W. Barth has purchased the interest of C. H. McIntire in the A-Muse-U theater at Carbondale.

The new Royal theater at Minonk has been opened.

John H. Fehn, of Dundee, has purchased the Star theater at Elgin from Tony Engals, who goes to Crosse Point, Wis., to conduct a motion picture show.

The Film Life Extending Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,500. The incorporators are: A. B. Seekenfreund, Jonas Sternberg and L. M. Seekenfreund.

Walter Coddington, of Touton, has purchased a motion picture theater in Rantoul.

L. F. Marden and Dale Owings, of Winchester, have purchased a motion picture theater in Robinson.

Neil Baxter is now sole owner of Dreamland theater at Farmington, having purchased the interest of his partner, Mr. Anderson.

The Tiskilwa Opera House Company has leased the opera house at Tiskilwa and began its show with "The Spoilers." W. J. Parks is manager of the motion picture show, B. H. Kilby theatrical manager and O. W. Sheldon electrical engineer.

The Elite theater at Waukegan has installed a new silver fibre screen and will redecorate and add another machine.

Varna merchants are giving free motion picture shows and band concerts on the streets.

Requests were so numerous the Washington theater at Granite City played a return date of "The Island of Regeneration."

Leo F. McQuene, of Corrington, N. D., has purchased the Briggs Opera house at Maquon.

DOINGS 'WAY DOWN SOUTH.

Jacksonville's Big Airdome Theater Doing a Capacity Business—Reports of Roadmen.

By J. Melvin Andrews, Jacksonville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE big airdome theater, C. Green, manager, opened July 24 and has played to capacity business every night. A Universal programe, with a four-piece orchestra and vaudeville, makes this the most attractive house in the city. The airdome is thoroughly and modernly equipped. It has a new Standard machine. There is a seating capacity of 600. The Auditorium theater, under the same management, is dark for the summer.

R. L. Rowe, manager of the Crescent theater, Hopkins, Fla., is back in harness again, after spending his vacation in the mountains.

E. E. Lusk, of Lakeland, Fla., has leased the Greystone theater at Kissimmee and will operate it for the coming season. The policy has not yet been announced.

Mr. Heysler of the V-L-S-E offices was in Lakewood a few days this week, where he booked his feature in the airdome.

Mr. DeKoven, of the United Film Company, Tampa, Fla., made a flying trip through the state this week and succeeded in placing many bookings for his firm.

Manager Tarbell, of the Mutual Film Company, of Tampa, reports business for his firm through the state of Florida very good, despite hot weather and rain.

A new company is now being formed at Tampa for the purpose of manufacturing motion pictures for the Southern market. Producing is expected to begin at an early date.

John Fassol, formerly manager of the Royal at Tarpon Springs is now holding a like position at the Only Star, at City Point, Va. Mr. Fassol was succeeded at the Royal by Pete Saclarides.

The Arcade theater is now in its fourth week of success, playing to capacity business every day since the opening. This is phenomenal for Jacksonville, in the heart of summer. Many excellent pictures and singing attractions are being shown here and the theater fans seem to realize that the management is doing everything possible to please them. On Marguerite Clark and Mary Pickford days the patrons are presented with a photograph of these stars neatly rolled and tied with ribbon, diploma form.

The Southern Film Corporation, the locally formed motion picture organization, under the management of D. C. Randolph, is now in its new offices in the Bisbee building, and reports many good bookings for its numerous productions. It is now releasing two a month, but expects to increase this in a short time. Mr. Randolph seems to be very optimistic over the future, basing it on the results obtained in the short time the office has been open for business.

"Hank" Cassidy, who has been termed "The Picture Show Doctor," is in the city and has assumed charge of the Prince theater. "Hank" is a congenial, jolly good fellow and has been busy for the past few days making many new friends and renewing acquaintances of years gone by, when he was manager at the Orpheum here.

The Southern Film Corporation of this city has secured the exclusive control of the Ekio Film Company war releases for the Southern territory, which embraces North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Florida.

W. H. Whitney, of the Southern Investment and Amusement Company, who for the past few months has been manager at the Prince, has returned to his original position of advertising manager of this firm. Mr. Whitney was succeeded at the Prince by "Hank" Cassidy.

The Goddress and the Blue Ribbon features at the Imperial theater on Monday and Thursday, respectively, still play to a wonderful business. The regular popularity of this house seems to have drifted to the new Arcade since its opening a few weeks ago due possibly to the newness and the large seating capacity.

T. F. McTier, of the Atlanta V-L-S-E office, was a visitor in the city a few days ago.

John Barton, manager of the Consolidated Film exchange, has also returned for an extended trip through the state.

S. A. Lynch, president of the Southern Investment and Amusement Company of this city, and a promoter of many amusement enterprises of the South, was a visitor in the city this week.

The Duval theater, which at one time run Paramount pictures under the management of F. T. Montgomery, is undergoing repairs and improvements, and will be converted into a Keith Vaudeville House, with seven acts and pictures.

MEMPHIS WEATHER SLIDES.

Charles A. McElravey, General Manager of the Majestic Amusement Company Will Get Weather Clerk's Weather Forecasts for His Screen.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

IT IS given out at Memphis, Tenn., that Charles A. McElravy, general manager of the Majestic Amusement Company, is arranging to get daily weather forecasts, which will be shown on the screen at the theater. The bulletins will be received direct from the bureau at Washington. The weather at all seasons of the year is one of the most discussed topics that can be thought of. Patrons of all theaters are more or less interested in both general and local conditions. The Government is said to have agreed to furnish forecasts at the Majestic theaters for display at both morning and evening shows.

The morning bulletins will be shown on the screen until 7 o'clock at night, when the forecast for the following days will be given. It is said that Memphis will be the sixteenth city in the United States to display weather reports at moving picture shows, Birmingham, Ala., holding the distinction of being the first city to adopt the plan. It is undersood that the authorities at Washington have agreed to make up a special daily bulletin for picture houses, and the local weather bureaus will not have anything to do with the proposition. The idea is undoubtedly good, and a great many other theaters are expected to fall in line shortly.

ALL OVER TENNESSEE.

S. S. White, of Jefferson City, Tenn., has replaced one of his old machines with a new Power 6 A motor driven outfit, which is proving very satisfactory.

J. C. Jackson, proprietor of the Reed theater at Morristown, Tenn., is opening a new theater at Newport, Tenn. This theater will have a seating capacity of 500, and will be thoroughly equipped.

Walter Kennedy, manager of the Gem at Knoxville, Tenn., is enlarging the theater and has purchased two hundred additional seats, which are now being installed. Business with the Gem has been improving for some time past, and difficulty has been experienced in handling the crowds.

R. E. Groves, of Oliver Springs, Tenn., has purchased 300 seats, a moving picture machine of the Edison make and other equipment for a new airdome which will seat 300 people. The theater will be called the "Edisonia."

Boyle & Duckworth is the name of a firm which is preparing to open a small moving picture theater at Bluff City, Tenn. The house will have a seating capacity of about 175 and will operate just one machine.

Buckley Starkey is reported to be in Knoxville, Tenn., with a company which has been selected to make a picture to be known as "The Cotton King." Mr. Starkey recently returned from a trip to his boyhood home, where he states he was royally entertained by the natives, and is now feeling fit for most anything which may happen.

The Universal film production known as "Scandal" made such a strong impression the first time that it was shown at the Vendome theater at Nashville, Tenn., that it was recalled and shown for two additional days. The film is said to have been one of the most-talked-of productions of the month in the Tennessee capital.

In response to a long list of requests from patrons of the Crescent theater at Nashville, Tenn., the management recently brought back and showed Blanche Sweet in the great play, "Judith of Bethulia," which was first shown in Nashville many months ago.

Another old timer recently shown was "Cabiria," at the Orpheum, upon its first engagement in Nashville. This superb film was shown at advanced prices at the Orpheum, to packed houses. However, the film drew packed houses when shown at the Crescent at regular prices in spite of the fact that it was shown for a full week upon its first engagement in the city. Return engagements are proving popular with a number of the big houses and big productions.

At Chattanooga, Tenn., patrons of moving picture theaters have fewer theaters to choose from just now than for some time past. Howell Graham, manager of the "Quality Way theaters," has closed the Colonial, which will have the interior decorations touched up, but will reopen shortly. The Alcazar theater is also closed while some rather extensive improvements are made.

HERE AND THERE IN IOWA.

W. J. Beminger, of O'Brien & Beminger, of Minneapolis, has opened the Royal theater at Charles City.

E. C. Pryor, who recently sold his photoplay house at Green, has taken a lease on the Majestic theater, at Perry. He made a number of improvements.

"The Man at the Throttle," a home talent photoplay with all the thrills that go with a railroad wreck, did a good business at the Jewel theater, in Burlington.

W. McGowan, of Evansville, Ind., is the new manager of the Orpheum, at Des Moines.

J. E. Benton has enlarged the stage in the Comet, at Albia, to play road shows.

The Quinn skating rink, at Martinsburg, has been remodeled and the Page Amusement Company, of Des Moines, has opened a motion picture show there.

George Still, of Eldora, has purchased the Isis theater, at Independence.

Ralph Perafield, who has been in charge of the Temple theater, at Chariton, and William Kitterman, who has been connected with the Grand theater there, have taken a lease on the Temple.

Chautauqua week in Wapello gave Manager Keck of the Keck theater a good opportunity to close his house for reseating.

John Peters has sold his motion picture theater at Dumont to Mr. Anderson, of Waterloo.

Guy Mahoney and Ross McLaughlin have installed new equipment in the Palm theater at Missouri Valley.

W. A. Miller has purchased the Orpheum theater, at Keokuk. Manager Stanley will remain in charge.

The Strand Theater Company, of Cedar Rapids, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are: A. J. Diebold, H. E. Spangler and M. Ford.

The New Family theater, at Davenport, has reopened after a busy season with the artisans. Among the improvements was the installation of a pipe organ. The first ten days' features included "The Right of Way," "Judy Forgot" and "The Garden of Lies."

The Star theater, at Washington, has started a twenty-one day voting contest and will send some young lady to the Panama exposition.

The Majestic theater, at Cedar Rapids, will be remodeled. "Companion seats" in the front will be a feature.

The Star theater, at Dubuque, which was closed for the summer, has reopened and is now a strictly 10-cent house.

The Atlantic Amusement Company has given up its lease on the Opera house, at Atlantic and will devote its time to the Majestic and unique theaters. Hervert & Leach, owners of the opera house, will operate it.

NEWS FROM WISCONSIN.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

The contract has been let for the construction of a new church for St. Stanislaus Polish Catholic church at Superior which will have an auditorium seating 400 persons, which will be used for motion picture shows. It will be fully equipped.

"The Birth of a Nation" has been booked to open at the Orpheum theater in Green Bay, Sept. 12, for a seven-day engagement. A twelve-piece orchestra will be used.

Motion picture shows are listed among the "things which are bad for all babies" in a bulletin issued by the Wisconsin State Board of Health.

Milwaukee detectives, watching a film of the sand bag test of the lake steamer Christopher Columbus, saw in the crew Roy Chapman, wanted a year ago for larcenry and arrested him as the steamer docked in Milwaukee.

"The Birth of a Nation" ended an eight weeks' engagement at the Davidson theater in Milwaukee, Aug. 28, making way for a musical comedy. The film was shown 114 times in the course of its stay. The film is booked for Sheboygan the week of Oct. 17.

The Jackson theater at Ogden avenue and Jackson street, in Milwaukee, opened August 21 with a policy of high class photoplays. Bernhard Rosenow is manager. The house seats 870.

Joe Seward gave a five-reel show at the Opera house in Soldiers' Grove as a benefit for Miss Lulu Bailey, who is receiving treatment in a sanitarium.

The Lyric theater at Eau Claire is being remodeled. A new front with canopy is being installed and the seating capacity increased. A new policy of exclusive first-run pictures will mark the reopening about the middle of September.

The Alhabra theater at Milwaukee has started its new policy of using only two instead of three attractions a week.

Portage may have a new motion picture house, representatives of a Boston syndicate having visited the city with a view to securing a site for a theater and business building.

Peter H. Bronsead, of Menominee, has purchased the Badger theater at Millsville from John F. Bruhn.

Christian C. Gillis, of Milwaukee, has filed suit for $500 damages against the Majestic Theater Company and the Joseph Schlitz Brewing Company. Gillis alleges he went to the theater on April 12 and fell when he stepped aside to allow another patron to pass him.

IOWA.

A FILM portraying the early life of Julien Dubuque, the man who founded the city of Dubuque, will be made there by the Warren Film Company, of Chicago. It will deal with the French traders, the Indians and the early settlers. John P. Mulgrew has written the scenario.

C. W. Peterson, of Red Oak has sold the Scenic at that place to Thomas Crawford and William Swan, who operate theaters at Columbus and Wahoo, Neb.

Arthur Gardner has sold his motion picture show at Earlham.

Manager McIntyre has sold the Orpheum theater at Oelwein to a Mr. Walsh of Eldora.

C. A. Hansen is now sole owner of the Princess theater at Titonka, having purchased the interest of his partner, S. S. Hudson.

C. C. Schroeder has sold his interest in the Opera House block at Preston to his partner, Theodore Muhl, of Cedar Rapids.

Paul Lamarquande, formerly manager of the Empress theater at Omaha, has taken charge of the photoplay shows at the Cecil theater in Mason City for Proprietor Arthur. He will be assisted by his partner, C. F. Rose.

Manager Martin of the Princess theater at Cedar Rapids has let a contract for remodeling his house, which will increase the capacity to 624. After the alterations it will be a feature house, charging ten cents.

Doctors and nurses in Cedar Rapids were the guests of the Palace theater to see "Dr. Rameau."

LOOKING BACK

over all that the market offers there are no better—if as good—one reel comedies to be found than Cub Comedies. This David Horsley brand, though new to the Mutual program, has caught on like wildfire.

A CUB COMEDY IS JUST WHAT EVERY EXHIBITOR NEEDS

Every release sparkles with good, clean fun, cleverly brought out by a lively company of comedians, headed by George Ovey, the funniest man in America.

There are advertising possibilities for any theatre with really funny pictures to back them up! With every Cub you get the most compelling one and three sheet posters you ever saw.

Released September 2: "Making Matters Worse." September 9: "Jerry and the Gunman."

Order from your Mutual exchange.

Special Note: Beginning with the week of September 12 a Cub Comedy will be released every Friday instead of Thursday, the present release day.

NEW YORK, AUG. 23, 1915.

DEAR SIR:
I HAVE SEEN YOUR MOVING PICTURE "GUARDING OLD GLORY." EVERY AMERICAN SHOULD SEE THIS PICTURE. XXX IT IS INTERESTING, INSTRUCTIVE AND OF IMMENSE VALUE TO THE COUNTRY. THE NAVY LEAGUE WILL CO-OPERATE WITH YOU IN EVERY WAY TO SECURE WIDE PUBLICATION FOR THE PICTURE.
YOURS VERY TRULY,
ROBERT M. THOMPSON
EXECUTIVE CHAIRMAN

TO-STATE-RIGHT-BUYERS

Here, right now is your opportunity. An opportunity you've never had before for quick action. "Guarding Old Glory" is the most timely and important Picture on the market to-day. It comes at the crucial moment, when our Country, serene in its peaceful attitude that we are prepared for war, may awaken at any moment to the real facts should the "call to arms" be sounded. "Guarding Old Glory" tells the truth to the American people. It tells it in a thrilling and exciting manner. No other picture has such action, such thrills, such beautiful photography. And its free from play features. Your daily paper is printing columns on the very subject "Guarding Old Glory" tells you about. "Guarding Old Glory" is the one picture that is backed by the Press, Patriotic Lagues, Government Heads and the Public. Peace and Preparedness is a subject that will be uppermost in the public mind for months to come. President Wilson is now giving it his undivided attention. College Professors are thoroughly discussing it. Our Leaders on Land and Sea are advocating it. Newspapers are preaching it, and when Congress meets it will be the one great question to be voted upon. Consequently "Guarding Old Glory" falls heir to columns of free advertising, and a Prestige in every locality, which makes this picture of unestimatable value to the State Right Buyer.

LUBIN.

TEASING A TORNADO (Sept. 6).—Colonel Bickford's favorite niece, Laura, with several of her Eastern friends, pays a visit to his ranch. While making a tour of the corral, Laura spies Tornado Jack, an awkward cowboy, afraid of nothing but a woman. Laura starts a mild flirtation with Jack. There is a lawn party and dance being held at Howard's ranch, across the desert that night, and Laura induced her uncle to let her invite Jack. Tornado receives the invitation with joy. His clothes are limited, but the cowboys see to that, each contributing some cherished article of wearing apparel to make complete the wonderful outfit with which they bedeck him; the fact is that it is ludicrous, but Jack is ignorant of this fact and goes to the dance anticipating the time of his life.

Laura, with the aid of her friends, plays many pranks upon him, until at last, in shame and anger, he slips away. He hastily dons the clothes in which he feels "at home," and rides away to forget his bitter experience. Out in the desert he encounters his tormentors coming home in the family carryall and, putting a handkerchief over his face, he holds them up, with a pipe as a revolver. The fright of his tormentors satisfies his wounded pride and he allows them to proceed, continuing his way in the darkness. A turn in the road brings the carryall face to face with a couple of real bandits, who handle the already badly frightened party rather roughly. Jack hears their screams and wheels his horse and rides to the rescue, putting the bandits to flight after a fight in which he battles unarmed against two desperate gunmen. The next day those who have scorned and teased Jack come to praise his bravery, but with lofty manner and outraged pride, he ignores his former tormentors.

FINN AND HADDIE—(Sept. 7).—Hermann Finn and Fergus Haddie here resolve to essay life as a vaudeville team. They present themselves at the theater for a trial. After a vain attempt to please, they get the "hook," while the audience pelt them with various missiles. They wander down the street until they espy a sign before an employment agency, calling for a first and second cook. Haddie applies for the job and the agent sends them to the house of the wealthy Tom Van Austin. They are engaged by Mrs. Van Austin, who directs them to prepare a dinner, which is to be an adjunct to a ball to be given that night to celebrate her wedding anniversary. Mrs. Van Austin proposes to wear at this ball an expensive set of pearls, but Mr. Van Austin calls her attention to a paragraph in the daily paper which relates the many thefts of jewels at social functions, and suggests that she place her pearls in the safe deposit vault. The pearls are placed in a box to be taken to the vault.

On telephoning to the bank, Mr. Van Austin finds that it is closed for the day, and determines to place the box in his house safe. Haddie, who has gone to the store for a box of eggs, at that moment enters the rooms to register a protest with his master about the way Finn makes him do all the work. Both boxes are laid on the table. After his interview, Haddie inadvertently picks up the box and departs to the kitchen where he places the supposed eggs in the refrigerator, while Mr. Van Austin looks the real egg box in the safe. The fact that Mrs. Van Austin is to wear her pearls at the ball having been chronicled in the papers, various bands of crooks resolve to make an attempt to steal them.

The night arrives, the guests are assembling, and among them Raffles and his confederate, Finn and Haddie, who have been drafted in as waiters to serve the guests, overhear the two crooks plotting to steal the pearls and resolve to forestall them. While engaged in their attempt, they are surprised by the real crooks, whom they capture one by one, and stand in a row against the wall. The waiters having disappeared, Mrs Van Austin becomes suspicious as to the safety of her pearls, and she and her husband go to the library to investigate. There Mr. Van Austin is attacked by the thieves and overpowered. Mrs. Van Austin gives the alarm and the police drive up to the house. Finn and Haddie escape from the library and take refuge in the kitchen, pretending to be asleep at the table. Mrs. Van Austin leads the police to the library, her husband is released, the robbers placed under arrest, and the safe is opened. The box is discovered to be filled with eggs and the crooks all faint. A light breaks upon Mr. Van Austin, who recalls the interview with his cook, who was carrying a box at the time, and he heads a rush to the kitchen. There the right box is found in the refrigerator and the pearls restored to their happy owner.

THE IRISH IN AMERICA—(Special—Three Parts—Sept. 8).—Dan Murphy loves Peggy O'Sullivan, but he is too poor to think of matrimony. Dan sells his one cow, bids farewell to the weeping Peggy, and sets sail across the Atlantic for America. Arriving there, he makes track for a mining camp, where he has many adventures until he strikes it rich.

Immediately he writes to Peggy, sending her money to come on to be married. But the mail bag containing his precious missive falls from the stage coach and is rifled by a marauding Indian. In the meantime Peggy is very much worried, for she has not heard from Dan for weeks. Finally she can stand it no longer. Her aunt has died and she sells the few things she possesses and begins the journey to America.

Arriving in America she goes to Dan's last known address and on the way meets two working girls who befriend her. Dan has disappeared, however, and the only clue to his whereabouts is a picture postal card bearing the postmark of the western mining camp. Undaunted, Peggy packs up her few belongings, and in the course of time arrives at the camp to the delight of Dan. It doesn't take long to summon the priest and they are married.

ROMANCE AS A REMEDY—(Special—Two Parts—Sept. 9).—Jack Lowe's fiancee, Ann, worships romance. A few days prior to her planned marriage with Jack, Ann is visited by her cousin, Nora, who brings along her chum, Dick Rogers. By this time Jack has determined to disillusionize Ann, realizing that if she does not get the silly idea out of her head, their married life will be seriously marred. Jack goes to Nora for advice. Nora has been secretly in love with Jack all along. Also Dick has developed an affection for Ann which he is trying hard to conceal. Nora, delighted at the opportunity of giving Jack "advice," suggests that he arrange to have Ann kidnapped from the marriage altar in a highly romantic way by a handsome masked highwayman. She suggests that Dick play the highwayman, and take Ann to the country home of Dick's Aunt Amelia and there keep her imprisoned until she is disillusionized forever about romance. The affair is carried out as planned.

As time passes, Jack begins to worry. Instead of the letters begging for his help that he had expected from Ann, he receives only subtly worded messages which convey the impression that Ann is not only enjoying her romantic experience, but is falling in love with her abductor. Jack, realizing he is not yet Ann's husband, becomes desperate, but Nora is secretly delighted. While Ann and Dick make constant love under Aunt Amelia's chaperonage, Jack develops more and more tenderness for Nora. But his desperation as concerns Ann grows worse and worse when he receives a wire from her reading: "I am in love—what shall I do?" Jack wires back "Wait for me—and sit tight."

While he makes a mad dash for a train, taking Nora along with him, Ann obeys Jack's telegram to the letter and "sits tight" with Dick on all occasions. The presence of Ann at Aunt Amelia's home fans into a flame the almost extinct love-fire of two old hayseeds boarding at Amelia's—Hy and Jed. They play checkers constantly to see which of them shall win the fair lady from the city. One day, after they have come to blows following a heated argument as to their respective claims upon Ann, they look through the window and see Ann being married to Dick. Jack's former fiancee has not only been unchanged by her severe lesson, but has proved herself a stronger advocate of romance than ever by marrying the handsome young chap who was employed by Jack to abduct her. Jack and Nora, meanwhile, arrive breathless in the little rural village to learn from the Justice of the Peace that Dick and Ann are just being married. Nora and Jack hurry to Aunt Amelia's, where the wedding is just being completed and a big barn dance about to start. After the ravings of Jack and the hilarity of the others have subsided, Ann suggests a way out of the difficulty by having Jack marry Nora—just what the foxy little Nora had been wishing for.

JEALOUSY (Sept. 10).—Will Bradley, a college undergraduate, loves Nellie Birch, a fair co-ed, but is insanely jealous of the innocent attentions paid her by Bob Walker, his friend. College days over, Will, now Dr. William Bradley, marries Nellie.

The years pass. Will is very fond of Nellie and their little son. Then, one day he receives a letter from Bob, who is coming to visit them. Instantly his expression clouds, and he looks at Nellie suspiciously when she expresses joy at seeing her old friend again. Nellie pats Will's head reprovingly, tells him he is all tired from overwork, and leaves the room with the child to get his slippers and jacket. Shortly after, Bob arrives. Will notices in alarm the way Nellie greets him. He almost catches them in an embrace when he comes from the telephone to say that he has been called out of the city. That night when he returns, he finds Bob eloping with Nellie. There is a stormy interview. Bob brings out a revolver, and in the scuffle that ensues, the child, who has been awakened by the noise, is shot and killed as he rushes in to protect his daddy. The guilty pair make their escape, and Will, alone with his dead child, vows vengeance.

Then starts a search lasting for several years. Will finally locates Bob and Nellie in a cheap dive in the underworld. They have sunk to the depths, and Will confronts them as Bob is taking some money away from Nellie. Will keeps his vow and kills Bob, but as he turns to Nellie, several policemen seize him, and he is led away. At the trial, Will is convicted. He denounces Nellie before the whole court, and she faints. While all bend over her, Will seizes the opportunity to jump through an open window. Pursued by the police, he is just about to jump off a bridge when they catch him, and beat him over the head with their clubs. And then—Will awakes. His child is beating him with his slipper, and telling him mamma is waiting. It has all been a dream, and Will is cured of his foolish jealousy when Bob does arrive, bringing with him a surprise in the person of his bride, Mrs. "Bob."

QUEENIE OF THE NILE—(Sept. 11).—Billie is not afraid of hard work, but hard work seems to be afraid of him. Each time that he asks for a job he gets thrown out. Finally he meets a physician who offers him work, explaining that his patient is very, very wealthy and as crazy as she is rich. This does not appeal to Billie, but he consents to take the job when he is told that all he has to do is to play Marc Antony to her Cleopatra. He conjures up visions of cocktails, moonlight excursions on the Nile and all sorts of delightful things, and he accepts the job with alacrity and profuse thanks. But Cleo isn't quite as young as she used to be, and this is something of a shock to Billie, and he remembers that the doctor explained a cut in Marc Antony's coat by reference to a knife. Still, he braves it out, but gets in wrong almost instantly by laughing in her face when she comments on his changed appearance.

This is smoothed over—a couple of times—and Cleopatra decrees that the evening shall be spent in revelry to celebrate her beloved's return. All might have been well had it not been for Charmian, in reality Cleopatra's maid, and a chubby little dancer. Bill gets Cleo jealous and has to run for his life. He sees a policeman and seeks his protection. Accidentally the policeman clubs Cleopatra and she is restored to sanity. She disowns her love for Bill and turns to the doctor. Bill is quite willing to take Charmian instead, and the policeman steals away, feeling that he is needed elsewhere.

EDISON.

THE SIMP AND THE SOPHOMORES—(Sept. 1).—Percy Quince enters the co-ed academy of Prof. Stout. The professor shows Alice Fields, one of the girl students, a letter from Percy's mother, warning him against allowing Percy to enter into any contests of strength, as he is, the note says, "so strong that he may injure the other boys." Alice tells the girls and boys, and when Percy finally does show up, they see that he lives up to his name, and is far from being a future "white hope." Led by Tom Haze, they immediately proceed to make him wish he were dead, and put him through all sorts of indignities. He will beat them at their own game, if he can. By so doing, he argues, he will win the admiration of Alice, who has called him a "simp." A day or two later he is told by the boys that they wish to make him a member of the Hylumpus Debating Club. When he accepts, he is told that the committee of the club will visit him in his room at midnight, and that he must be prepared. Suspecting more abuse at the hands of the "committee," he decides that this is the time to strike back.

In a newspaper he has read the advertisement of Professor Arm. Strong, an exponent of the art of self-defense. He goes to the professor's establishment and "fixes it" with him to come to the academy that night and occupy his bed. At midnight, several dark figures mount the stairway to Percy's room. They are surprised to find that he is not up and waiting for them. On the contrary, snores come from the direction of the bed. As one man, they spring upon the bed and commence to pound the "sleeping" figure. Then the boxing professor starts in. Percy, concealed in the clothes closet, listens delightedly to the agonized howls emitted by the badly beaten "committee." Finally the "pug" throws the boys out bodily, and a little later he leaves the building, after having been paid by Percy.

Next morning a sad-looking procession wends its way out of the school hospital. Percy, now believed by all of them to be "some scrapper," is seated in the shade of a tree, making, for the first time, a real "hit" with Alice, who has learned of the night's adventure.

ACROSS THE GREAT DIVIDE—(Sept. 4).—Bob Carson, a New Englander, is betrothed to Mary Sanderson, the daughter of a neighboring farmer. Feeling that his opportunities for success in his native village are small, he tells her that he has decided to strike out for the great west, and promises to return and make her his wife just as soon as his bettered fortunes will permit him to.

Months later, in Chicago, he is "broke" and out of work. The fruitless striving has almost completely broken the spirit of the young man and he feels as though he would like to end it all by taking his own life. But each time, the memory of the girl who is waiting for him, spurs him on to try again, and finally, remembering that as a boy he was interested in telegraphy, he determines to take up the work and make a success of it. Later, he is given an appointment as assistant operator at a small station in Colorado. But even then, many weary months are passed without his being able to feel that he can return to the girl in New England and marry her.

The part of the state where Bob's station is situated is infested by a band of outlaws, led by the notorious "Black Jack," a man who once held a responsible position as telegraph operator and station agent. He and his band are greatly feared, and a reward of $5,000 is offered for him, dead or alive. One of the outlaws spends several days in getting information to the effect that a certain train is to carry a Wells-Fargo shipment of $300,000 in paper currency. "Black Jack" gets the message sent by this man and at once gives orders to part of his band to hold up the express train at a certain rocky pass. With another of the band he goes himself to the station, and leaving the man outside, on guard, he enters and commands Bob, who is on solitary night duty, to throw up his hands. At the point of a gun he forces him to send a message which will result in a head-on collision between the train which the bandits are to hold up and another passenger train from the east, it being the bandit's theory to cover up the robbery by a collision.

Only a few seconds later, a call is heard coming over the wire. It is a message for Bob, himself, and comes from New England. The girl for whom he has worked and waited is dead. For a moment, the shock of the news stuns him completely. Then, realizing that he has lost everything that makes life worth while, he reaches out and starts to send a message, countermanding the order that will bring the two trains together. Divining his purpose, "Black Jack" covers his heart with the revolver and fires. Bob falls across the desk, and believing him dead, the outlaw places his revolver in Bob's hand, thinking to make it appear a case of suicide. As the outlaw turns toward the door, Bob slowly raises his head and sees the revolver. Half turning, he fires, and the bandit falls to the floor, dead. Two other railroad men, hearing the shot, rush up and dispose of the outlaw guarding the door, but when they enter the depot, they find Bob in a dying condition. He manages to tell them of the plot to wreck the trains, and one of them immediately sends a warning to hold back the train that would collide with the one the outlaws have robbed. Hardly has he seen this accomplished, when Bob again falls forward across the table. They lift him up, but they are too late. He has gone to join his sweetheart, "Across the Great Divide."

WHAT HAPPENED ON THE BARBUDA (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 10).—Professor Dislow, a celebrated New York physician, receives a summons from a colleague in South America, requesting him to come at once to attend a patient who is in a critical condition. He finds that no passenger steamer is leaving for three days, and his granddaughter, Ruth, shows him a shipping notice to the effect that the freighter "Barbuda" will sail on the following day for the port he wants to reach. He decides to try to engage passage on the freighter, and Ruth, after much persuasion, gets him to promise to take her along with him.

"Beau" Harvey is the leader of a gang of gunmen. The police have been active of late and Harvey is convinced that it is time to seek pastures new. He has been tipped off by one of the "Barbuda's" crew that the vessel is to carry a large shipment of silver, to be used in a South American manufacturing plant, when she leaves on her coming trip. Through this man, he makes arrangements for ten of the crew to desert on the night before the steamer sails, Harvey paying them to do so. Harvey then takes ten of his men and applies to the captain for work aboard the ship. Left in the lurch at the last moment, the captain signs them on, and Professor Dislow and Ruth, having arranged for a passage, come aboard only a few hours later.

Harvey's plan is to get as many of the crew to join them as are willing to share in his enterprises, and to seize the ship and its cargo of silver. Meantime, Ruth has become friendly with Tom Avery, the first mate. On the second day out, the Professor receives a wireless message that the patient he is starting to visit has died, and the captain promises to try to send him and Ruth back by an inward bound steamer. That night, Harvey and his men throw overboard three of the crew who are faithful to the captain, and seven others are killed by drinking coffee which Harvey has poisoned. The Captain, Professor Dislow and Avery are then seized, bound, and thrown into a stateroom and the wireless operator murdered. The second mate is forced to join the mutineers.

A storm arises and the propeller shaft is broken. The ship runs aground on a reef just off a small island. Harvey has already cut the wireless aerial down, so that help cannot be summoned in that way. The mutineers prepare to go ashore. Ruth persuades Harvey to let her speak with her grandfather, before leaving the ship, and the professor gives her a bottle of morphine tablets, urging her, should the worst come to the worst, to swallow the contents. She is then taken ashore by the mutineers. Harvey orders her to prepare a meal for them and she empties the phial of morphine into the coffee pot. The mutineers fall into a heavy slumber, and Ruth makes her escape to the "Barbuda." She releases her grandfather the captain and Avery, and Avery repairs the wireless apparatus. He sends a message which is answered by the U. S. S. Freedom,' the battleship adding the message that, being on the other side of the island, it will soon be able to rescue them.

Meantime, the boat in which Ruth has returned to the "Barbuda" has drifted back to the island, and the mutineers, upon being aroused by Harvey, who is the first to recover consciousness, clamber into it and row toward the ship. But as they approach on the one side, the launch from the warship comes up from the other. No sooner do the mutineers clamber aboard the "Barbuda" and attack the captain and the others, when the bluejackets attack them in turn. The gunmen are made prisoners, and taken aboard the battleship along with the professor and the others. Some of the battleship's crew are left to guard the Barbuda" until a ship can be sent to transfer her cargo, and as the battleship steams off, bound for Key West, Avery and Ruth, seated on the deck, are plighting their troth.

THE SILENT TONGUE (Sept. 15).—Ethel's uncle received a letter from his ward, Bob, that after six years spent in touring the world, he is coming home. He tells his guardian that he is tired of the social whirl and of silly girls who do nothing but talk, and that he will never marry until he finds a girl with a silent tongue. Reading this letter, Ethel is at first indignant over the way Bob speaks of girls. She tells her guardian that she wants him to tell Bob that she was thrown out of a boat a year before, and that ever since then she has been deaf and dumb. He promises his support.

When Bob arrives, he is greatly impressed by Ethel's appearance, but is astounded to hear of the "accident." Ethel keeps up the deception and compels Bob to communicate with her by writing his messages on a pad.

Finally Bob remembers having heard that, when certain afflictions are the result of an accident or shock, a similar accident or shock may restore the afflicted one to the normal state. He hits upon a plan and invites Ethel to go out with him for a boat ride. As soon as they are out in deep water, Bob stands up and starts rocking the boat, which is overturned. The moment she rises to the surface, after going under for the first time, Ethel emits a loud call for "Help!" Bob realizes that his scheme has been successful and swims with her back to land. Still keeping up the deception, Ethel tells him how delighted she is at having her speech and hearing restored, and Bob, assuring her that he is equally delighted at the way the "accident" has turned out, loses no time in gaining her consent to become his wife.

THE WAY OF A WOMAN'S HEART (Special -Two Parts—Aug. 30).—While on a tour a theatrical company meets with small success and is forced to close early in the season. Claude Harris and Rose Marsh, two members of the company, are lovers and console each other. An offer comes to Claude from his uncle to enter business and he takes it, agreeing to return and marry Rose. A few short months are all that are needed to make Claude forget his sweetheart, for his uncle introduces him to a beautiful society girl named Amie Dante.

Rose, fearing Claude has forsaken her, sends for him. He reluctantly goes to her and there is a stormy interview when he says that their marriage is impossible. Three years pass by. Amie Dante finishes her college course and takes part in amateur theatricals. She confides to Claude her secret ambition to go on the stage. A noted actress comes to the city, fresh from triumphs on the European stage. She is billed as Rosalind Ayre and Amie determines to go to her and ask her advice about taking up a stage career.

Claude determines that he will see Rosalind Ayre before Amie does and tell her to discourage the girl, for he fears that if his sweetheart goes on the stage she will be lost to him forever. He goes to the famous actress and finds that she is none other than Rose Marsh, the girl of his past. He tells her that she holds his future happiness in her hand and begs her not to encourage Amie. Rose, in contempt, tells him how her child was born after he refused to marry her. Upon her recovery she went to Europe. When she finishes her story Claude renews his pleas and the heart of the woman who once loved him melts. Amie comes to Rose and tells her of her ambitions. The actress allows her to show what talent she has and then tells her she could never hope for success on the stage. Amie is disappointed and tells Claude she will marry him at once, as she has decided to give up her stage career.

THE MAN WITH THE IRON HEART (Special -Three Parts—Sept. 2).—I. M. Mann, millionaire president of a large corporation, is known as "the man with the iron heart." James Boyd, cashier for Mann's corporation, is delayed one morning because of a dying mother, and is discharged. Then Boyd goes to Union headquarters with his story. The thousands of workmen employed by Mann finally reach the limit of endurance, and at a union meeting, resolve to demand increased wages, a cessation of child labor and other benefits—or strike. He refuses to hear a committee of workmen and says, "I'll close up the factories and let you starve."

Boyd resolves to plead with Mrs. Mann for the workmen. He tells the wife: "Your husband holds the destiny of 50,000 people in his hands." Mann arrives at his palatial home at this moment. He is infuriated at the sight of Boyd. He strikes him and orders him thrown from the house. And then it is that Conscience appears to "the man with the iron heart." "Out of my heart forever, Conscience," exclaims Mann, but he is unable to stifle Conscience. Mrs. Mann leaves her stone-hearted husband, telling him that she will return when he resolves to grant the favors asked for by his workmen. Mann orders a strike breaker to fill his factories with non-union men by noon of tomorrow. At noon the following day, the union men march from the factories. They encounter the mob of strike breakers and a terrible conflict ensues in which the police are summoned, who with difficulty quell the rioters.

Mann returns to his home and as he enters the threshold, he is shot by one of the rioters. Placed in his bed, Conscience appears before him in his delirium and also Death. He overcomes Death, but is unable to repulse Conscience. Conscience shows "the man with the iron heart" the scenes of suffering which he has caused of his discharged cashier caring for the dying mother, the death of a little child, and of his wife pleading for leniency to the workmen. Overcome by Conscience, Mann is no longer known as "the man with the iron heart." He summons his wife to his bedside. He grants the request of his workmen and his reformation is complete.

THE AWFUL ADVENTURES OF AN AVIATOR (Jungle Zoo Subject—Sept. 4).—Harold McFutt, a pest, talks aviation, and his bluff is finally called and he has to buy an aeroplane. Way up in the air, the seat breaks and Harold falls to earth and into the mouth of an oil well. He continues through the center of the earth until he reaches the wilds of Africa where he has all kinds of exciting adventures with wild beasts and savages. As he is about to be put into the soup pot by an African chief, he awakens, to find it all a dream.

BIOGRAPH.

AMONG THOSE KILLED (Sept. 6).—Clay Judson lives alone in a cabin remote from civilization. A rider from the nearest settlement brings him his monthly mail and some poisoned meat for his wolf traps. Among the letters is one reading: "I'll kill you for putting me in prison. I'll be at your place on the seventh."

The writer is John Morton, a man whom he has cause to fear. Morton and he had loved the same girl. To put his rival out of the way, Judson had schemed his imprisonment on a charge of theft. But he gained nothing; the girl refused to turn on the man she loved. On the morning of the seventh Judson is panic-stricken. While planning to defend himself he accidentally discharges his revolver and is wounded.

Disabled, he can never hope to escape the avenger. In desperation he eats of the poisoned meat, rather than fall into Morton's hands. His dying eye rests on the newspaper in which the meat was wrapped. Under the big headlines is an account of a train wreck, part of which reads: "Among those killed was John Morton, an ex-convict . . ."

A DIFFERENCE OF OPINION (Special—Two Parts—Sept. 7).—When Stinger Johnson's wife, Marietta, gave birth to a boy, the citizens of Willow Creek celebrated the remarkable occurrence. The christening was a grand affair. "Bill" received the freedom of the camp, and was voted a full partnership in its activities. One day Stinger Johnson went out of town on business, and Bill grew fretful. Marietta told the distressing news to Tom Evans, who told Sympathy Smith and soon the entire camp knew that Bill was mighty sick.

A doctor must be got at once, and some of the boys set out to Fourflush. Hardly had they started when a leading spirit declared the Fourflush doctor was no good—he knew a better one. And off went another contingent to fetch him. Both doctors arrived in due course and, backed by their champions, diagnosed the baby's case. Face to face, they pooh-poohed each other. The camp was split into two factions, each of which believed its doctor infallible. Written warnings were posted, hinting at bloodshed if the other side insisted on escorting its man to take Bill's temperature. When the excitement was at fever heat, Stinger Johnson returned, looked both medicine men over, and declared: "I know 'em. One's a horse doctor and the other's a dentist. Take 'em away." And after the impostors had been run out of town it turned out that Bill was not sick at all.

THE BROKEN WRIST (Sept. 9).— Anne Carlton, a hospital nurse, volunteers when Doctor Hunter expresses the wish to try his new serum on a human being; but Doctor Gordon, who loves her, interferes angrily. The slightest overdose of the serum, Hunter acknowledges, will prove fatal; and Gordon fears for Anne's life. In a struggle with a deranged patient Anne's wrist is broken, and an X-ray is taken of the fracture. As a result of his quarrel with Gordon, Hunter resigns. Anne goes to join him in his work. He effects a marvelous cure in a distant city. Gordon reads of it and visits him. Alone in the offices, he sees the skeleton of a woman with a broken wrist. Comparing the fracture with the X-ray photograph he becomes convinced that Anne is dead. When Hunter returns, Gordon seizes him, binds him to a chair, and is on the point of injecting an overdose of the serum into his neck when Anne appears. Explanations ensue, and Anne, promising to take no more risks, consents that her lover shall have the power to order her life for the future.

OIL AND WATER (Reissue No. 14 Special—Two Parts—Sept. 10).—While his brother remains at home among his books, the staid young idealist attends the theater where Mlle. Genova and her company perform the sensational Dance of the Fleeting Hours. In its symbolic interpretation of life's insecurity, the dance effects him profoundly. He sees Venus, goddess of love, usher Youth into Earth's enticing promises. There Youth dallies until Jupiter, holding aloft Roses of Happiness, descends among mortals. Unseen, the Sands of Time run on while the world dances madly. At last, stirred by the world-old desires, the mortals dance after the Impossible. Time, the silent Reaper, shadows their excesses. Magically the dancers grow old and perish, trampling each other in the endless chase after the phantom Happiness. The reaper's harvest is grim. And at the end what? Dust and ashes—no more. To this climax soars the wonderful woman who leads the dance, while the idealist sits spellbound.

After the performance he has a delightful experience; a friend takes him behind the scenes and introduces him to Mlle. Genova. She is a good actress on and off, but to him she appears the most desirable woman in the world. In her he sees the living goddess of the dance, and impetuously he proposes marriage. Why does she accept? Perhaps it is the hunger in her heart, or merely the allurement of a new experience. Whatever the reason, she marries him and charms his family into acceptance of her.

Years pass; she has borne a child; her husband is still the adoring lover, but she is not happy. Repressed by her surroundings, she craves the old excitement. An ill-timed visit of old stage acquaintances brings matters to a head; she flouts the idealist, surrenders all claim to her child, and goes back to the old life, while her disillusioned husband seeks to make the best of the situation for the child's sake. One evening the child escapes from the house and, wandering away, is found by the mother. She takes the little one home, and for a moment her heart yearns to reclaim all that she has lost. But it cannot be. "My ways are not your ways," she tells her husband in a tremendous scene, and parts from him forever. Oil and water each in its own element—irreconcilable.

AT THE ROAD'S END (Sept. 11).—The young contractor scrapes acquaintance with the girl by petting her dog, and, having met her mother, insinuates himself into the old lady's good graces. But he cannot fool the dog, and so aggressive does the animal become that the girl's mother gives it to a passing farmer. The girl is forced to accept the contractor's attentions, notwithstanding that she has a favored suitor, a young man of the town. In desperation she runs away, intending to join her lover; but on the road she is overtaken by the contractor, who brings word that the dog has been badly hurt and may not live. Anxiety over her pet disarms her suspicions, and she enters the schemer's motor car. Her suitor sees her struggling with the abductor, boards a trolley car, and overtaking the automobile, leaps into it to fight for his love.

ESSANAY.

BRONCHO BILLY STEPS IN—(Aug. 13).—Because he believes in education, a ranch owner hires a school teacher from the east and opens a school for his cowboys. The teacher is admired by all of the cowboys, and by one in particular, an outlaw, who frightens all the pupils one morning by writing "school" with bullet holes on the blackboard. Broncho Billy steps in and sends him over the county line. Later, three of the pupils find a torn letter which the teacher has lost, and, piecing it together, learn that the girl's mother is worried because lack of money prevents her visiting her daughter. They take up a collection and send for the mother. Broncho Billy, the sheriff, loves the girl and proposes to her. She accepts him and they are married. Just as the minister pronounces the closing words, in walks the bride's mother, making the happiness of the event complete.

DREAMY DUD SEES CHARLIE CHAPLIN—(Cartoon Aug. 18).—Dreamy Dud and his dog, Wag, are down-hearted because they haven't the money to go into a picture theater and see a Chaplin picture. A dime rolls out of the theater which some one has dropped and Dud picks it up. In the theater they see Chaplin fighting with a donkey. When he flirts with a girl, whose back is toward him, a policeman tries to arrest him. But the donkey and the policeman collide and exchange kicks. Chaplin laughs when the policeman is kicked over. Then the donkey kicks Chaplin and he flies into the air and lands in a lake. Dud wakes up and finds his father bending over him asking what he is dreaming about.

Over the dressing rooms are situated the Prop and Wardrobe rooms, which are reached by a gallery running the entire length of the studio.

Dark Room:

On the upper floor will be found a dark room for loading and making tests of film exposures.

Carpenter Shop:

A separate building at the rear of the studio is for making of props and carpentry, keeping the studio free from all noise. The second floor could be made into a paint loft if required. Toilet is in this building for help. Two rooms are finished off in this building that can be used as extra dressing rooms, offices or living rooms.

The Grounds:

The grounds that are not used for buildings are all seeded into lawns, giving an appearance of refinement to all the buildings.

The Location:

The Beaver Film Corporation Studio is within an hour from Times Square, and is only three minutes' walk from the depot, and five minutes from the Trolley line, with a ten cent fare from the Battery.

Surroundings:

The country of Staten Island for Open Air work is unsurpassed. Most any kind of a scene can be found on this wonderful picturesque island.

TALE OF A TIRE—(Aug. 19). Husband and wife take a ride in their new joy wagon, but it breaks down and hubby goes after a mechanician. He meets a girl who is annoyed by two flirts. She calls on the man for protection. He worsts the two in a battle and they flee. Hubby enjoys the girl's society so much he forgets about his wife stalled in the road in the machine. In the meantime the two flirts offer to fix her machine. They take off the tire and both claim the honor of repairing it. In the fight the tire rolls down hill. Then follows a chase of miles, the tire racing along the streets, knocking over pedestrians. The wife finds a real mechanician who fixes her machine, and she goes off alone. She runs over the two flirts chasing the tire and knocks them flat. Just then the husband comes along with the other girl. The wife drags him into the machine and whirls away, leaving the three upset on the pavement.

BRONCHO BILLY'S MARRIAGE (Aug. 20).—Broncho Billy is deeply in love with a beautiful girl, but her father refuses to consent to their marriage. He orders her to wed a wealthy man, whom she dislikes. When she refuses he tells the man to keep guard over her while he goes for a minister. He declares he will force her to marry the man of his choice. While the father is away Broncho Billy arrives. He holds up this rival, forces him into the barn and locks him in. He and the girl then elope. Years afterward the father, aged and penniless, comes to them. He is forgiven and all are happy.

HER RETURN (Aug. 27).—This is a story of a wealthy young man, accustomed to the gaieties of cafe and club life who falls in love with and marries a poor girl, who is infatuated with him. After marriage, however, the young man fails to give up his fast friends and continues to live his gay life. The wife is unhappy and one night when her husband returns home intoxicated, she packs her grip and quits the house. She goes to a railroad station and while waiting for a train, faints. She is taken to the station hospital. The husband awakens and finds his wife gone. He rushes to the police station, where he learns that she is in the hospital. Hurrying to her bedside he clasps her in his arms and promises never to drink again.

THE QUITTER (Aug. 30).—Frank Gates, a young architect, and his employer's daughter, Byrd Remington, are married and he opens an office of his own. He has a hard time, however, and seeks a partnership with Byrd's father. Remington says Frank must make good first and Frank competes for the new city hall Job. Byrd helps him. Later Frank suspects his father-in-law's political influence has defeated him. He goes to Remington's house and sees two councilmen hand Remington a set of plans. Frank is discovered by Remington, and in a fury he tears up the plans. Remington tells Frank the plans were his own, which had been accepted, and Frank is stunned. Then Remington produces a duplicate set. Remington calls up his daughter, tells her "Frank's an awful quitter, but draws fine plans, so I'll have to take him into partnership."

THE RETURN OF GENTLEMEN JOE (Special—Two Parts—Aug. 31).—Dominica Meduna, a "genteel" thief, robs a woman of a costly necklace. In escaping, she comes face to face with Gaston Le Grand, a notorious crook, who has threatened to kill her. She is terribly frightened, and to escape him, accepts the escort of Mickey Ryan, a wealthy young man, whom she detests. He attempts to make love to her in a cab and in her struggling she drops the pearls. He sees them and knows they were stolen. He tells her she must yield to his wishes or he will tell the police. While he is threatening her in her apartment, her sweetheart, who had been imprisoned in America, returns. He quickly disposes of the blackmailer. Dominica and her sweetheart then are married. They turn the pearls to the prefect of police and tell him they want to live a straight life. The police long have been hunting for Le Grand, and when Dominica gives information that leads to his capture, they are permitted to go free.

JOE BOKO IS SAVED BY GASOLENE (Cartoon Picture—Sept. 1).—Joe Boko is indulging in his favorite pastime of smoking black cigars when he gets a message from Ida Clare, his sweetheart, that the villain Hardex Nails is holding her for ransom and threatens to hurl her into the lions' den unless he is paid. Joe hurries to the rescue. His machine balks many times, but after many mishaps he reaches the rendezvous. There he overpowers the villain by puffing a huge blow of deadly tobacco smoke into his face. He then hurls him to the lions and sets his sweetheart free.

VERSUS SLEDGE HAMMERS (Sept. 2).—The Count received word through a matrimonial agency that Sophie Clutts will inherit a million dollars and goes to her father's hotel to win her hand. Mustang Pete, however, is in love with Sophie, and when he discovers the Count is making love to her, proceeds to insult him. The Count challenges Mustang to a duel. Being a blacksmith, he chooses sledge hammers as weapons. The Count is shocked and draws a revolver which is almost as deadly as a pea shooter, and tells the blacksmith to draw. Mustang pulls out two colts about the size of a small cannon and fires in the air. The Count flees and Mustang is free to woo his sweetheart in peace.

THE WHIRLPOOL (Special—Three Parts—Sept. 4).—Graham Howard, a state's attorney, is deeply attached to his wife, but his duties take most of his time and he neglects her. She is led into a dangerous friendship by an unscrupulous artist. She discovers that matters have gone too far and tells the artist she will see him no more. In a last effort to compromise her, he calls her on the telephone and tells her to come to his office or he will end his life. She falls into his trap and goes to the studios.

Crossed wires, however, permit Amos Howell, a friend of the state's attorney and his wife, to hear the conversation. He realizes the trap set for the woman and hurries to the artist's studio to save her. Just as he arrives he hears a shot. Rushing into an outer room he finds Agnes trembling in fear. In an inner room he discovers the body of the artist. Mrs. Howard flees but the police arrive and arrest Howell. Knowing that if he told all, Mrs. Howell's reputation would be besmirched, he refuses to make a statement. Howell's sister had been wronged by a man unknown to him, but dying she had confessed. A picture of the man was found in Howell's pocket. This motive for the killing and his presence at the scene of the shooting made conviction sure. Mrs. Howard was about to confess her part in the tragedy when the court was stirred by another woman, Annetta, who demanded to be heard. She confessed the killing, telling how the artist had wronged her.

MINA.

SOME MONKEY BUSINESS (Aug. 26).—Syd, a diminutive man, is infatuated with Ann, a maiden lady. A series of happenings wherein animal pets, especially a monkey, together with a small loan of money from Syd and monkeying with monkeys causes coldness between Ann and the infatuated Syd. Syd is heartbroken. Suicide suggests itself, and in the act of commitment Syd gets an idea. Donning a monkey's skin, he is sold to Ann and bliss reigns su-

GOLD SEAL.

MISJUDGED (Three Parts—Aug. 31).—Caleb Baldwin, a mining broker, has a partner named Egbert. Baldwin's wife, Lydia, has society ambitions. Baldwin is intensely interested in sociological problems and has just recently prepared a treatise on criminals, in which he advances the theory that the majority of confirmed criminals are recruited from a class slightly higher in plane than the feebleminded. During the time that Egbert is left alone in the office he runs a stock selling scheme of his own through the mail, and so fixes the books that in case of any investigation the full blame will fall upon his partner. He is infatuated with Baldwin's wife. She treats him lightly, but doesn't discourage his attentions. Baldwin has completed an invention to be used in the ore sampling mills of a new form of concentration table and receives a favorable reply from some mining engineers. He shows the letter to his wife, and on her urging him to market the invention, he tells her that he is doing so well in business that he doesn't care to make more money.

"Baldy Joe," a denizen of the underworld, picks Mrs. Baldwin's purse. The thief is apprehended just as Baldwin passes by. At the police station, "Baldy" sends his wife, Susie, a note asking her to bail him out. She is a slatternly and ignorant woman, and her pleas are unheeded. Baldwin is instrumental in getting "Baldy" placed in the pathological ward. Later he is killed during an attack on a keeper. Egbert is tipped off to a contemplated raid to be made on him and makes his getaway with all the money in sight. He goes to Baldwin s house and tries to get the plans of the invention on a pretext to take them to a safety deposit vault. Mrs. Baldwin gives him the plans and he, overcome with passion for her, tries to embrace her, unconsciously dropping the plans during the struggle. Baldwin has gone to the office and is informed that the officers are after him. He passes the matter over as a mistake, but upon reaching home sees his wife apparently in Egbert's arms. Overcome with anger, he is about to choke her, when Susie comes in, accuses him of her husband's death and demands that he take care of her. He thrusts a bunch of bills in her hand, denounces his wife as a traitor and leaves for the West. Susie follows him, and on his arrival confronts him and proposes they get married. He is disgusted at first, but finally his interest is aroused and he resolves to try an experiment in sociology. He secures her a place to work and also gets a position as bookkeeper in one of the mills.

Time passes. Lydia, thrown on her own resources, secures the patent and has it marketed. She makes a trip to the West to see the invention work and also to try and locate her husband. The Secret Service has been unable to locate Baldwin and the case is dropped for the time being. Arriving at her destination, Lydia meets Egbert, who is living in fine style. At first she cuts him, and then changes her mind and greets him warmly. She has an idea that he is the culprit and determines to try to catch him. Susie has progressed immensely. She is attached to Baldwin, but he treats her like a child. One day she finds a picture of his wife under his pillow and realizes that he still loves his wife. One day Baldwin comes upon a crowd watching a new invention. Turning, he sees his wife with Egbert, viewing the invention. He drinks the dregs of life, thinking his wife has not only been false to him, but has also stolen his plans and is living on the fruits of them with Egbert. Lydia, on sight of her husband, starts to go to him, but realizes how futile it would be. She persuades Egbert to take dinner to her room, planting two of the mine officials beforehand in the closet. He gets intoxicated, and in his passion for her confesses his crime, and tells her it was to show her what a fool her husband was. Egbert has notified the sheriff of Baldwin being wanted and Susie overhears the sheriff and his deputies planning to make his arrest and warns him. Before fleeing, he is tempted to see his wife once more. He breaks into her room in time to see his wife strike Egbert in the face. The two men come out of the closet and full explanations are given. The husband and wife are reunited.

THE MAN IN THE CHAIR (Three Parts—Sept. 14).—Vincent Byron is on trail for murder. Mina Taylor, his sweetheart, and ward of his father, John Byron, is seated beside him in the crowded court room. The district attorney has just called to the witness chair the second mate of the "Blue Star," a tramp steamer. The witness tells of the night he was doing watch—the night the murder was committed. From the bridge he saw one whom he believed to be Vincent Byron drag a man out from a stateroom across the deck and choke him. This fact established, Mina is called to the witness chair by the defense. She tells of her early childhood in the West, of her father's death, and of her going to live with her father's old friend, John Byron, on Long Island, New York. She tells what happened in her cabin on the night of the murder; that the deceased, Geoffrey Storm, intruded himself into her room and grossly insulted her. She saw two hands reach through the doorway and clutch the assailiant around the neck. Then she fainted.

At this point in the trial the defense calls to the stand Dr. Lambert, an eminent nerve specialist. Dr. Lambert testifies that he had been called into consultation on young Byron's case several years previous, that he had found his case hopeless; that it would have been an utter impossibility for the defendant to have committed the crime, in that he was unable to stand upon his feet. Vincent Byron asks and is give permission to tell his story. He is carried to the witness stand. He begins his story from the time that the girl in question first came to live with his father. He tells of the girl's appearance, her crudeness, and illiteracy; of the interest that he took in her, and of the many hours he devoted in teaching her both books and the ways of a gentlewoman. Under his guidance she grew to beautiful womanhood. There was his father's business partner, Geoffrey Storm, who had grossly snubbed Mina when she first came from the West, but when the girl grew beautiful, Storm began to covet her.

Then came the trip to Europe in the hope of a cure for the prisoner. Storm had insisted on taking his father's place, his father having been detained at home on important business. The girl accompanied him (Vincent) to help care for him. Three days out, Storm's attention to the girl became intolerable; and Vincent was forced to look on helpless. Finally, the girl absolutely refused to receive attention from Storm, and Storm, furious at it all, sought surcease in the ship buffet. Vincent, in his testimony, comes to that point where he killed Storm. He speaks of Storm's insult to him and of his forcing his way into Mina's cabin, a short distance from where the prisoner was seated in his wheel chair. "And I stood upon my two feet and killed him!" That is the prisoner's defense, and in a moment, under the stress of reviewing the story, he again stands up before the judge and jury.

Vincent Byron is acquitted. Dr. Lambert, interested in the oddness of the case, again undertakes to work a cure upon young Byron. What with the faith of both the girl and the young man, himself, combined with the skill of the scientist, the case turns out successful. Byron searches out Mina and takes her in his arms.

CORAL (Four Parts—Sept. 4).—Dan McQuade, an old fisherman, finds a woman and a child cast up by the storm of the night before. The mother is beyond human aid, but the child is still alive nad he takes it to his cottage. Years pass and the child has grown to be a beautiful young girl. She has filled a place in the old fisherman's heart left vacant by the death of his wife and baby many years before. She has a secret cave where she often goes, and as a means of amusement spends her time carving miniature sand statues, in which art she has become proficient. Old Dan has named the girl Coral, and one day the locket she wears falls open, showing a young man and woman. She shows them to Dan, and he tells her how he found her. After her grief has subsided the girl returns to her cave, and from the experience gets an inspiration which makes her carve a life size statue of a mother and babe lying on the rocks.

In New York, Phillip Norton, a wealthy young artist and son of a diamond merchant, has been betrothed to Helen, a society girl. On the bridal tour Phillip discovers his wife to be self-centered and selfish and comes to the conclusion that she married him merely to satisfy her vanity. Every advance he makes to his wife is repulsed and he attempts to stifle his love for her. As the yacht upon which they are spending their honeymoon en-lets the little bay where Dan and Coral live. Phillip takes his painting paraphernalia ashore and makes some sketches to divert his mind. He is discovered by Coral, but she is in awe of him, and when he looks around she flees. As the days pass Coral again finds him, but this time he is downcast. She gives him one of her statues, and the friendship thus engendered grows as time passes. Helen, through marine glasses, espies her husband with Coral, and heaps her wrath upon him when he returns to the yacht. Phillip's pent-up emotions break their bonds, and gathering her up in his arms he carries her to the cabin, where he leaves her. While standing on the deck he sees Coral dive to the water below and swim about. Filled with longing, he seeks her out. Sympathy leads to love, and as Coral caresses the broken man she learns for the first time the meaning of love. Phillip, overcome with remorse at his double acting, asks Coral to forgive and forget him. That night old Dan dies and the girl is left alone. Despite his wife's anger and hate, he takes Coral to his parents' home in New York, where she is received with open arms.

Coral's knowledge of sculpture is increased by Phillip's aid, and her happiness is punctuated only by the actions of Helen. A valuable diamond belonging to Phillip's father is missing. During a reception, one of Coral's statues is broken and the diamond disclosed. Coral is accused, but later Phillip's father learns that Helen contrived to have Coral disgraced. Seeing that she has been discovered, Helen hurriedly leaves the house and is killed in a railroad wreck. Meanwhile Coral, who has left the house, comes to the studio of Paul Dore, a sculptor, who offers to teach the girl free of charge. Later she is taken under the "wing" of the old janitor of the art school and his wife, who look upon her as their own child.

Some time later the art school offers a price of $1,000 and a medal for the statue that wins the first prize at the Academy, and Coral decides to compete. Phillip has sought in vain for Coral after his wife's death and is persuaded to attend the exhibition at the Academy, and on the unveiling of a statue recognizes it as Coral's work. Coral is summoned to the studio and awarded the prize. After the committee have gone Coral tells Dore of her inspiration and shows him the locket. He recognizes it as a picture of himself and wife and tells the girl of the wreck. There is a happy reunion between father and daughter. Phillip enters and is overjoyed to meet Coral again. Coral makes a visit to the old janitor and his wife and leaves them the envelope with the prize money, which gladdens their old hearts. Some time later a white yacht drops anchor in the bay near where Coral was raised, and while Paul Dore kneels beside his wife's grave high on the cliffs above two figures appear and suddenly merge into one. Phillip and Coral are clasped in each other's arms and Phillip points out their yacht.

THE SURRENDER (Three Parts—Sept. 18).—Jimmy Dugan, a worker in a machine shop, is in love with Anita Muldoon. Rough and uncouth, caring little for dress and the niceties of society, but honest at heart and with a wealth of affection when stirred, Jimmy is baffled by the attitude of Anita, who does not receive his attentions sincerely. Anita lives with her father and mother, who eke out a bare existence. The family was once in prosperous circumstances, but Muldoon's old-fashioned ways have finally forced him to take a place in the same mill where Jimmy works, as a bookkeeper at a menial salary.

Ian Paulson, who is cashier in the mill, thinks a lot of Jimmy in a friendly way, and tries to learn what is troubling him, but Jimmy refuses to tell what worries him. Jimmy has seen Ike, a slum crook and his pal, loitering around the Muldoon house, and being in a grouchy mood, starts to give vent to his wrath upon them, but they leave him. Anita tells her mother that Jimmy is trying to get her to marry him and when asked the reason why she does not, she points to a picture advertisement of a well-dressed man, and says that the man who gets her will have to be a gentleman. Anita makes the acquaintance of Ike, who, in reality, is a runner for "White Slavers." He makes a deep impression on the girl and he easily gains her consent to accompany him to a dance that night.

Anita tells her parents that she is going out to a dance with Ike. Her father refuses to let her go, but she defies him, telling him that as he cannot give her any pleasures she intends to get them in her own way. Ike is closely followed by his pal, who is in the scheme to get Anita in the clutches of the white slavers. Jimmy finally goes into the same cafe and starts drinking. A short time later, he sees Anita come in with Ike and at once concludes she is not "straight," being in company with a known crook. He watches them go upstairs, where there are private rooms. Anita is surprised at the rooms and place she is in, but Ike reassures her and finally gets her in a room. He tries to force his attentions upon her and she screams. Jimmy goes to the rescue. In the fight which follows Ike is beaten up and Jimmy tells Anita she must choose between the crooks and himself. She agrees to marry him (Jimmy) and later they are made man and wife.

Jimmy at length realizes how ignorant he is and studies at odd hours. Anita has made the acquaintance of Paulson and the two are together a great deal. Muldoon finally succumbs to temptation and steals money from the company to give his daughter. Jimmy sees the new clothes, and demands an explanation. Anita refuses to explain. Paulson has discovered the shortage in Muldoon's cash and comes to the house to get an explanation. He is met by Jimmy, who tells him he wants a settlement with him about his wife. Paulson is expecting a fight and is very much surprised when Jimmy confesses that he can never win his wife's love and will withdraw in Paulson's favor, as Paulson is a gentleman and can make her happy, but wants his oath that he will be good to the girl. Paulson then tells him of Muldoon's theft and Jimmy, in his complete surrender, says that he will pull off a fake robbery at the plant, take the blame for the loss of funds and thus be forever out of the girl's life.

He goes to the mill to fake the robbery, and, sneaking in, comes upon Ike and his pal, who are pulling off a real robbery. In the fight which follows the pal escapes and Jimmy is having a hard struggle with Ike, when Paulson and Anita enter and come to his assistance. Paulson has told Anita the full surrender made by her husband, and she then realizes how she has misjudged him. She insists on following him, and so arrives in the nick of time. The story closes happily with husband and wife reconciled. Muldoon makes restitution, and is given another chance to make good with an increased salary.

FOR PROFESSIONAL REASONS (Two Parts—Sept. 1).—Pico is a gangster and has promised his sister, Georgia, who works in the public library, that he is going to quit his lawless life. One night Pico hurriedly enters Georgia's room at the library and leaves a note telling her he intends to finish up some work and may have to leave town. She suspects his purpose and hurriedly prepares to follow him. Duvall, a young physician, is a firm friend of Clay, the county attorney, and one night, while Clay and his sister, Amelia, who is in love with Duvall, are visiting the latter the talk turns to gangsters and the remark is passed that "once a criminal, always a criminal."

Pico and his gang, meanwhile, have met a hostile gang and have a battle royal. Georgia hears the firing and, running into the scene, discovers her brother entrenched behind a barrel. She wrenches his gun from him and one of the opponents shoots and seriously wounds her. Pico takes his unconscious sister to Dr. Duvall, who removes the bullet. Pico, by his actions, has aroused the doctor's suspicion, and he is calling up the county attorney when Pico confronts him and in a hard voice asks him if he thinks his action is exactly professional. The physician realizes his breach and hangs up, without getting his party.

In the days that follow, Georgia makes quick recovery. Amelia and her brother call during her convalescence and are introduced to her. Amelia immediately sees the physician's interest in the girl is more than friendly, and her jealousy is aroused. She determines to blacken the girl's character in such a way that it will cause a break between the two. While standing near the mantel she slips some of Duvall's heirlooms into her purse and takes them with her when she leaves. Georgia falls in love with the doctor, but believes he will never come to care for her, and so determines to leave secretly. Just as she is slipping out of the door, Duvall confronts her. Duvall in the meantime has missed the heirlooms and on the previous day remembered showing these and many others to the girl. She had taken quite an interest in them, and he suspects that she, being the sister of a gangster, took them. He accuses her, but she denies the charge.

Georgia returns home to Pico and tells of the theft. Pico had observed the attitude of Amelia on one of her visits to the doctor's office and suspects her. That night he slips into Amelia's room and finds the heirlooms. On a sudden impulse he calls his sister up and has just told her where he is when confronted by Clay with a revolver. Georgia, getting no answer, suspects something wrong and hurries to the county attorney's house, where she finds her brother about to be placed under arrest. She pleads for his freedom, but in vain. Clay is surprised to know he is the brother of Georgia and calls Duvall to enjoy the joke with him. Amelia has heard of the arrest and hurries down to her brother's office to get the trinkets if possible. Duvall arrives, and at sight of Georgia's grief he also asks Clay to release Pico. Clay refuses and tells them he saw Pico steal the jewels with his own eyes. Duvall, looking closer, recognizes them, and finally the true meaning of it dawns on him and he turns to Amelia, who breaks down and confesses. Pico is released. Duvall then begs Georgia's pardon, and in the last scene of all the doctor and his former patient are clasped in each other's arms.

JOE MARTIN TURNS THEM LOOSE (Two Parts—Sept. 15).—An old maid receives a telegram from the administrator of a distant uncle's will, stating that he is shipping her share of the inheritance in a box. When the box arrives, the old maid discovers it contains a full-sized oraugoutang, which escapes from the box and causes her no end of trouble when she tries to inveigle him to re-enter his prison. In the apartment next to that of the old maid is a musician who persists in torturing a trombone, to the exasperation of the old maid, who vainly tries to persuade him to cease his efforts. He, however, only slams the door in her face. When she returns to her apartment, she finds that the monk has again made his escape from the box and is roaming around the room, doing what damage he can. It is then that her attention is again called to the musician, who resumes his practice upon the trombone.

The orang makes his escape from the apartment via a window and makes his way unmolested down the street, until he arrives at a circus tent, in which a performance is at that time going on. He enters the menagerie tent and proceeds to release all the animals of the menagerie. The elephants and camels are stampeded; and the lions, tigers, leopards, pumas, and other animals, proceed to make for freedom. Many exciting scenes follow, in which the animals terrorize the neighborhood. They are finally all captured by the keepers from the circus. The old maid and the musician make up their differences; and, going after the truant monkey, find him engaged in eating fruit at a fruit stand. He is vengefully borne homeward and confined with no chance of escape, while the romance of the old maid and the musician ripens into love.

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE (Two Parts—Aug. 27).—Dr. Jekyll, a young London physician, while experimenting, finds a drug by means of which his evil nature predominates, and he is changed into a pale, misshapen creature of malicious and violent passions. During the periods of his transformation he is known as Mr. Hyde. The scene opens in the parlor of Alice, Jekyll's fiancee. She receives a note from Dr. Jekyll, in which he excuses himself for not being able to take her to the opera as his charity patients have to be attended to, and tells her to go with her father. Alice is angered.

We next see Dr. Jekyll attending to his charity patients at his own office. Dr. Lanyon and Lawyer Utterson enter and make fun of Jekyll on account of his professional zeal for strange drug experiments. Later we see Dr. Jekyll in his laboratory, where, in the dead silence of the night, he plans to set free his evil self. He drinks the fluid he has discovered and is transformed from Dr. Jekyll to Mr. Hyde, now presenting the figure of a hideous deformed monster. He writes the following note: "To My Household Servants—The bearer, Mr. Hyde, is my best friend; treat him as myself. Dr. Jekyll."

Hyde gives the note to the butler, who shows it to the nurse. They are both very much frightened at Hyde's fiendish appearance, but consent to carry out the instructions of their master. Hyde enters a dance hall and frightens everybody by his grotesque antics and hideous demeanor. Next we see him beating a poor cripple boy. A crowd assembles and Hyde takes refuge in Dr. Jekyll's laboratory. The crowd follow him there, and Hyde pays for the injuries the boy has sustained through the beating he has given him. The lawyer, Utterson, calls while Hyde is taking the antidote, and, as he barely escapes being seen by Utterson before the transformation takes place, Dr. Jekyll vows that he will never again tempt fate. A little later, while he is sitting at the fireplace, Dr. Jekyll feels a strange sensation, and realizes that he is being transformed to Hyde. His evil nature is gradually beginning to predominate without the use of the drug.

Dr. Jekyll next dictates his will to Mr. Utterson. One clause of the will reads: "In case of my death or disappearance, all my worldly possessions revert to Mr. Hyde."

Alice calls on Dr. Jekyll, and meets Mr Utterson and Dr. Lanyon. She enters the office of Dr. Jekyll, just as he is being transformed, but he manages to stop the transformation by taking the antidote. At the next attack he is not so fortunate; the attack comes on in front of Alice's house. Alice goes into the house to get a glass of water. In running away to avoid detection, Hyde meets Alice's father, and strangles him. Alice rushes after her lover and finds her father stretched out on the ground dead while Hyde is hiding in the bushes. Hyde makes his escape, and gives a note to a boy he meets, telling him to run with it to Dr. Lanyon. The note asks the doctor to get the antidote Dr. Lanyon secures the antidote, and we next see Hyde in Dr. Lanyon's library, where by means of the drug he again becomes Dr. Jekyll. The police, however, are now after Hyde, and track him to his bedroom, but he fools them by taking the antidote Dr. Jekyll emerges from the bedroom, and Hyde cannot be found.

But one day, Dr. Jekyll accidentally spills the valuable fluid. He looks around his laboratory for the requisite ingredients to renew it, but cannot find them. Then he writes a prescription, and, waving it through the open door so that he cannot be seen, he orders the butler to go to every chemist in London, if necessary, to have the prescription filled. Meanwhile, Mr. Utterson and Dr. Lanyon call to see him. Hyde raves around frantically looking for bottles of medicine, while the police, who are still on his track, are trying to obtain entrance. Owing to his fear of discovery, Hyde's raving turns to fiendish fury, and finally he drops dead.

The door is broken open, and Dr. Lanyon covers the corpse with a cloth so as to hide the hideous features of Hyde from the spectators. Presently Alice rushes in, lifts the cloth, and behold! Hyde in death has been transformed to Dr. Jekyll. She gives way to grief while Dr. Lanyon tries to console her by proclaiming Dr. Jekyll a noble martyr to medical science.

BASHFUL GLEN (Sept. 14).—Glen Martin, a wealthy young club and business man, is very much sought after by members of the opposite sex, and being of a bashful nature, these attentions annoy him extremely. He goes on his vacation and while on the boat several young ladies are attracted to him, much to his displeasure. Upon arriving at the hotel he meets with the same annoyance from other girls, and is surprised to see some of the young ladies, who traveled with him on boat, stop at the same hotel. When shown to his room—is attracted for the first time at the appearance of the chambermaid—so much so, that he musters up courage to invite her out some evening. Much to his surprise she refuses.

He tries to enjoy himself at a summer resort in various ways—but every time the admiring girls keep him fleeing from place to place. He gets an idea to stop it all by manufacturing a family for himself. He proceeds to buy a photo of a lady and child, with endearing notes on it, as if they were from his own wife and child, and places them in a prominent place in his room. Some of the girls in the hotel pass his room at the same time the chambermaid is busy in the room. They stop and talk and see the photos and immediately spread the news that he has pictures of another man's wife in his room. In the meantime a famous actress is on her honeymoon. They come to the hotel for a few days—and it just happens that Glen's photo is of this actress.

The actress's husband, returning to his room from the hotel office, mistakes Glen's door for his own, and going inside discovers his wife's pictures on Glen's dresser. Thinking she has given it to Glen he rushes into his own room and accuses her of having given the photos to Glen. She protests her innocence and husband and wife then proceed downstairs to the office to settle the matter. Here they meet Glen, who, in the meantime, has progressed somewhat in his love affair, talking with the chambermaid. The husband rushes up and demands an explanation and causes quite a scene as guests gather around to find out the trouble. Glen at first is puzzled, but upon being shown the photos the husband sees the joke and both of the men proceed to give the summer girls the laugh. Gwendoline, the chambermaid, meanwhile has slipped out. Glen follows her and catches her at the boat landing. He invites her to go out on the lake with him. She accepts and when he has her alone, convinces her of his love, and all ends happily.

IN THE HEART OF THE HILLS (Sept. 16).—Jim Bailey is a watchman at a privately owned lake. Joshua Hicks has moved into the valley, bringing with him his daughter, Laura, and a son, Dan, a young boy of about fifteen. While Hicks is away hunting, Dan fishes in the lake and is caught by Jim. Jim throws Dan over a cliff, but does not seriously injure him. Determined to stop fishing in the lake, Jim takes the fish and goes to the Hicks' cabin where he meets Laura for the first time. Dan seizes a gun and starts to shoot Jim, but Laura prevents him. Jim admires Laura, and giving her the fish, tells her that they can continue to fish in the lake. Hicks returns from his hunting trip and meets Bob Ross, the sheriff, who accompanies him to the house and is introduced to Laura. He falls in love with her. Finally he proposes, but she refuses him, having come to love Jim. Jim makes love to her and they decide to be married shortly. While Hicks is passing Jim's cabin he hears calls for help and, entering the place, finds that Jim is attempting to overpower Dolly Brady, daughter of a mountaineer, whom Jim has helped to the cabin after she has met with a slight accident. In a terrific fight between Jim and Hicks the latter is shot and dangerously wounded. Jim escapes, and starts on his way to the lake to take a boat across and leave the country. He passes Hicks' cabin and sees Ross, the sheriff, coming. Jim tells Laura that he has shot a man and asks her to detain Ross until he, Jim, has had time to get across the lake. Laura agrees, and when Ross passes she stops him and persuades him to remain at the cabin and talk to her.

Jim reaches the lake, but Dan has taken the boat and there is no way for him to get across. Brady and Dolly bring Hicks home and Hicks tells Laura of the affair at Jim's cabin. He tells her that she must avenge herself. Laura takes a gun from the wall and goes out to hunt Jim. She comes upon and tell him she is going to shoot him. Jim laughs at her, telling her that she loves him and that she dare not fire. He pulls the hammer back on his revolver and hands it to her and dares her to shoot. Her love for him is aroused and she drops the gun, unable to fire. She starts to turn back to the cabin when Ross appears in the distance. Jim reaches down to pick up his gun. The trigger catches on a dead twig and the gun is discharged, killing Jim.

THE HOUSE WITH THE DRAWN SHADES (Two Parts—Sept. 19).—Dr. Jamison, on a visit to New York, calls at the club to see his old college chum, Henry Mason, an attorney, who invites him out for an automobile ride. They pass a fine estate, to which Mason calls the Doctor's attention, and upon the Doctor inquiring about the thoughtful, studious gentleman pacing the lawn, and the cause of the closely drawn shades at the windows, Mason, on their return to the club, tells the Doctor the story of Judge Grant, the man they had seen pacing the lawn. This is the story:

Judge Grant, after graduating from college with high honors, chooses the law for his profession and makes rapid strides at the bar. He marries the girl of his choice and they are very happy. They entertain Amado Vigo, a noted musician. Grant is elected to the bench and becomes absorbed in his work, while Vigo charms his wife with his wonderful music. The three are to attend the theatre one evening, but press of work forces Judge Grant to beg off, and he sends his wife in the care of Vigo. When alone with Mrs. Grant, Vigo persuades her to go to a hotel restaurant instead of the theatre. There he confesses his love and begs her to elope with him to his country.

Mrs. Grant is half persuaded, but does not promise at once. Upon returning home she finds Judge Grant still deep in his work, and apparently with no thought of anything else, so she packs a few things, leaves a short note, and hurries out to join Vigo. Grant later finds the note. He sinks into a chair at the window and remains there in a daze all through the night, till the morning sun streaming in awakens him. He draws the shades and locks the door from the outside.

The story is finished, and Mason tells Dr. Jamison that ever since Grant's wife left the room has remained untouched, and the shades have been closely drawn. Being deeply interested, Dr. Jamison is invited by Mason to accompany him to the court the following morning to see Judge Grant at work on the bench. After several cases have been disposed of there comes before the judge the sad, bedraggled figure of a woman charged with being an habitual drug user. As she raises her head the Judge recognizes his wife. The Judge with an effort recovers himself and has her removed to his chambers, where she is placed under the care of a matron. After adjourning court the Judge hastens to his chambers, where he consoles his sorrowing wife and telephones his housekeeper to prepare her old room and summon his physician. Later we see the Judge at the wife's bedside anxiously awaiting the crisis until the doctor tells him that it is safely passed. Then a reconciliation takes place and the Judge embraces his wife without a word regarding the past.

WHEN HIRAM WENT TO THE CITY (Sept. 4).—Hiram, a native of Squash Center, leaves his sweetheart, Lizzie, to answer the call of the city's bright lights. But Lizzie decides to follow him. Hiram arrives in the city. While devouring the sights he sees Dora, the belle of the Palace Hotel dining room, out for a stroll. He follows her and soon sees her accosted by a bunch of toughs. Hiram attacks the bunch and puts them to rout.

Jason White, a prize fight promoter, observes the work of Hiram. He immediately thinks he has found a "white hope" and takes Hiram under his charge. Lizzie, meanwhile, has arrived in the city, and, not finding Hiram, is wandering around. Passing the Palace Hotel, she sees a sign reading, "Waitress wanted," and decides to take the place. She is given the job. White and his protege arrive at the Palace Hotel in state. Dora has told all the girls about her valiant rescuer and there is a rush to glimpse him. The girls all fight to wait on him, and Lizzie, not interested, fails to see her lover. Later she is bringing in some soup when she gets a good view of him, and in her surprise drops the soup. Hiram passes her by without recognition, and poor Lizzie is demoted to dishwashing.

White tries to get Hiram to limber up by practicing with one of the attendants, but Hiram says that when he fights he often gets very mad, and would hate to hurt any one. He is allowed to have his own way and is made much over. Dora has made an appointment with him and allows him to kiss her. The fight is scheduled for the next night and all the papers are full of the news. Lizzie reads of the fight and has hysterics for fear that her Hiram will be killed. The other girls give her the laugh. The fight is a big success—for Hiram's opponent—and White loses heavily on his protege. Hiram is knocked out in the first round and kicked out of the house. Next morning he is sore from the fight, and when he enters the dining room every one gets up and leaves. The manager of the hotel presents him with his carpet bag, and when he protests both he and the bag are thrown out. He has hardly hit the ground when Lizzie and her bag come flying out, too. Lizzie sympathizes with him and he resoolves home is the best place, after all, and together they happily return to Squash Center.

HE COULDN'T FOOL HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW (Sept. 18).—Although Shultz has married a pretty young girl, he is still addicted to frequent excursions along the "Great White Way." Mrs. Shultz is one of the quiet kind of wives who can believe no evil of their better half, so it is an easy matter for Shultz to cover his absences with the time-worn excuse of "pressing business." Now wifey's mother has long been suspicious of Shultz, and when she comes on a visit is skeptical of these frequent delays "on account of business" and decides to investigate. She disguises herself, and after entering several cafes locates Shultz and his pal with a couple of "chickens" having a fine time. She hovers near, but Shultz gets suspicious of her and proposes they go to the beach and lose the funny-looking creature.

They go, and are having some fine time when Shultz's eye falls on his nemesis. She has "got his goat" and he is in despair. Everywhere they go she is sure to pop up, so Shultz decides to return home. The mother-in-law beats him home and, unknown to her own daughter, has been hired as cook. When Shultz comes in and finds his shadow installed as cook he almost has heart failure, but, quickly taking her aside, he presses a large roll of bills into her hand and implores her "by the eighteen gods of India" to keep her mouth closed. Mother takes the money all right, and then discloses her identity. Shultz is paralyzed with fear of his wrong-doing and it is an easy matter for the mother-in-law to extract an oath that he will never more flirt along the "Great White Way."

A GAME OF LOVE (Sept. 1).—The game of love would have been all right, perhaps, but too many tried to play it. The result was that Fat tried to get a lady to faint in Reggie's arms to make Peggy jealous. The lady fainted all right, but not as Fat had anticipated. Worse yet, father, who hated young men, also took a hand, and his dislike for Fat was not overcome when Fat got him in trouble with a statue man and gave Peg and Reggie an opportunity to go off to a quiet spot and talk.

Fat tried to get in the game again, but it was now certainly overcrowded, and he had to get out quick. He didn't go in the right direction, however, as he encountered father again. Father was just recovering from the previous encounter and was in a killing mood. He and Fat had a fight and Peg and Reggie had a fight in an automobile. The last rumors were to the effect that they went straight to the minister's.

NO FLIRTING ALLOWED (Sept. 15).—Events which transpire in the lives of flirts are often best not recorded, but the history of Hank and his boss should be given as an example of very raw work. It started when Hank kissed his wife in the park and went to work. As he came in the boss went out, and didn't stop until he was in the park and succumbing to his weakness for flirting. Unluckily, they didn't allow flirting in that park, and the boss was pinched, together with the lady he was flirting with. The boss phoned for Hank to come over to the station and bail him out. Hank came, but discovered it was his own wife whom the boss had managed to get pinched. He bailed his wife and sent her home, but not so the boss.

He was left to rot in a foul dungeon. Hank went to the park to brood over the shame which had overtaken his family when the boss's wife breezed in. She saw Hank and then and there decided she wanted him. Hank didn't want to flirt at all, but a nearby officer thought he did, and pinched them both. They were put in a cell right next to the boss, but they didn't know it, and neither did the boss until he broke through and found himself in a cell with his wife and another man.

Naturally the boss lost his temper, and so did Hank. When the excitement had subsided, cells were violated, officers were injured and the judge was grossly insulted.

BEACH BIRDS (Sept. 19).—Papa, mamma and their daughter, all went down to swim, but in this case daughter did go near the water without even hanging her clothes on a hickory limb, and in addition went in with a gink by the name of Hank. Worse yet, Hank had a wife, but she didn't get lonesome, as daughter's parent got acquainted with her and sat under an umbrella on the beach. But daughter had a sweetheart, and mamma had leisure, and so they became acquainted.

Everything was going nicely, but when six people all go swimming on the same beach, some one is going to see some one else. Unluckily, however, no one realized the meeting was going to be so soon and was going to be so unpleasant.

As is well known, the facilities for hiding on beaches are very few and far between, and every one stood out bold and unhidden in the bright sunlight. Everyone lost out except the bathhouse man, who collected in full for his bathing suits and umbrellas.

POWERS.

LITTLE PEOPLE IN FUR (Aug. 12).—In this film all sorts of four-legged animals, some of whose skins are in very high demand for ornamentation, are shown in their characteristic way.

First, there emerges a little mole with soft and lustrous fur. The picture distinctly shows the strong little shovel-shaped forelimbs with which he digs; then is shown the long-nosed opossum of the Brazilian jungles, which uses its tail almost like a monkey to assist it in descending trees and concealing himself in out-of-the-way places where he will be safe. The curious long-tailed armadillo is built like a mechanical toy, with a coat as tough as sole-leather attached to its sides, almost as if a blanket had been placed on it and strapped in place by a groom.

The porcupine, as every one who has had any experience with one knows, is a very bad proposition to have intimate dealings with, and it is particularly advisable, if one has to do with it at all, to rub his strong-quilled back in the right way. The ocelot is an animal with protruding head. It is one of the best hunters of the little people. It is shown here both going to the hunt and returning with a good catch. Strange people are the coati-mundis, inhabitants of Peru. They are on the order of the raccoons and are very inquisitive. The film is brought to a close by the exit of a youthful ground hog into his hole.

ELEPHANT CIRCUS (On Same Reel As Foregoing). The "Elephant Circus" is a vaudeville act utilizing two enormous elephants who are apparently willing to do everything at the behest of their trainer. They dance the two-step and the waltz with the facility of ballroom Romeos; they stand on their hind legs and elevate the trainer over their heads, who permits one of these huge beasts to lie on him. When it is taken into consideration that they weigh a couple of tons apiece it is a thrilling moment when the elephant apparently rests all his weight upon the man. Of course, he actually does not do so. These elephants are jugglers, trick performers and musical entertainers all rolled in one.

NESTOR.

TOO MANY SMITHS (Sept. 13).—Eddie Smith and Dolly have just eloped and got married. For the honeymoon they take a trip to Coronado Beach. Father puts a detective on their track to bring them back and the latter traces them to the hotel. At the same hotel are staying Jim Smith and his wife, Carmen, posing as guests, but in reality society crooks. The hotel management has become alarmed over the daily loss of valuables and assigns Detective Potts to run down the crooks. He learns that Eddie Smith and his wife have registered and their "newlywed" attitude arouses his suspicions. He shadows them.

Father's detective has arrived at the hotel, and finds where Jim Smith and his wife are registered. He shadows them and they, recognizing a detective, think he is after them for the robberies. They play newlyweds to throw him off the track and he is certain now that he has the right couple in sight. Eddie Smith and his wife find out they are shadowed and make an attempt to escape; Detective Potts follows them. The other Smiths hurry away, followed by their "shadow." In the desperate chase that follows, both couples and detectives become mixed up and in the confusion of getting straightened out, Eddie Smith and his wife safely make the ferry. When the other Smiths arrive with the two detectives, the ferry is gone.

Father's detective thinks he has the right couple and starts to search them. He is surprised at the miscellaneous assortment of jewelry, silverware, etc., that he finds on them, but realizes they are not his couple. Detective Potts is standing morosely on one side, grumbling because he lost the pair of crooks, when his sharp eyes catch sight of the jewelry, and he comes to a sudden awakening. Recognizing some of the booty, he takes the luckless pair in charge and elatedly sets out for the station. The other detective, chagrined at the loss of his couple, sadly departs, while Eddie Smith and his wife congratulate themselves on their escape.

THE BROKEN COIN (Tenth Episode—"Cornered"—Two Parts -Aug. 22).—At the end of the ninth episode it will be remembered that a mysterious murder occurs in Kitty's apartment. Kitty, Frederick and Rolleaux and others are arrested. The chief of police goes to ask King Michael for permission to release Kitty and Frederick. While he is phoning Kitty, Frederick and Rolleaux are surprised by the sudden appearance of apaches from behind every possible hiding place in the room.

The leader demands that they turn over the coin. A search reveals the coin on Kitty. The apaches take it and disappear. Sachio is about to leave as the chief of police enters and releases all except Rolleaux and the apache outside, but Rolleaux finally escapes and returns to Kitty's room. Frederick sees the man come from Kitty's room, and hiding across the street, sees apache closely followed by Kitty.

At a given signal Sachio and one of his men leap from the trees and hand the apache a wallet of money and get the coin in exchange. Kitty overhears Sachio instruct his man to board the train that leaves in 20 minutes for Grahoffen and deliver the other part of the coin to the King of Grahoffen. Kitty and Rolleaux overpower Frederick as he is about to start in pursuit of the train, and take his car, forcing the driver to drive like mad for the railroad tracks. At the point of Rolleaux's gun the driver is forced to take the tires off the car and put it on the rails running parallel to the rails the Grahoffen train is on and drive with all speed to catch the train, which is not a mile ahead of them. Frederick releases himself and starts on horse after the car and train.

Sachio's man on the train sends his King a wire, telling him that he has the coin safe and that they can prepare their army for the proposed attack against Gretzhoffen. Rolleaux and Kitty catch up with the train at a station, and, leaving the car and driver behind, they board it. She and Rolleaux plan to seize Sachio, and if he offers resistance, to throw him from the slow-moving train. They go to the observation coach to plan their next step in detail before attempting the dangerous task. As they are on the observation car planning how they are going to seize Sachio they see a man on horseback come down over the steep grade just ahead of their car. Finally the rider and his steed come alongside the last flat car of their train. They are amazed to discover the approaching man on the horse is none other than their old enemy, Frederick. Kitty utters a scream as they see Frederick urge his horse on and on, until he has reached the side of the flat car, when he is seen to give his horse a vigorous twist, and with a super-human effort, he throws himself and horse on the car.

SHORTY'S RANCH (Three Parts—Sept. 15).—Sir Cecil Ballymore, an Englishman, owner of a cattle ranch near Tucson, Ariz., arrives in Tucson on the way to visit his ranch. He is accompanied by his valet, James, and a bad attack of gout. Sir Cecil takes a suite at the leading hotel in Tucson. His valet, James, gets into the wrong apartment and encounters a young lady in the act of dressing. She tries to kill the terrified valet with a revolver, but he eventually escapes to his master's suite and throws her off the track. With his gouty foot worse, Sir Cecil is warned by his doctor to remain quiet and rest up.

Shorty is in Tucson, broke and jobless. Sir Cecil advertises for a man to go out to his ranch and inspect it and report to him. Shorty applies for and gets the job. Sir Cecil gives Shorty a big bank roll of bills for expenses. Shorty resolves to impersonate Sir Cecil and goes out to the ranch posing as Sir Cecil. Jackson, the ranch superintendent, falls for the "bull." Shorty flirts with Jackson's daughter, orders champagne from Tucson and prepares to have the time of his life. Not hearing from Shorty, Sir Cecil decides to continue on to the ranch in spite of his gout and telegraphs Shorty to meet him at Prairie Dog Siding with a rig to convey him to the ranch some ten miles distant across the desert from the railroad. Shorty ignores the telegram.

About this time trouble breaks out on the Ballymore ranch, owing to the fact that considerable stock has been stolen by rustlers. Jackson fences the road across the ranch. This road had been used by ranchmen beyond. Jackson tells them that they will have to go around the ranch. The ranchmen protest at Jackson's closing up the public road and threaten to tear down the fence. That night the angry ranchmen collect a posse and tear down the fence. Jackson, Shorty and the boys rebuild it the next day. The ranchmen have left behind a warning that if the fence is rebuilt there will be trouble and Shorty and his men look forward to their keeping their promise and calmly rebuild the fence.

Sir Ballymore and his valet arrive at Prairie Dog Siding the following day and find it only a desert flag station and no one there to meet them. They are heavily loaded down with baggage. Behind the station the valet finds a rickety wheelbarrow and, with Sir Cecil cursing the gout and the country and everything in general, they walk over the hot desert trail toward the ranch. Meantime the ranchmen have attacked the Ballymore ranch and bullets are flying like hailstones. She sheriff has been warned of the trouble and is racing to the scene with a posse to stop the battle and arrange a compromise. The sheriff stops the trouble and Sir Cecil Ballymore and James arrive at the ranch. At first they are mistaken for impostors but finally prove their identity by the papers they carry. Shorty is seized and locked in one of the ranch shacks, while Sir Ballymore and Jackson plan his punishment. Shorty strips off his disguise and gets back into his old familiar cowboy togs and succeeds in escaping from the shack that night.

THE LIVING WAGE (Two Parts—Aug. 26).—Dustin Blake, a millionaire philanthropist, is approached by the rector of his church and asked to aid a girl who is only receiving $6.00 a week salary and who is in need of financial assistance. Blake refuses and tells the rector and his family doctor and personal friend, Doctor Merritt: "This girl lacked moral fibre. Statistics prove that one can live comfortably on $6.00 a week. I am sorry, but I cannot help her." The rector leaves in disappointment and a sociological debate follows between Blake and the doctor, which ends by Blake offering to prove his theory by living for a month in one of his own tenements on $6.00 a week allowance.

Blake takes board at Mrs. Flannery's boarding house under another name. There he meets Miss Vail and her brother, Harry. Although Blake does not know it, Miss Vail is in reality the girl he has refused to befriend. She and her brother have seen better days. Blake finds the girl and her brother cultured people and the three become great friends. Blake, of course, keeping his real identity a secret. Harry has served a term in prison in a noble cause. One day Detective Grogan happens upon Harry at work and tips off Harry's employer that he is a crook. Harry is fired and is unable to obtain another job. Miss Vail, in spite of her own hard life, is always cheerful in disposition and is helping others. Blake's friendship and admiration for her turns into love. Miss Vail refuses to accept a dinner engagement with her employer and rebukes him for his attempted familiarities. The employer discharges the girl.

She and Harry are broke and, with their room rent coming due and board, Miss Vail makes a loan from a loan shark to meet the landlady's wishes and the loan shark presses his claim. Blake saves her from the loss of her clothes to the loan shark by parting with his own last ten dollars of his allowance. Shortly afterward, while looking for work, Miss Vail is run down by a machine and badly hurt. An expensive operation being necessary, she and her brother are in despair. Blake, rather than sink his pride and apply to the doctor for aid, resolves to burglarize his own house. He and Harry do so and pawn the loot for money for the operation.

Grogan trails Blake and Harry and places them under arrest just as the operation is to be performed upon Miss Vail. They are dragged off to the station and it being the last day of the wager, Blake phones for Merritt, who comes down to the station and secures the release of Blake. The operation is a success, and Blake marries Miss Vail and lays plans to aid the indigent poor with the erection of a costly free hospital.

KAY-BEE.

KENO BATES, LIAR (Two Parts—Aug. 27).—Keno Bates and Wind River are proprietors of the Double Stamp gambling and dance hall. Keno presides at the faro table and Wind River dispenses beverages. Keno is soft spoken, while Wind River is jolly and boisterous. The Mexican dancer, Anita, is infatuated with Keno, but he puts her aside. As they are closing early one morning when Keno and Wind River are alone in the place, a man quietly enters and holds them up and escapes with the bank roll. In the pursuit, Keno kills the bandit and, on taking the money from his shirt, finds a miniature of a sweet-faced girl and a letter to the bandit brother, saying that the writer, his sister, will arrive on the stage the following Thursday.

Keno and Wind River return to town and report the killing of the bandit and warn the townspeople to say nothing of how the man was killed to the girl on her arrival. When Doris arrives, Keno meets her and tells her that her brother was killed in a mine accident and that he was his partner and turns over his cabin, money and saddle horse to the girl. A friendship follows that ripens into love. Anita, in a jealous rage, goes to the cabin and tells Doris that Keno killed her brother. Doris is horror-stricken and when she sees Keno climbing the trail to the cabin, gets a small revolver that Keno has given her and shoots Keno in the shoulder. Keno staggers from the cabin. Anita confesses to Wind River that she told Doris the truth concerning who shot her brother. Wind River goes to the cabin and tells Doris that her brother was a thief and that Keno shot him in self-defense. Doris rushes from the cabin and down the trail where Keno is slowly mounting on his way from the camp. She halts him and stammers out her sorrow and he slides to her feet in a faint. On ripping open his shirt Doris is horrified at the wound she has inflicted. Wind River takes Keno to the cabin, and Doris nurses him back to health and strength.

CUB.

JERRY AND THE GUNMAN (Sept. 9).—Mr. Goodrich, Mrs. Goodrich and their daughter, Jessie, arrive in a small western town just as a bad man is shooting up the place. Dead Shot Dick enters and protects the easterners. Dead Shot Dick is a gunman at loggerheads with the law's forces. Sheriff Gunning posts a notice offering a reward of $1,000 for his capture. Dick sees the notice and compels the sheriff to eat it. As monarch over all he surveys, Dick has no hesitancy in interrupting the spooning match of Jessie and Jerry, the latter having made quite a hit with the pretty easterner. Jerry is peeved and sets out for revenge.

The Goodriches leave for home and invite Dick to visit them. Dick accepts and arrives in the East a few days later with Jerry on his trail. Both pay marked attention to Jessie. Dick orders Jerry out of the way. Jerry refuses and in the tilt that follows the lordly one is vanquished. The doctor is called to attend Dick. In the midst of the treatment Dick revives, grabs his brace of six shooters, and shoots up the room, Jerry, coming in for an extraordinary share of attention in commemoration of past performances. Dick compels him to swap clothes, then continues on his rampage. At the opportune moment Jerry, who has followed, applies a club to the head of Dick, who falls into dreamland. In Dick's pocket Jerry finds a copy of the notice offering the $1,000 reward for Dick's capture. With visions of the big reward, Jerry ties a rope to the ankles of the gunman, drags him to jail and turns him over to the authorities, who pay the $1,000. The sight of the $1,000 leaving his hands is too much for the judge, however, and he arrests Jerry on the charge of carrying concealed weapons, convicts him, deprives him of his hard-earned reward and then puts him in a cell with Dick.

AUTOMOBILE

AN OPPORTUNITY

TO purchase a substantial and classy looking five passenger low slung body touring car at a reasonable figure presents itself.

For $550.00 you can buy a late 1914 model Paige Detroit car with full electric equipment, starter and lights, generator, storage batteries and demountable rims. Car has not been used one year yet. I have just put on four new tires, two non-skid tires on back and two smooth tread tires on front. One extra non-skid tire inflated on rim hangs from back. I have driven the car about 9000 miles, and with its real leather upholstery and flexible springs, have found it the easiest riding machine one could desire.

The engine, listed at thirty-six horsepower, is of the four cylinder type, and with the splendid performance of the carburetor, I get 15 miles per gallon of gasolene.

If you want an automobile bargain for $550 cash, I invite expert criticism. Car is in perfect order.

IN TRUST (Two Parts—Sept. 6).—Jane rides off to meet her father. Returning, the two encounter a band of horse thieves led by Joe Bland. A short-lived battle follows. John Mills is wounded and the rustlers kidnap the girl. That night, at the horse thieves' den, a stranger arrives, who is Harry Dawson, an outlaw, wanted by the sheriffs of almost every county. The kidnapped girl is regarded as the prey of the men, but who shall have her? It is decided to draw cards. Dawson, the outlaw, gets a queen and wins. He seizes the girl to take her with him. A fight ensues. Dawson, battling single handed against the horse thieves, wins, and he and the girl are away. With Jane helpless before him on his horse, a change comes over the man. Brutal instinct becomes submerged and traces of manhood assert themselves. When night-time comes on, he gives the girl assurance that she is safe with him and as double proofs against possible wrong, he hands her his loaded pistol.

Meanwhile, a sheriff and a posse are seeking the horse thieves, but without success. However, the searchers encounter Dawson and the girl, but hey escape. Dawson and the girl become lost in the mountains. Two days they wander with neither water nor food. When at length they strike the beaten path that leads to the settlement where Jane's father lives.

In compassion for the outlaw, Jane rides to the village to obtain and bring back food and water. Returning, she finds the sheriff has come upon Dawson, who was unable to escape owing to extreme weakness. A quick motion and the girl's pistol covers the sheriff. She tells her story, how this man, though an outlaw, had saved her name. Her pistol steadily covers the sheriff until Dawson can ride away. For a moment the situation between the law's minion and the girl is tense. Then the sheriff's manhood triumphs. He shakes the hand of plucky Jane.

THE FORECAST (Sept. 8).—Forest Keene, a wealthy bachelor, and his nephew, Rex Booth, live in a big house alone except for the housekeeper, Janet. Rex and Janet are in love with each other, but Keene objects to the match, and threatens to disinherit Rex in the event of a marriage. A gypsy fortune teller forecasts for Janet that she will soon wed Rex in spite of the uncle's opposition. Keene receives an old knife, a relic of the Orient, from a friend. The knife is much admired and commented upon especially by Brown, the old butler.

One day when the household is quiet, Keene drops asleep with the knife over his arm, and dreams. In his dream he quarrels with Rex over the proposed marriage. There is a scream and members of the family rush in, finding Keene lying on the floor dead, with Rex bending over him, knife in hand. Rex is arrested and tried on circumstantial evidence. Janet is called to testify, and tells of the scene described. When Brown, the old servant, is called to testify, he tells how his daughter, Violet, fell in love with Keene, and how Keene refused to keep his promise to marry her. Seeking revenge, Brown enters the service of Keene and awaits his opportunity, which comes when the old knife is brought in and Rex quarrels with Keene.

Keene is awakened from his "nightmare" and finds Brown standing over him. Out of sheer gladness to learn that it is only a dream, he readily gives his consent to the marriage of Janet and Rex.

BEAUTY.

A BULLY AFFAIR (Sept. 4).—A stranded vaudeville performer sits on a trunk at the railway station, hungry and without funds. Near him sit two rubes reading a dime novel. From what John overhears, he gets an inspiration; takes the book from them and reads about a bull-fight. Opening his trunk, he takes out costumes before the amazed gaze of the rubes, then leads Si and Josh to a vacant lot, where he outlines his plans. The three men then go to a general store, where they letter a sign announcing a great bull-fight, and tack the sign up before the store.

Later John, the actor, flirts with Sally Simpkins, who jilts her beau for John's attentions. The day of the bull-fight arrives. Si and Josh are the "bull." John, dressed as a genuine toreador, meets and vanquishes the make-believe bull amid riotous applause from his audience who throw him money. He wishes for another bull; finds a pot of whitewash and tells the rubes to go out and paint their costume to represent another bull. They get hold of a bottle of whiskey. Second bull comes upon the field drunk. Duped and angry, the audience rush onto the field and John flees with the bull. As the film closes John is seen still running.

PLOT AND COUNTERPLOT (Sept. 7).—Grant Morris is a book-worm and writer. Although devoted to his wife, she thinks he is entirely given over to his work. An "Advice to the Lovelorn" column in a newspaper gives her an idea. She enlists the assistance of an old friend, Bob Frazer, whose role is to flirt with her violently whenever Grant is near. Bob's flirtation is so realistic that she is obliged to remind him that it is only a game of make-believe.

Grant is at a complete loss to understand his wife's actions. Later he is aroused to masterly action by the same "Advice to the Lovelorn" column; and decides to engage an attractive secretary, upon whom he showers attentions. His wife deplores the turn of affairs. Meantime, Bob and Ethel fall in love, and an exchange of confidence results in a plan to bring the estranged husband and wife together. Through strategy, husband and wife are locked together in a room, and told they will not be permitted their freedom until they make up. Looking out of a window they see the love-making of the other two, and, with a kiss, their differences are forgotten.

WHEN HIS DOUGH WAS CAKE (Sept. 11).—It was Johnnie's birthday. The arrival of a package caused considerable commotion and excitement in Johnnie's home. Great consternation and chagrin reigned when it was found that the package, a present from Johnnie's wealthy uncle, contained only—a cake. However, for diplomatic reasons, Johnnie defended the gift when his wife became indignant, and caused a discord where harmony had been.

Mrs. Johnnie took the cake to the kitchen and forthwith proceeded to distribute generous pieces to the neighbors. Uncle arrived and informed Johnnie that the cake contained the famous Kimberly diamond. This precipitated a violent search for the diamond, and many ludicrous situations are developed in forcing recipients to return the confection.

After all the pieces of cake have been rounded up and searched, and the ash can rumaged, uncle discovers the much-sought diamond in his pocket. Smiles result, and tranquil peace is once more established in the otherwise happy home.

FALSTAFF.

THE MASSIVE MOVIE MERMAID—(Aug. 30).—The director of the Desperation Film Company was putting on what he regarded as the greatest "water tragedy" ever written. The heroine, a magnificent swimmer, is swept overboard from a yacht and drowned while her husband-to-be sheds bitter tears on the dock. The director wept when he read the script. His leading lady stormed when she scanned it, for, as she said, "that dinky little hero gets the curtain and I don't amount to a thing." Just the same, she went out with the company when they departed to take the water scenes and trouble began at once. Hiram Statio, the melancholy cameraman, forgot to take any films along and did not discover it until the leading lady was floating about in the surf on her face. She scolded the director, while Statio was getting the film, and the next time, just as her supposedly dead body was being picked up by the hero, a crab bit her on the toe, giving her the cue to do some grand and lofty tumbing that utterly spoiled the scene. When freed from the crab, she resigned on the spot.

The director sent a call to the studio for another leading lady, but the cast director did not have a satisfactory candidate on hand. He looked over his stock of pictures, found that Pansy was listed as a graceful swimmer, saw that her photographed face was pretty and ordered her to report to the director in a bathing suit. Pansy was a swimmer, all right, and once had been young and shapely, but now was about the size of the European war debt, with the grace of an elephant. She obeyed directions, joined the company at the beach, and introduced herself as the new leading lady. The director at first told her to go away, but his cameraman made things easy for Pansy by whispering to the director, "You'd better give her a try-out. The light is failing." And so the director did.

In high diving and graceful swimming Pansy was all that could be asked for, but she managed to put some unexpected ginger into the big scene of the play. In this the heroine is on the deck of a sailing boat. There is a sudden squall, the boom swings around, striking her on the head and knocking her overboard. Her little brother witnesses the accident and falls in a faint on the bed. The director and cameraman were in a row boat some little distance away from the yacht, prepared to take the scene. When the boom was pushed around Pansy was flirting with a handsome young actor, and the boom unexpectedly landed on the back of her neck. Afrightedly she grasped it and like a cat was swung out over the water. The director yelled to her to jump and she finally did so. Then she swung toward the row boat. The director, not noticing that the cameraman was still grinding away, reached over to help Pansy. She grabbed his arms convulsively and dragged him into the water. There was a lively unrehearsed water scene and finally Pansy and the director were dragged aboard the yacht. There the cameraman followed them and whispered to the director, "Great stuff, boss, I got every foot of it." The director called him several kinds of a fool.

They printed up the picture, and while it was

THANHOUSER.

THE VAGABONDS (Aug. 29). There was nothing particularly prepossessing in the ragged vagabond who strolled down the dusty road, followed by an equally disreputable dog. They were objects of suspicion on the part of all well-to-do citizens, and the landlord to whom the beggar applied for food shared the views of his countrymen. "Get out," the innkeeper said, sharply. And the beggar and his dog would have gone supperless from the hotel if a wealthy man had not chanced to ride up, and, moved by pity, ordered a drink for the vagabond and himself. The rich man knew much of life and believed that even the shabby beggar might have an interesting story. And he was right.

Refreshed by food and drink, the vagabond told the story of his life and of the dog. When the wanderer was a young, handsome man, he had wooed and won a beautiful girl, but his one weakness, drink, had mastered him, and caused the girl to cast him aside. Cast into utter despair by her loss, he drank more deeply than before, and soon sunk into the depths with only his faithful dog to stand by him. Several years later he met the woman he loved, now a minister's wife, but she did not recognize him. Dropping a coin into his hand, she passed on. "Little she dreamed," said the beggar, "as on she went, who kissed the coin that her fingers dropped."

The rich man listened as the vagabond finished telling the story, and then the vagabond rose to his feet and called to his dog.

"You rascal!" the vagabond cried, "limber your lazy feet. We must be fiddling and performing for supper and bed or starve in the streets."

The faithful dog trotted after his master. He did not seem to consider his master was a poor provider, and the devotion in his eyes clearly indicated that he would follow his fellow vagabond until death parted them.

INFATUATION — (American—Four Parts — Sept. 2).—Phyllis Ladd, whose mother died when Phyllis was twelve, is the idol of her father, a successful business man in the town of Carthage. At fifteen, Phyllis takes her place as the head of her father's house and soon develops a remarkable capacity for directing the affairs of the home. The father looks forward with dread to the time when Phyllis will marry, both because he fears she may marry a man unworthy of her and because, in any event, he will lose her. When Phyllis is ready to make her social debut, her aunt, Mrs. Fensham, who is prominent in Washington society, invites her to the capital. Phyllis tires of the ultra-correctness of Washington life, and of the boresome suitors, so she returns to Carthage, where she falls into the routine of her former social life. At a matinee, she sees Cyril Adair, a young stage hero, and falls in love with him. She writes him asking him to call. Adair, who is vain, laughs at his conquest and accepts.

Other meetings follow, about none of which does Phyllis inform her father. Later her father receives an anonymous letter, connecting Phyllis' name with that of Adair. Ladd is astounded. Wrathfully he orders his daughter to break off the affair. She refuses. The writer of the letter, it transpires, is a woman member of Adair's company whom he had thrown aside. Adair finds to his surprise that Phyllis is quite ready to run away with him. They make hurried preparations and take a midnight train out of Cartnage. Adair, touched by the complete surrender of the girl, withstands the temptation that comes to him and marries her. In the life which they begin to lead together, Phyllis exerts all her womanly tact, courage and patience. She believes that Adair has great capacity for a pure, high love and she sets herself to work indefatigably to develop the best that is in him. When he comes home drunk, she does not chide him, but in patient silence awaits his hour of repentance. He is amazed at such treatment. It leads him to an understanding of the depth of her love for him.

Adair is discharged. He secures a new and better role, but again is discharged, for John Ladd is using his influence to keep his unwelcome son-in-law out of employment. Phyllis, however, stands by her husband. Ladd's bribes do not tempt Adair to give Phyllis up. Then John Ladd relents. He places the power of his dollars behind Adair. A new play is prepared. Adair has the leading role. A brilliant future opens before the young actor as he and John Ladd clasp hands in a bond of friendship. Father and daughter are joyfully re-united.

THE INGRATE—(Victory—Three Parts—Aug. 16).—To pay a debt of honor for her profligate husband, Florence Hillman steals $2,500 from a friend. From the man her husband owes the debt, she learns that her husband—he for whom she so degraded herself—is concerned in a love affair with the woman from whom she stole the money. This man is grinding his own axe, and uses his story to ingratiate himself into Florence's favor: but Florence has a friend, "a worshipper from afar," who resents this villain's advances, and gets himself into a duel for his trouble. On the duelling field—but we're not going to tell you any more of this. It's a good story and is told better on the screen than by an attempt at description on paper.

THE SKY IS THE LIMIT—(Starlight—Aug. 21).—Heinie and Louie are agreeably shocked when they learn through a newspaper advertisement that the uncle of the latter has died and left him a small fortune. They get the money from the bank and distribute much of it nonchalantly and with a lavish hand.

They receive an invitation to a cabaret dance at the Hotel Plaster, and accept, of course. To open the performance, Heinie makes up to the prima donna, and incurs his partner's wrath for so doing, which results in a fight. This is stopped before any trouble results and the dance is started. But they find that their knowledge of the mysteries of the light fantastic is inadequate and hire Mabel to give them a few pointers. When their course is finished they start out bravely enough, but a free-for-all starts and they are thrown out of the place into the confines of a nice, cool sewer in the vicinity.

THE MONOPOLIST—(Victory—Three Parts—Aug. 21).—Ralph Ferris, secretary to Russell Hopkins, a wealthy ship owner, is secretly in love with the latter's daughter, but she refuses his overtures, because he is an employee of her father, causing Ferris to resign from his position. He has a new invention for steamers and an organization is started to exploit it, making a small fortune in a small time.

Meanwhile, the Hopkins enterprise is in a bad way, and Ferris offers his wealth if the old man will command his daughter to marry the former secretary. She goes through the ceremony to save her parent, but forbids her husband to allow the word "love" to pass between them. They live this way for some time. It is Ferris's most cherished desire to corner the merchant marine business and starts to effect a combine. One large company wavers at the last minute and things look black for the success of the venture. Ferris is spirited away just before the time to sign the final papers arrives, but gets back at the last minute to prevent his loss.

However, the sum of $50,000 is needed to tide him over in the deal, and the wife hands up her highly prized jewels for the purpose of raising the funds. He accepts them and the crisis is passed. Ferris's love for his wife has grown constantly and she finally gives in to her own love for him and they go on a belated honeymoon.

A MERRY CHASE—(Starlight—Sept. 4).—Those two stepchildren of Fortune, Heinie and Louie, can't be dissuaded from the idea that "diss voild owes us a lifing," and are constantly on the lookout to catch said world napping, and collect. They find a house afire and Heinie, with nothing to lose, starts in to save something, if it's only a lunch. It's the living representative of a large fortune, however, and she's charming besides. For Heinie's heroism she gets him a job as janitor in the office building of her rich brother. As a janitor, Heinie proves a dismal failure, and everybody in the place feels his lack of experience. Louie meanwhile gets mixed up with a slick gent who goes to burglarize the office of Heinie's benefactor. Heinie is in the office and a battle of wits ensues in which Heinie, as usual, in a two-man conflict, comes off second best. As the picture ends, the world is still the debtor of Heinie and Louie.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

HER ATONEMENT—(Four Parts).—John De Forrest, owner of a fashionable gambling den, seeks out fortune-possessing persons and through the aid of Lil, a beautiful but heartless blonde, lures them to his gambling den, where he rids them of their fortunes. In this manner, De Forrest lures a young millionaire named Jack Bryce, to his den, where Bryce loses all his fortune. Bryce feels his disgrace deeply and leaves for the west. He arrives in a mining town and is befriended by the minister because he saved his life.

De Forrest, meanwhile, makes advances to Phillis, Bryce's sweetheart, and they marry. He gives Lil some money and tells her to go away. She arrives at the same town where Bryce is and engages herself as a singer in Gus Ward's gambling den. She becomes stranded and writes to De Forrest for more money. He refuses. She is very angry and informs against him. The police raid his place, but he kills a policeman and escapes. One night Bryce meets Lil in Gus's den and she tells him of De Forrest's schemes. Bryce returns home and finds the minister dead, who wills Bryce his entire fortune, provided he becomes a minister.

Phillis, meanwhile, also arrives in the same town where Bryce and Lil are and is engaged in Lil's place. She meets Lil and they quarrel and are separated by Jack. He recognizes Phillis and shows her a notice of De Forrest's death. Seeing that, she marries him. A year later, De Forrest wanders into the same town, and sees Jack and Phillis with their baby. He is greatly angered and goes to Gus's den, where he meets Lil, who is now a charity worker. He wants her to take a note to Phillis demanding money or he will expose her, but she refuses. A quarrel follows in which De Forrest kills himself accidentally. Lil breathes a sigh of relief when she sees that she saved, by her atonement, the lives of two happy people.

THE PRICE SHE PAID (Two Parts—Santa Barbara).—The forgery of his employer's name by a trusted clerk and the discovery through the confession of the culprit and the intervention of the latter's wife, gives the employer an opportunity to avow his love for the woman and to ask for terms in settlement which compromise the wife's honor. The husband tries to take the life of the tempter of his wife, but is overpowered and the gun is taken away from him. The man leaves, taking the revolver with him and telling the wife he will give her until midnight to pay the price.

The woman, devotedly loving her husband and desiring to save him from the penitentiary, administers a sleeping potion to him and at the hour of twelve arrives at the man's house to pay the price. She finds him dead and her husband's gun at his side. The man has been shot by a thief who was caught rifling his employer's safe. The woman secures the gun, is about to leave, but is apprehended. She is subsequently adjudged guilty of murder and sentenced to life. Previous to her arrest, the husband, awaking from his stupor, reads in his wife's absence the fact that she has yielded to the man. He leaves for the West, and does not learn of the happenings of the night.

A lapse of ten years shows the woman pardoned and seeking employment in a far distant State. She obtains work as nurse and the first case she is called upon to attend is that of the real murderer. He has been mortally shot in a gambling row and, desiring to atone for his past misdeeds, he tells the woman that he is the guilty man. In the adjoining room the runaway husband, suffering from severe burns, is recognized by his wife and finally husband and wife are reconciled.

FAST AND FURIOUS (Ramona—Two Parts).—A boxing exhibition at Boneville brings the champion, who is made much of by all of the citizens and even Rube's girl, to town. Rube can't see the champ at all and he starts to deface him the first time they meet. Rube starts trouble by firing some "Irish confetti" on the cranium of the champ. He then starts to mar the features of him. A Western fight fan, seeing the melee, decides to match the pair and the fun begins. Rube is put in training and he performs some marvelous deeds. During the fight Rube kicks the champ for a ghoul, thereby wins his girl back again.

CURING BILL (Banner).—Bill, a favorite of sleep and eats but a hater of work, is married to an unreasonable wife who would not let him either sleep or eat and is always demanding of him to do some work. In order to escape her ire, Bill pretends to be sick, but he cannot fool his wife. She gets the doctor for him, who pretends the necessity of an operation, thereby frightening Bill out of his sickness and making him do some real work.

THE MASTERPIECE (Liberty).—Marvin, a writer, is just finishing what he considers his masterpiece, "The Rose of Madeira," the production of which will enable him to marry Estelle, the girl he loves. Mary, the daughter of his landlady, loves Marvin in silence, and in various ways does little acts of love which go unheeded, making her sad and hopeless.

Higgins, a supposed friend of Marvin, reads the play, without Marvin's knowledge and, recognizing its merit, plots to have Marvin shanghaied and pose as the author of the play, and perhaps win Estelle, with whom he is infatuated. Marvin is shanghaied, Higgins places his coat on the wharf and he is reported drowned, Mary is heartbroken, but Estelle soon forgets Marvin and gives her love freely to the successful playwright, Higgins. The play is rehearsed and Higgins is the cause of much admiration, but his attention to the leading lady is the cause of much uneasiness to Estelle.

Marvin, meanwhile, is unable to stand the roughness of the sea, decides to make a break for liberty and swim to shore. He succeeds and on his return home faces Higgins. Estelle's shallow love has been proven to him and recognizing the sincerity and depth of Mary's love he proposes and is accepted. His right to the masterpiece is restored at once. By chance Higgins is shanghaied by the same rough necks that he paid to shanghai Marvin and is given a chance to try the hardships he imposed on an innocent man.

THE BATTLE OF BALLOTS (Six Parts).—Oma loves Jack and refuses to marry Hartman. Jack protects her and they eventually get married. Lafe and Hazelet have been good friends for years. Hartman tells Lafe that Hazelet voted dry. Lafe and Hazelet have a fight. Lafe builds a spite fence so Oma and Jack cannot communicate. Lafe dies with delirium tremens. Mrs. Tuthill dies from injuries received from Lafe while he is drunk. Just before Mrs. Hazelet passes away her husband promises her never to vote wet again. Maude Le Fever, the siren, who married Alfred Tuthill, deserts him and runs away with Sam Weber; she later deserts him. Alcohol kills old Dan Weber and leaves Sam a poverty-stricken wretch. Alfred Tuthill is redeemed from rum and builds a picture theater where the old saloon once stood and becomes a respected citizen. Jack is elected Mayor of the city, defeating Hartman by a large majority.

PARAMOUNT.

THE MARRIAGE OF KITTY (Lasky—Five Parts—Aug. 16).—For the first time in her life Katherine Silverton, or Kitty, as many of her friends called her, hesitated about spending carfare to ride six blocks to the law office of her god-father, John Travers. She was not used to walking and she didn't intend to start just because her money supply was short and she faced a future which promised economy of the strictest sort. Kitty's father had died leaving her practically nothing. She sought the advice of Mr. Travers. Mr. Travers at the moment Kitty entered the outer office had a perplexing problem on his hands. He was attorney for a large estate, the heir to which, Lord Reginald Belsize, had that morning arrived in New York to claim his inheritance. Lord Reginald was young, good looking and ambitious to marry Mme. Helen de Semiano. Mme. Helen saw a favored match in Lord Reginald, who was soon to be wealthy, and her brother, Jack Churchill, a young spendthrift, encouraged the match. But certain provisions of the will perplexed Mr. Travers. They also perplexed Lord Reginald. It was stipulated that Lord Reginald was to marry within a year or lose his inheritance; it further was stipulated that he was not to marry an actress. Lord Reginald didn't see how it could be arranged as he had brought Mme. Helen and her brother to New York. Mr. Travers suggested that he marry someone else first, leave her after the wedding and in six months she will obtain a divorce on grounds of desertion, making you free to marry whom you please.

Then Kitty entered the office. Kitty assented to the proposition readily. She had the promise of a large sum of money, a quick divorce and a chance, meanwhile, to look around the world. But Kitty was very attractive and pretty and, Lord Reginald said, that if Mme. Helen, who reluctantly had agreed to the arrangement, should see such an attractive young woman, she would refuse her consent. But resourceful Kitty rearranged her hair, put on a gingham apron, rolled up her sleeves and made herself into a most unpromising person. Mme. Helen passed approval, not knowing the hoax. The ceremony was quickly performed and Lord Reginald and his fiancee left to be gone for several months until Kitty had gained her divorce. Meanwhile the jealousy of Mme. Helen was discouraging Lord Reginald. So one day he went to Long Island where Kitty was living. Realizing her oportunity, Kitty did everything within her power to make him happy. When Mme. Helen arrived, having followed Lord Reginald, the latter told her the time had come for the parting of their ways. Kitty, he said, was the woman he loved, and Kitty admitted that she loved him.

HELENE OF THE NORTH—(Aug. 19—Famous Players—Five Parts).—The story opens in the drawing room of a wealthy English society woman. For the amusement of her guests she suggests a faggot party, in which each person present shall place a faggot in the fire and tell a story during the time it burns. When it comes to Helene's turn, she tells a story, thrilling indeed of her former life in the Canadian woods, of the man she met and loved, but whom since she has never seen, of the half-breed Pierre, who came between them and threatened to kill the other, Ralph, if she married him, of the curate, who eventually actually did wed her to Ralph, while Pierre thought she was being married to him. The astonished guests turn to her and ask, "And you have never seen your husband since?" "No," she replies, "he left the next day on a secret government mission." At that tense moment a new guest is announced, Lord Traverse. He enters the room, and Helene is confronted by her husband!

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 17—The King of Diamonds Two Parts—Aug. 23).—Down the rough mountain road the buckboard carrying Esther and Quabba sped on its thirty mile trip from the south portal of the mine tunnel in the mountain to the small depot that was the nearest rail connection of the mines with civilization. Meanwhile, Blair Stanley and Luke Lovell, after their narrow escape from the mine, had gained the mountain summit, and had taken up their relentless watch. Blair notices Esther and Quabba, and tells Luke that by descending the mountain they can intercept them. They start. Meanwhile Marmaduke Smythe was plodding along the base of the mountain. His reveries on "England, home and beauty" were abruptly ended by a succession of pistol shots. Then came the pounding clatter of hoofs and the rattle of carriage wheels. Smythe felt himself bowled over and scattered, with his belongings, in the dust. When he recovered, he found himself being helped by an Italian hunchback into a wagon driven by Esther. They had been attacked, she explained, a few yards back, by two armed men on foot, who had left the driver dead in the road. It was necessary to speed on with all haste.

But the maddened horses, at a fork in the road, took the wrong turn and went astray. Realizing this, and that Luke and Blair had now been left far behind, Esther made camp for the night. In exchanging stories of their adventures, Marmaduke learned that Esther also sought Arthur Stanley. The barrister himself had given up the quest. He felt that England scarcely could expect him to risk any more adventures in the American jungle. He determined to entrust his mission to Esther who should tell this elusive Mr. Stanley that he was heir to the Stanley earldom abroad. Then, to the amazement of Esther and Quabba, the English barrister brought from his vest pocket the diamond from the sky. He only asked to be rid of it. So this strange gem also he confided to Esther's care, to be delivered to Arthur. Even when she signed the receipt boldly, "Esther Stanley," Marmaduke did not permit himself to be surprised.

The following day Esther reached Santa Barbara. She learned from the miners that Arthur had gone thither to take possession of his new yacht, and she resolved to visit him on board unannounced. But meanwhile Blair and Vivian and the darker accomplices of this beautiful though unscrupulous woman, had none of them been idle. In Los Angeles, where Arthur had been summoned on business early that morning, Vivian still wove her spells about him. In parting with him at the hotel entrance she was conscious of a dapper little Frenchman, who stumbled against her, but not as though quite by accident. She felt a card pressed into her hand. It was a playing card—the king of diamonds. She hurried to her room and applied a match to a corner of it. The colored face shrivelled off. Vivian read: "To the Queen of Hearts—You will work with us. We are after the Diamond from the Sky. (Signed) The King of Diamonds." "Frank Durand!" gasped Vivian. The international swindler and gem thief to which her past still bound her. Esther had been rowed out to Arthur's yacht. She boarded the boat and swiftly made her way to the owner's cabin. Esther tip-toed forward, and pulling the diamond from the sky out in view on her neck, her lips framed the word, "Arthur!" when she found herself gazing horrified into a mirror which reflected the face of Blair! A rush! A cry for help! And Esther had plunged into the sea.

THE COTTON KING (Five Parts—Brady).—A group of wealthy men try to corner the cotton market and force up the price. They succeed in their plans, and the market is thrown into a panic. To be entirely successful, it is necessary for them to take into their group John Osborne, who controls a great deal of cotton. They approach him with their plan, but he refuses to agree. Therefore, when cotton is high, he sells, thereby reducing the price, and, incidentally making a large amount of money for himself. Osborne returns to the town of his birth, and buys the Ashton Cotton Mills from Henry Stockley and his son, Richard. He retains Richard as his general manager.

On the day he takes over the mills the furnace blows up, due to the negligence of Shillinglaw, the drunken engineer. During the explosion a man is killed, and Osborne gives his clerk, Piper, money to be given to the widow. This money, however, Piper keeps, and the fact is known only to Richard Stockley, who observed him putting it away. In the mills there is working a young girl, named Elsie Kent, who is the sole support of her grandmother. She falls in love with Richard, and he betrays her. Osborne falls in love with Hetty Drayson, who lives with her mother. The Draysons had been wealthy, Mr. Drayson having been Henry Stockley's partner in the Ashton Mills, but because he had married the girl whom Stockley loved, Stockley, in revenge, ruined him. Drayson had shortly afterward died, and Mrs. Drayson had since been very bitter against Stockley.

One day Henry Stockley is thrown from his horse and brought home in a dying condition. Before he dies, he makes his will. He feels remorse at the way he treated the Draysons, and he determines to make retribution. He leaves his property to his son, Richard, on the condition of Richard's marrying Hetty Drayson, thereby making up to the daughter for the wrong he did to the parents. This puts Richard in a quandary. He wants the money, and yet he knows that Hetty loves Osborne. Besides, there is Elsie, who is soon to become a mother. He solves the problem by spreading the report that Osborne is the betrayer of Elsie, thus alienating Hetty's affection from Osborne. Osborne's life is threatened.

Osborne, foreseeing that there will be a great falling off in the price of cotton, telegraphs his broker in code to "sell out." The code number representing this is twenty-four. He gives this telegram to Piper to send. Richard waylays Piper, and, threatening to expose the latter's record of theft, makes him change the 24 to 124, which means "hold." Thus the bottom falls out of the cotton market, and Osborne is ruined. Osborne sells a half interest in the mills, and realizes enough to meet his liabilities. By this time the mill workers come to Osborne's office to attack him for the supposed betrayal of Elsie. Elsie, however, comes in and, to save Osborne, tells them the truth about Richard. The men turn and wish to lynch Richard, but Osborne saves him. Soon after this Elsie dies.

Richard follows Osborne to New York and determines to get him out of the way, for now, with Elsie dead, he is in a position to marry Hetty. When he arrives in New York he sends a bogus telegram to Osborne as if from his broker, telling Osborne that he is sending an automobile to take Osborne to his country place over Sunday. When the automobile is out in the country, Osborne is seized and thrown in a deserted house. However, Osborne manages to overpower his captor and escapes. Meanwhile, Richard has gone home and telegraphs to Hetty, saying that Osborne is dead. He goes to see her, and pleads for her hand. She repulses him. He, in anger, pushes her into an elevator, and makes it descend. Before the elevator reaches the bottom, Osborne arrives and saves Hetty. Richard then is unmasked and is led away to prison.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

You can not get the BEST results without them, so what's the use worrying along with ordinary lenses when there is absolute certainty that these lenses will make your picture as sharp and brilliant as it is possible to make it. You can not afford to have a poorer picture than your competitor and nearly every theatre in the country is using Gundlach Projection Lenses now, so if you are not you are behind the game and badly handicapped.

There is no string attached to Gundlach Projection Lenses. They are sold subject to approval and you decide with your own eyes whether they improve the picture or not. They can be obtained promptly for any operating condition.

UNITED STATES WAR DEPARTMENT SPECIFIES
GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES

New York, May 15, 1915.

Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Your letter of May twelfth, with reference to the advertising in connection with the Government's specifying Gundlach Lenses for the sixty-six machines, received.

There is no objection to advertising any of the facts in this matter, and in this connection we might state that both Gundlach Motion Picture and Gundlach Stero Lenses were specified, after exhaustive tests had been made.

The sixty-six machines were shipped to the Chaplains of the various army posts and were sent to China, the Philippine Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, and all over the United States.

Yours very truly,
THE PRECISION MACHINE CO., INC.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

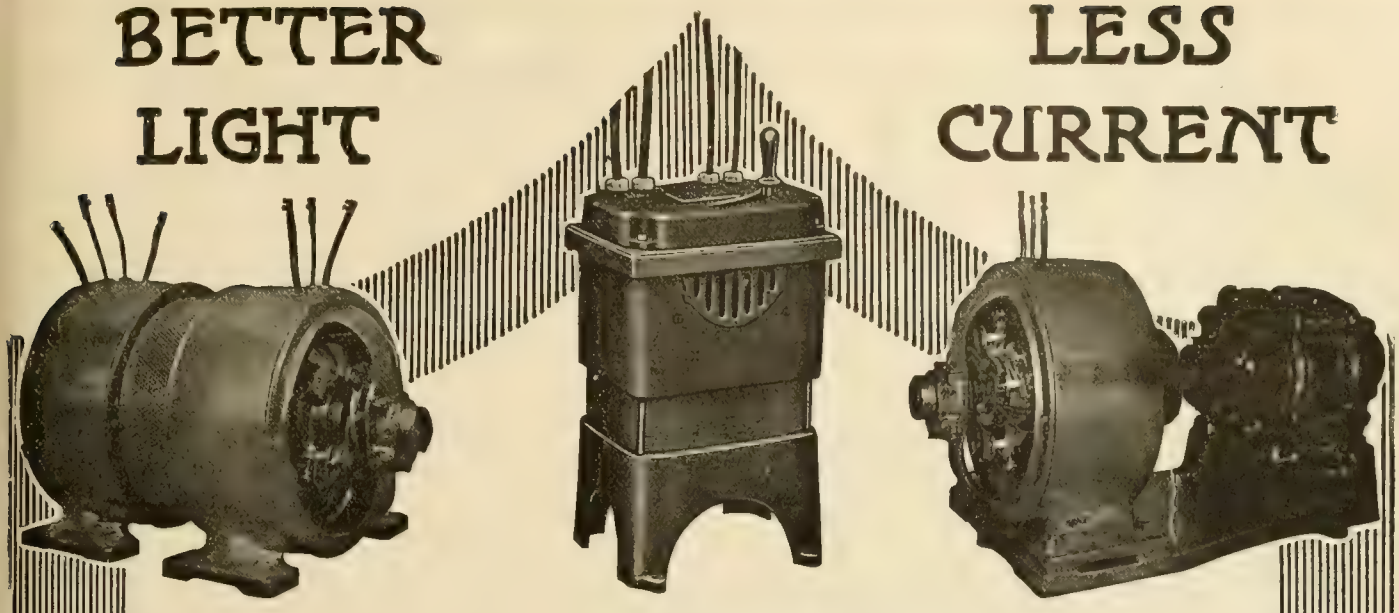
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.

The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

LAPIN'S MUSICAL POSTER FRAME
Draws the Crowd

The Frame with Hidden Bells Stands in Lobby and Piano Actuating Bells is Inside of Theatre

25 loud, clear and sweet musical bells play in a hidden receptacle back of a frame, actuated directly from piano-keyboard inside of theatre in conjunction with the piano music. Can be switched off by simple foot action on piano pedal whenever desired.

All this is made possible by Mr. Lapin's electrical keyboard contact device, which can be attached to any piano and is a most wonderful invention, and when combined with the musical bells in the new poster frame, makes the greatest outdoor attraction ever devised, which will produce its cost in a few weeks from increased attendance.

Makes two instruments out of one played simultaneously by same performer automatically at no additional expense.

Also well adapted for Cabarets, Restaurants, Dance Halls, Skating Rinks, etc.

Get the latest, best, most serviceable and economical musical device on the market.

Send for descriptive matter and prices.

Authorities Investigate Theatres!

INVESTIGATE PURITY OF AIR IN THEATERS.

The investigation of the air in amusement places in the District of Columbia, which has been under way for some time, is nearing completion. Samples of air have been secured in jars and have been analyzed to determine the presence of carbon dioxide, which shows vitiation. Tests have also been made to determine the nature of germs, if any, present in the samples. It may be that upon the completion of this investigation, regulations in regard to the proper ventilation of such places of amusement may be altered. As a whole the motion picture houses of Washington are well equipped with respect to ventilating systems and the exhibitors doubt if there will be found anything susceptible of criticism in this respect. Most of the exhibitors pride themselves on the sanitary condition and the upkeep of their establishments and every care is taken to maintain the high standard which they have themselves set up.

Suppose a test were made in YOUR theatre? Would the analyst find conditions satisfactory?

Sturtevant
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Ventilating Fans

will supply an abundance of good fresh wholesome air. In the summer time they are a guarantee of your patrons' comfort and they increase receipts at the box office. If you have not already installed a Sturtevant Ventilating System in your house you are overlooking a money maker.

Send us details as to size of your theatre, gallery, seating capacity, doors, windows, etc., and draw a rough floor plan. Our engineers will make recommendations without putting you under any obligation.

Easy Money for Theatres

Extra Profits You Are Not Now Getting

$360.45 the First Month from Butter-Kist Corn Popper

You have the ideal crowd to buy—you should be getting the profits. Scores of motion picture theatres are now reaping a year-'round harvest of spot-cash sales from BUTTER-KIST Pop-Corn in addition to regular paid admissions.

Profits $25 to $60 weekly. One theatre took in $360.45 the first month. Smallest theatres selling $4 to $5 worth of BUTTER-KIST in the evenings alone. Remember that every dollar you take in is seventy cents profit.

BUTTER-KIST Corn Popper

This famous money-maker requires only 26 in. x 32 in. of space. You have plenty of room for it in lobby, foyer or down near stage.

Runs itself and turns out 1 bag in 48 seconds—$3.75 per hour!

Pops and butters automatically—each morsel evenly. No watching, no work, no stock to carry, no muss. Just take in the money!

Superbly built of plate glass, with mahogany, oak or white enamel cabinet, metal parts of polished aluminum and nickel.

BUTTER-KIST Pop-Corn with Butter-Kist Prizes

"Everybody's" asking for famous BUTTER-KIST—the big, fluffy, white flakes—crisp, crackling and clean—evenly buttered and piping hot—untouched by hands. The finest, flavory, savory treat that ever tantalized a mortal's palate—with a coaxing fragrance that makes people hungry for BUTTER-KIST.

Every bag bears the valuable BUTTER-KIST trademark and Kiddies that thousands are saving and sending to us for handsome prizes. Brings people back to your theatre. Records show big increase in attendance.

Pay From Your Sales

A small payment down brings you the BUTTER-KIST Corn Popper with all privileges included. Then it pays for itself in short order. Let us show you.

"The Little Gold Mine" FREE

Handsome new book, "The Little Gold Mine," gives facts, figures, proof of profits and photographs. Sent FREE. Write for it at once—you lose $4 to $16 in sales every day you delay.

A NEW HELP for MANAGERS

PICTURE THEATRE ADVERTISING

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

(Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A text book and a hand book, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing, and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you.

Released in Regular Service, Monday, September 13th

It is in scanning Mr. Henderson's engagements since this star of the legitimate stage entered the profession, that his histrionic ability becomes apparent. Among his vehicles were "Miranda of the Balcony," "Divorcons" and "Tess of the "D'Urbevilles," with Mrs. Fiske; "The Runaways," opposite Fay Templeton at the Casino; "The Girl Question," at Wallack's; "Three Twins," Herald Square; "The Candy Shop," Knickerbocker; in vaudeville with Valeska Suratt; at the Broadway Theatre, in "The Summer Widowers"; "The Pink Lady," in which this star scored so great a success that he remained in it for three years, appearing at the New Amsterdam. New York City, and at the Globe Theatre, London; opposite Raymond Hitchcock in "The Beauty Shop" and in "Papa's Darling," New Amsterdam. Mr. Henderson's work in this unusual drama will delight photoplay patrons everywhere!

The Celebrated Holland Animal Trainer, Formerly with Pathe Freres, of Paris, France

In the mightiest Wild Animal Film Comedy ever presented on the Screen

"Joe Martin Turns 'Em Loose"

Produced at the Famous UNIVERSAL CITY
ZOO

WE could no more do justice to the fascination of this picture than we could tell you how far it is from here to there. It is indescribable. It isn't like any picture ever made before. You might call it a "courageous comedy." But it isn't a comedy; it's a convulsion. This picture begins where all other animal pictures leave off.

It is a ludicrous mixture of wild animals turned loose on a circus crowd and hundreds of funny scenes where movie actors and moving wild animals join in a mad chase, scramble and general rough house before a battery of cameras.

YOU will have to have your house safety valve working when you show "Joe Martin Turns 'Em Loose," or the roars of delight and the screams of terror from the movie fans will blow your roof into the next township.

You don't know, when you see this picture, whether to be afraid you're going to see a man or a woman or a howling circus mob torn to pieces by hungry lions, tigers, jaguars, leopards, bears and wildcats, or to forget the danger (and it's there and it's real) and holler your blamed head off at the fun.

Let your patrons ask you if it's trick photography. Then ask them if they noticed the greatest living animal trainer, Paul Bourgeois, in his ridiculous old maid make-up, wrestling on the floor and getting a toe-hold on a man-eating tiger? IT IS NOT TRICK PHOTOGRAPHY!

JOE MARTIN TURNS 'EM LOOSE" ought to be named "Joe Martin Packs 'Em In"—because—if you will advertise it—use the smashing posters we have prepared for it, you will play to standing room only at every performance. It isn't often that the Universal "turns loose" to the extent of a page to boost a two-reeler—You can judge from this spread that we think mighty well of "Joe Martin."

Universal Film Manufacturing Co.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

"Largest Film Manufacturing Concern in the Universe"

1600 Broadway, New York

An Open Letter To All Film Manufacturers

¶ Recently several stage directors and leading men and women who are under contract with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company have been approached by some of you with offers of increased salary. In some instances you knew they were under contract. Therefore you were practically offering them a premium for breaking their contracts.

¶ The Universal, like all other concerns, has been accused of many things which were untrue, but I don't believe anyone has ever had grounds for accusing us of attempting to get anyone to jump a contract. On the contrary we have always made it known to the trade that we would not even meet men or women who were under contract with any other film concern.

¶ On innumerable occasions we have broken off in the middle of negotiations with directors, stars and others upon learning that they had either a verbal or written agreement with some other company.

¶ I claim no great credit for the Universal in adopting such a policy. It is only right. It is the only decent, square thing to do. Surely we are not so money-mad that we must corrupt the morals of employees by converting them into contract jumpers.

¶ In the baseball business a contract jumper is considered one of the most despicable persons on earth. But I claim that the baseball magnate who gets the player to jump his contract (and no player will jump unless he has some place to jump to) is infinitely more to be despised and abhorred.

¶ Let us put the moving picture business on the same high plane with other established businesses. Let us set it up where it belongs. Let us give it all the decency and respectability that it deserves. A better element is fast coming into the business. Men of honor and clean business methods are being attracted to the moving picture business in all its branches. No sooner do they get into it than they are repeatedly horrified to note some of the low practices that obtain. The sooner we clean house the sooner we will attract men of high class. And the sooner we attract them, the sooner we will be able to drive out the bums, the gunmen, the Apaches and others whom you know as well as I do—human ghouls and crooks who have given the producing business a black eye and have caused crazy censorship to spring up in every city and hamlet in the country.

¶ Let us respect each others rights. Let us set an example that all may be proud to follow. Let us give every contract jumper to understand that he will be branded forever if he even so much as threatens to violate a sacred contract. Let us stand so far above suspicion in our dealings with each other that our employees will not dare to approach one of us with a proposition to break a contract with another of us.

The Universal Wants Ten More Directors!

The Universal has forty-two directors working at present, but we want ten more IMMEDIATELY. We want the very best we can get, but we don't want any man or woman who is under contract (written or verbal) with anybody else. We want directors who are capable of producing four, five and six-reel pictures which will equal in quality our present Broadway Universal Features. Make your application by mail and address your letter to

Another Colossal To Help Exhibitors The Highly Interesting UNIVE MOVIE

The Grand Cash Awards will literall

A Truly gigantic plan backed by the Best Newspapers in the U. S. With your Theatre you can stick your feet on Again the mighty UNIVERSAL comes to the front for Exhibitors of America with another colossal business-getting scheme to pack the crowds in all Exhibitors' Theatres. Again (as is only to be expected), the mighty UNIVERSAL is first in the field with something new for the profit of wide-awake Exhibitors. This time it is the intensely interesting, fascinating and absorbing UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME, which will be followed with intense interest by millions of Movie patrons. The wonderful UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME is backed by the great national Organization of the UNIVERSAL and by the biggest and best newspapers in the United States.

Here's a plan so vast in its extent, so alluring to millions of movie fans, so unique in its thought and possibilities as to be amazing. It is safe and conservative to state that in this 100,000,000 population of the U. S. fully 80,000,000 have seen, have heard of or know about "The Movies."

Then with the biggest and best newspapers throughout the length and breadth of the land publishing pages upon pages of advertising matter on the wonderful new UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME, it is safe to assume that millions of people will join this wonderful new craze that is destined to sweep the country like wildfire. And the particular beauty about this plan is that IT WILL SEND PEOPLE TO THOSE HOUSES THAT USE THIS PLAN IN DROVES, CROWDS, MASSES, JAMS. WHY? Because the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME will have no competitors.

There is only ONE UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME, fully protected by Government copyrights. Also, every Exhibitor who uses the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME will receive the tremendous benefits of the pages of advertising matter each paper in the city will publish (without one cent of advertising cost to Exhibitors).

Further—the newspapers have taken to this plan like ducks to water. They are enthused over it, which means a whale of a campaign of publicity in every single town where the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME is used, and it WILL appear in every town, city and hamlet in this country in which exist Exhibitors who are alive to a plan as huge as this. There will be advertising galore—mountains of it. There will be slides, posters, cards, heralds, throwaways, and other dope, and enough of it to tickle any Exhibitor alive. Those who communicate at once will be given first consideration—UNIVERSAL EXHIBITORS to be given the first opportunity. It will not be necessary to be a UNIVERSAL Exhibitor to take on the UNIVERSAL MOVIEGAME. ANY House using ANY service can make a smashing success of this mighty new scheme. There will be no waiting.

First come—first served—Universal Exhibitors given the preference. We don't care who you are or where your house is located. This plan will pack 'em in during the entire life of the plan.

This is no scheme for dead ones. ANY Exhibitor can use it. The harder he plugs the game the bigger the results. Get busy—not an hour from now, but RIGHT NOW—the minute you finish reading this ad. You'll howl if you don't get in. You HAVE the chance now—TODAY.

WARNING!

OWING to the great popularity of the Charles Chaplin photoplays, many unauthorized prints of our productions, portraying him in his different pictures, are being handled in the United States. Some of these are fake prints and some are duplicates.

This company has adopted a policy of vigorous prosecution of every violation that comes to its notice, whether it be by the person who makes the unauthorized films or the person who rents or distributes them.

In the past three weeks the company has seized two unauthorized two-act Chaplin photoplays and has instituted two suits for injunction, accounting, and confiscation of the films, charging violation of our copyright.

It is our intention to protect our property rights and also to assure the public that it will see a genuine Chaplin picture when it is advertised as an Essanay-Chaplin Comedy.

We intend to pursue this policy until there is not a fake or duplicate Chaplin picture in the country.

This announcement is made so that dealers, exhibitors and the public may be put on their guard.

We earnestly request that you assist us in this campaign for Picture Honesty by sending us notice of any fake Essanay-Chaplin picture that you may know of.

For such information we thank you.

TRIANGLE PLANS

Between September 20 and October 1 the four model theatres of the Triangle Film Corporation will be opened in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston respectively. The bill for the opening week will be:

DUSTIN FARNUM IN "THE IRON STRAIN"
(Ince-supervised five-reeler)

RAYMOND HITCHCOCK IN "MY VALET"
(Sennett-Keystone four-reeler)

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN "THE LAMB"
(Griffith-supervised five-reeler)

That characterizes the service which Triangle Film Corporation will offer to the leading exhibitors of the country, one in each district, beginning a short time after the dates of the presentations in the model theatres. Foremost stars of the American stage, several of them, in each entertainment; the artistic supervision of Griffith, Ince and Sennett; the elaborate orchestral music arranged by William Furst, the famous composer and director.

Contracts are now making with exhibitors for the service in all important centers. The demand to rent the Triangle service has been so extraordinary that we are obliged to ask our correspondents to exercise a certain patience.

The rental service itself will start during the latter part of October. Exactly the same plays and music as presented in the four great cities will be assured to the exhibitors. The unusual efforts of Messrs. Griffith, Ince and Sennett and the enthusiastic co-operation of the stars promise a generous and complete output for the entire year.

3 Favorite Stars In One Feature by a World Famous Author— Richard Harding Davis

"RANSON'S FOLLY"

IN 4 SPLENDID ACTS

Scenario by "Rich-art" Ridgley

Featuring

Edward Earle, Mabel Trunnelle and Marc MacDermott

In vivid story action—action that rips along with the abandon of clean, red-blooded men—Richard Harding Davis has never been surpassed. "Ranson's Folly" is Davis at his best. And never were three stars better fitted to their roles than this triumphant trio—Edward Earle, Mabel Trunnelle and Marc MacDermott, with the picture master, "Rich-art" Ridgley to heighten their genius—three who have earned their places by sheer dramatic and picturing ability; three favorites cast in a favorite book story. Edward Earle is an admirable Ranson, Marc MacDermott, the devoted father with a concealed crooked past—worthy of such an artist—while Mabel Trunnelle is the winsome daughter. This is enough for the Exhibitor who knows his business. Friday, Sept 17. About 4000 feet.

THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE was written by J. Stuart Blackton and Vitagraphed under his personal supervision on a scale never before attempted in motion pictures.

Acknowledgment is made to Hudson Maxim, international authority on arms and ammunition, for facts contained in his "Defenseless America," and to a score of prominent Americans in Army, Navy and Administrative circles for co-operation and advice. Among its sponsors are the foremost names in current American history. Personages of national and international importance appear personally in the production. The drama itself is enacted by a distinguished Vitagraph cast headed by Mr. Charles Richman. In the production are 5,000 National Guardsmen, 800 members of the G. A. R., 5,000 horses and 8,000 supernumeraries.

Facts and Comments

WE COMMEND to the special attention of our readers the valuable and practical book on Picture Theatre Advertising by Epes Winthrop Sargent, who has won the gratitude of many an exhibitor by his sound and solid counsel. Mr. Sargent is an expert, graduated from the school of experience. Many a moribund theater has been called back to life and many a prosperous one has been made more prosperous still by ingenious advertising. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD offers you the only encyclopedia on the subject.

NO ONE at this time is safe in predicting the end of the European war. According to all appearances it will be a long struggle. In any event, even if the war ended to-morrow, Europe will be for years to come an uncommonly rich field for the American-made film. Even at this moment the American film is finding an extraordinary welcome in England and in all the countries not affected by the British blockade of the central empires. The need for sound and wholesome amusement will be imperative in all the countries of Europe as soon as peace is concluded. To meet this need there is very little supply of European origin. With the notable exception of Denmark, the neutral countries of Europe are producing next to nothing and the belligerent nations have almost ceased producing. Conditions for producing in all of the belligerent countries are the worst imaginable. The moral is: Keep your eye on the European market.

AIRDOMES have been unusually unfortunate this year. In the first place, the weather has been uncompromisingly bad. That is reason enough, and we might omit the other reasons. Regulations of a more or less stringent nature, such as were never applied to airdomes before, have helped to make 1915 a disastrous season. Airdomes are at all times what the insurance companies call "extra-hazardous." This fact has been realized by most of the exchanges, for they will not, as a rule, serve the airdome upon any but a cash-in-advance basis.

IN SOME parts of Canada the exhibitor must know at his peril whether any adult accompanying a minor into the theater is properly related to such minor. The Solons of Kansas, jealous of their preeminence in freak legislation, have now made the exhibitor an involuntary expert in whooping cough cases. If he lets a child in trusting in the mother's promise that her offspring has no whooping cough he takes a big chance. If the mother deceived him, or proves to have been mistaken, the exhibitor must pay the penalty.

DOES the portrayal of stabbing, strangling and poisoning scenes on a poster bring patrons into the moving picture theater? Somebody seems to believe it does. We cannot otherwise account for the bloody and murderous imagination of the men who "make the paper." All of these men, as far as we know, are very decent and wholly inoffensive citizens in their private lives and would not even think of being unkind to an animal. It is only when they select the "Best scenes for the ones, threes and sixes" that they go into a paroxysm of "frightfulness." They see red. They strangely imagine that they are trying to please the taste of the Apaches, quite forgetful of the women and children who compose such a commanding percentage of the moving picture audience. We know of at least one theater in this city which has increased the number and improved the quality of its patronage by barring all these "horror" posters from its lobby. The exhibitor removed the "horrors" just to show the writer that his attendance would fall off in consequence. The result showed the exhibitor's mistake. By the way, this theater is located in a "transient" neighborhood, where bloody posters are supposed to be as needful as the daily bread.

PRODUCERS bidding against each other for the services of individual actors and directors inflate the value of such services much beyond the normal point. The cost of extravagant salaries then falls upon the exhibitor who finds a substantial and really unwarrantable increase in his film bill. There is not and there never can be any solid advantage in tampering with contracts. Very often it turns out to be a case of "the biter bitten."

Cause and Effect

By W. Stephen Bush.

Cause

WHEREVER there is a board of censors to pass upon moving picture plays —— ——— creates a great furore. The Ohio state board of censors passed an order barring her from acting in that state. Her acting is tabooed in Atlanta, Ga., and several other staid conservative Southern cities. Great havoc is made of the plays in which she stars when one of them comes before the Chicago board of censors.  ———— is a supreme mistress of the art of portraying a sinister personality.  She always plays the part of the vampire woman. She is the home-breaker. She is the heroine of an unlawful love, an intense fervid overwhelming passing that sweeps aside convention and that disregards every other human feeling and every consequence to gain its ends. Like the siren ——— ——— lures her victim to his doom. Her acting has all the dramatic power of the old Greek tragedy. It impresses more than all the sermons ever preached the swift and certain punishment that follows in the wake of the evildoer."—Extract from publicity matter sent out by a feature company.

Effect

UNFORTUNATELY there are film-producers who are not reputable, not affiliated with the large and intelligent body of manufacturers who know that long life and success for their industry lies in decent films and these fly-by-night concerns circulate films which are a menace to the morals and the good taste of your young people. It is time for us all to act —to add to the National Censorship the protection of a local board of censors. Chicago has had to do this. Boston has done it. You owe it to your young people. Form your committee and insist that your local managers run off questionable films for this Committee or Board of Censors. Make it your business to protest to the manager of your favorite theater every time an objectionable film is shown. And on this committee have some one who can rise above mere crime and salaciousness and pass on questions of good taste.

—Pictorial Review, September, 1915.

In as far as the editorial in the paper quoted above makes a special plea for further censorship we, of course, very heartily disagree with it. Every argument in favor of censoring motion pictures applies with equal force to the necessity of a censorship for the press. The most distressing and discouraging feature of the whole censorship agitation lies in the fact that the advocates of censorship simply ignore the experience of the centuries. If a man appeared among us today advocating the establishment of a state church and proposing penalties and forfeitures for non-jurors we would immediately consign him to the madhouse. If a physician were to advance some theory in absolute conflict with Harvey's doctrine of circulation he could not get a hearing among intelligent men. The astronomic system of Ptolemy is exploded forever. Now censorship has been as thoroughly discredited by experience as the Spanish Inquisition or the theory that the planetary system revolves around the earth. The fact that every state has a constitutional provision for the liberty of the press (which means nothing more and nothing less than an absolute exemption from censorship), is proof enough that our ancestors had tried censorship and found it a delusion and a snare.

At the same time we can well understand that a bold and persistent pandering to morbid tastes arouses the wrath of decent people. We surely do not wish to be understood as saying that the lure of the Siren is not a legitimate and proper theme for the dramatist. We cannot read either the literature or the history of mankind without finding the ensanguined trail of the Siren. To specialize in the portrayal of "sinister characters," to advertise the fact and to rejoice boastingly over the opposition these Siren serials have aroused is quite another matter. Such a proceeding is both inartistic and unethical to say the least. It is also a misrepresentation and indeed a perversion of the truth of life and therefore a mortal sin against the first commandment of the drama, which is to hold the mirror up to life and to nature. It is simply ridiculous to speak of "the old Greek tragedy" in connection with this sort of pandering. The Greek drama does indeed accentuate the relentlessness of fate but there is not a line in any of the three great Greek masters which caters or tries to cater to the taste of the morbid. Our American public, we are very sure, is easily surfeited with productions in which "the vampire woman" is "featured." When it becomes apparent that the promoters of these productions aim at nothing higher than an unscrupulous use of the screen to get quick profits the surfeit turns into open disgust toward the producers. We cannot resist the conclusion that such productions are bound to hurt the good name of the industry and it seems equally evident alas that the producers do not care a fig whether they hurt the industry or not.

The exhibitors have it in their power to make the unscrupulous exploitation of the screen by reckless producers unprofitable. They have it in their power to decline the partnership in any such enterprise.

In taking this position we do not lose sight of the fact that commercial profit is the primary object of all film production. We go one step further and waiving every ethical consideration we maintain that productions of this kind do not pay. The man who uses them may enjoy a fleeting prosperity but a clean stable and therefore genuinely profitable business cannot be built up by such means. Eventually the man who exhibits this sort of "Greek" tragedy will be overtaken by the modern tragedy of empty houses. If the producers and promoters of these ultra-sensational and superheated features were to harm no one but themselves there would be little to do but applaud the process of natural elimination. Unfortunately these men intentionally or unintentionally bring reproach upon an industry which cannot endure except upon a basis of clean pictures and sound popular approval. Hence it behooves all friends of the motion picture to frown upon the picture which continually specializes in the repulsive and abhorrent features of human life. Censorship will not cure the evil but public opinion can cure it. The exhibitor who knows his business well enough to be responsive to public sentiment can do more for the suppression of these vicious films with "a high moral lesson" than any other single factor either within or without the industry.

Backgrounds*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

BAD art may be worse than none at all, but it is impossible to give directors any information on the subject. Too long in the position of autocrats so far as motion-picture production is concerned, deeply engrossed in getting credit for what is the resultant of a composite effort, they either depend upon a scenic designer or pay no attention to the subject at all. There are a few exceptions, but such is the rule. They concern themselves with what is going on in the primary positions, those near the front, and let the secondary positions, those further removed from the spectator's eyes take care of themselves. The keynote of the whole impression to be made may be found in either position, and it is certainly important in an art which appeals to the visual sense alone that there should be a harmony of relation between all parts of the pictured story, and there can be no artistic ensemble where backgrounds are designed and made by a man who has incomplete knowledge of characters and action in the story.

The inharmonious setting is always obtrusive. It will even distract attention from important action. Rather than it should be out of accord with the spirit of the piece it would be better to eliminate every inanimate object that can be disposed of and confine interior settings to a few simple hangings. Even then there is no surety that they will not be flimsy or tawdry, and to limit a setting to what is of utility means a cheerless background, one devoid of the warmth and charm of such rooms as we enjoy seeing in real life. Mere story development, something accomplished by movement, gesture and facial expression of actors, may easily become soulless without "atmosphere."

Loud proclamation of directorial stupidity is the presence of hideous figured wall paper so commonly used, so generally irritating to beauty-loving eyes, instantly destructive of both dignity and repose in a room, operating in opposition to the spectator's state of receptivity. Its one justifiable employment is in comedy, especialy when it becomes necessary to show up pretentious bad taste. Elsewhere it certainly affords no pleasure and is therefore no contribution to the entertainment of an audience. Studio carpets are not distressing because the camera point of view renders them inconspicuous, but the furniture called on for regular service does its full share to make screen presentations monotonous. This partly is the author's fault. He at least has the privilege of describing what he believes to be appropriate and of explaining why.

Examine the photographs of people you know and note how uncompromisingly changeless they are. They look as they never look except when posing for the camera. So with the average collection of studio furniture bunched in an alleged parlor or bedchamber. One instinctively feels that occupants of the room have never been in personal contact with their surroundings. If a true home is pictured, there should surely be endearing objects within the scope of vision, the little things that have accumulated during one or more generations and have found their proper and convenient places in the tout ensemble. There may not be elegance in the objects shown, nor even in their arrangement, but we feel that people have lived, suffered and enjoyed within the walls, and that it is more or less an expression of personality. This is particularly true of small details rarely supplied by the prop room.

Where character is not to be specifically indicated by environment, where people gather in public buildings, where large ensembles are to be unfolded, there is sometimes a new significance to be considered. The story may involve a contrast of judicial pomposity in a court room with the scant consideration of him who goes there by right for justice; there may be a contrast to enforce between formal church worship and true Christianity; a comparison may be suggested between the ancient nobility of a structure and its present decadent use;—in these and other similar cases there exists a strong necessity of providing both architecture and settings that shall be in perfect accord with the spirit of the story.

Interiors may be studied, but a director should have an innate love of beauty and some knowledge of those sciences which deduce from nature and formulate principles of art before going into the open for backgrounds. In the New Art's special sphere, where none others may intrude, in catching the sweetest moods of Nature in motion, or her strongest, nearly all directors fail miserably. Some there are who go to beauty from instinct, but they are very few, and they are rarely discriminating. One of the most attractive pictures ever thrown on the screen visualized the race of a number of speedy sailing yachts, but the producer was a yachtsman and very much of an artist besides. The directors who select natural backgrounds as a true artist, design those of a painting, helps as materially in impressing the idea of a motion-picture production as does its author. He gives it appropriate atmosphere, enriches its poetic charm, and confers that "blessed mood which is the burden of its mystery."

One director of fine artistic sensibilities has many a clever device for stimulating imagination by symbolic treatment of his subject and by opening up an unexpected vista to our pure delight. The sun goes down in dark clouds, a prophecy of events to follow. We gaze at a hedge, or mask of foliage, which is suddenly torn apart, revealing a long line of cavalry, infantry and artillery awaiting a word of command to engage the enemy. There is a beach view of limited scope, within which the action of principals takes place, then the camera is slowly turned to a long line of coast, the scene of human activity as far as the eye can reach. A long line of troops engaged in a hand to hand encounter, a siege in which the remote action is as visable and as forceful as that in the foreground. There is the smoke and confusion of battle at night, when a sudden flare from an explosion lights up a scene of terrible slaughter.

Whether we are dealing with works of realistic fiction, or with those of idealistic romance, whether we are concerned with the ordinary affairs of life, or with those of moment and magnitude there are impressive moments in the screen presentation when the effect of action is determined by blending it with appropriate settings or a mood harmonious in nature. If our pulses are throbbing in unison with those of the principal characters in an exciting story, it is not wholly because we have been brought into sympathy with their motives and feelings, but because we seem to live in their atmosphere.

Kalem Announces New Series

Marguerite Courtot to Portray the Highest Type of American Girl in "The Ventures of Marguerite"—Single Reel Subjects.

HOLDING true to the belief that manufacturers catering to the needs of the great body of exhibitors who make short photoplays the nucleus of their programs, should expend their best efforts in perfecting single-reel subjects, the Kalem company announces a new series of one-reel pictures, typically American in spirit and featuring one of the most charming actresses known to the screen. "The Ventures of Marguerite" is the title of the series that gives promise of rivalling "The Hazards of Helen" in popularity. Marguerite Courtot is the player selected for the role of Marguerite.

Marguerite Courtot.

With the release of the first picture, "The Kidnapped Heiress," on Oct. 22, the weekly Kalem program will be rearranged to include three single reels, one two-reel subject and one feature photoplay in three or four reels. "The Ventures of Marguerite," to be issued every Friday, will replace the two-reel productions now being alternated with reissues of the more notable of the early Kalem productions.

Howard Irving Young, the author of the stories which will be directed by Hamilton Smith, has outlined an idea with many possibilities. Marguerite, as he sees her, typifies the best in young American womanhood. She is an unspoiled girl, kind, lovable, generous, and withal a product of modern conditions, which have done so much to develop the resourcefulness of women. An effort will be made to reveal the character of Marguerite as it is tested by a sequence of adventures, themselves the outcome of a dominant phase of the girl's nature.

Marguerite Courtot Feeding Her Chickens.

She is wealthy, but wealth to her means little, save when it makes possible the relief of misery due to poverty. An orphan, who inherits a large estate on her eighteenth birthday, Marguerite retains the spiritual simplicity of a child, combined with the sympathetic impulses of a sensitive woman. Beneath a demure manner there lies a force of character and an innate appreciation of what is right. Feeling that her mission in life is to help others, she seeks opportunities for doing good and in finding them in the slums, among poor outcast girls, in the overcrowded rooms of depressing tenements, she also finds a quantity of melodramatic adventure. Each issue of the series will show one of these adventures and how it may be met by a self-reliant girl, inspired by the natural purity and strength of a fine nature.

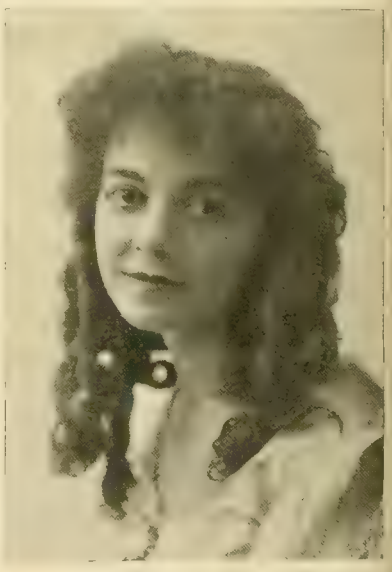
Before selecting an actress for the role of Marguerite, the Kalem Company considered a large number of available young women and the choice fell to Miss Courtot, because she is so completely the embodiment of the character Mr. Young has in mind. She possesses girlish beauty of a rare type. Her face suggests sweetness and innocence and her exceptionally refined personality is entirely in keeping with the author's characterization. Supplementing the advantages of a pleasing appearance, Miss Courtot has revealed the gifts of a trained actress, who for some time past has been one of the most popular members of the Kalem stock company. She has scored pronounced successes in widely varied roles.

The company to appear in support of Miss Courtot has not been selected, but it is understood that it will comprise a number of well known players.

June Keith

JUNE KEITH, new leading woman with Essanay, avers that dodging bullets is not at all her specialty, although she successfully accomplished this feat a few nights ago.

Miss Keith, who takes the leading feminine role in "The Man Trail," Essanay's six-act feature, was returning to her home in Chicago from "The Pines," where the piece was staged, when a man stepped out in front of her car from behind some trees at the side of the road in Lake Forest. It was dark and the chauffeur thought the man was a robber and, instead of halting, put on all speed.



June Keith.

The man opened fire, three bullets striking the car, one passing through the wind shield and barely missing Miss Keith. She decided it was time to halt. The man proved to be a policeman and arrested the chauffeur, who was later discharged.

Miss Keith is well known on the legitimate stage and has made a distinct hit in Essanay's "A Buch of Keys" and "The Man Trail." She played the part of Nang Ping in "Mr. Wu," produced by Walker Whiteside in connection with Henry W. Savage. She also has starred in "The Woman," "Stop Thief," "The Man of the Hour," "The Spendthrift" and "The Passing of the Idle Rich."

Miss Keith is a pretty brunette, who can laugh or cry, as the part requires. She is a Chicago girl, daughter of Douglass Smith, a wealthy Chicago banker. She has had her share of success in Broadway productions but now has forsaken the footlights for photoplays.

MAKING OVEY POPULAR.

With the idea of assisting the exhibitor to realize upon the rapidly growing popularity of George Ovey and of the new Cub Comedies, David Horsley's new comedy brand on the Mutual program, a tremendous publicity and advertising campaign has been planned and is now put into effect to reach and to attract the motion picture patron.

Material in different forms, such as life-size cut-outs, slides, photos and other matter of "the funniest man in America," with his Cub, have been prepared and is available to exhibitors. In addition a publicity undertaking covering many hundreds of newspapers throughout the country has been effected by which the exhibitor will profit.

I. C. C. Rules on C. O. D.'S

Permits Modification of Regulation So that Picture Shipments May be Examined.

By C. L. Linz.

THE Interstate Commerce Commission has granted permission to the various express companies to modify the present regulations governing the acceptance of C. O. D. packages where the consignee is to be permitted to examine the same. This will make possible screen examinations of motion picture films where same are sent C. O. D.

The express companies proposed that paragraph (c) of rule 14 be changed so as to authorize the acceptance of C. O. D. packages bearing instructions to permit the consignee to examine same for a trial period not exceeding six days, during which time the express company is to hold the money collected. If the shipment is not returned to the carrier at the expiration of the period named in the instructions the proceeds will be transmitted to the shipper. The present classification authorizes agents to accept shipments bearing instructions to permit examination and selection, provided the carrier is released from all loss incident to such examination. The proposed change will require a release only when the shipper instructs the carrier to hold the money pending trial examination off the carrier's premises. The proposed rule will facilitate the sale of merchandise to out-of-town patrons of the shipper and is approved by the Commission.

The carriers presented the form of release referred to, but this the Commission declined to approve without modification. In its order, however, it set forth the form that might be used, as follows:

RELEASE.

For goods C.O.D. with privilege of trial examination outside of express company's office.

This is to certify that I (or we), the undersigned, have forwarded and expect hereafter to forward by the ——— Express Company, various C.O.D. shipments, with the privilege of trial examination outside of express company's office, and do hereby authorize and instruct said company and its connecting carriers, upon consignee or consignees of any such shipments depositing with the delivering agent the amount of such C.O.D. bill, to deliver such shipment to the consignee or consignees for the purpose of a trial examination, which examination shall be for such period as is named in the instructions accompanying the shipment, but not exceeding six days, during which time the amount of the C.O.D. will be held by the express company. In case the whole of such shipment shall not be retained, we authorize the express company to refund to such consignee or consignees the proportionate amount of such C.O.D. bill.

And in consideration of the acceptance by the said company and its connecting carriers of such shipment, on the conditions named, we do hereby assume all risks of loss or damage which may occur in connection with, or by reason of such examination and repacking of such shipments; and we agree that the said company and its connecting carriers are not to be held liable or responsible for any loss or damage to said shipments, or any part thereof, or any loss or damage occasioned by detention or delay in delivering the same from any cause whatever, unless the said loss or damage shall have been caused by said company, its connecting carriers, or its or their agents or servants. * * *

The Commission also authorizes the acceptance and forwarding of advertisements, N. O. S. printed, engraved, lithographed, or photographed on paper, cloth, or cardboard, not including billheads, letterheads, or letter paper, envelopes, bags, wrappers or ornamental paper, under a guaranty that the transportation charges will be paid. The classification now requires prepayment of charges. The change is in the interest of the public, and it was ordered by the Commission.

WAR REDUCES U. S. FILM EXPORTS.

That the European war has not increased the market for American film is evident from the Government statistics of the Department of Commerce. For the year ending June, 1915, we exported a total of 151,054,884 feet of film against a total of 188,049,654 for the previous twelve months. It should be pointed out, however, that the decrease is in the unexposed or raw stock film. For exposed films or American film productions, last year's exports were 35,987,460 feet, or a gain of 3,297,356 feet over the previous year. In cash value, last year's exports of exposed film amounted to $2,498,504, against $2,282,924 for the year ending June, 1914, and $2,276,460 for the year ending June, 1913. For unexposed, raw stock film, the figures are $2,591,444 for the year ending June, 1915; $4,264,722 for year ending June, 1914, and $1,753,042 for year ending June, 1913.

LESSER WILL HANDLE STANDARD.

The Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., will handle on the coast for the next five years "The Standard Program" of eighteen releases a week of one, two and three reel subjects.

Associated to Release September 13

Paper for the Twelve Reels Constituting the First Week's Program Now Going Forward to Sixteen Exchanges.

AT THE offices of the Associated Film Sales Corporation in the World's Tower Building General Manager Arthur Bard is busy preparing for the first week's release of his company, beginning September 13. The paper for the twelve reels which will constitute the program for the initial seven days is now going forward to the sixteen exchanges which have been signed up by the Associated. The twelve reels each week, in one and two reel subjects, which Mr. Bard admitted will be extended in time to come, will be augmented by a four or five reel feature every other week. The first of these larger productions, which will be issued in the week of September 20, is "Her Atonement," featuring Lillian Wiggins.

"We are going to try to make a quality program," said Mr. Bard. "Of course, that is an expression much in use, but we mean to prove what we say. We are so situated with the manufacturers that if a subject does not come up to the standards of present-day needs it will be eliminated."

Mr. Bard announced that the Variety Films Corporation, 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, of which Louis Rosenbluh is president and general manager, had contracted with the Associated for its entire New York State territory.

The concerns contributing to the program of the Associated are the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, of which Dr. E. J. Boseke, former mayor of Santa Barbara, is president; Navajo Film Company of Los Angeles, W. H. Bissell, president; Liberty Film Company, of San Mateo, Cal., S. Lindblom, president; Ramona brand, made by the Santa Barbara Company; Empire Film Company, of Los Angeles, Louis L. Bard, president; Federal Film Company, of New York, W. B. Nedham, president; Alhambra Film Company, of New York, B. Cohen, president; Burke Film Company, of Los Angeles, E. L. Burke, president, making the Deer brand; Banner Film Company, of San Mateo, Cal., Bill Stinger, president.

Ivy Troutman

MISS IVY TROUTMAN, a famous Broadway star, will make her debut in motion pictures on the Mutual Program in the second Rialto Star Feature release of the Gaumont Company, entitled "The House With Nobody In It." This will be released September 22. Miss Troutman made her first appearance on the professional stage ten years ago. The first four years were spent principally with companies touring through the West. The last six years she has never played outside of New York City, which shows that she has been connected only with successful plays which have had long New York runs. This is the sort of star which will figure on the Mutual's regular program, through all of the Gaumont Company's Rialto Star features.

Ivy Troutman.

Among the successful plays in which Miss Troutman has appeared may be mentioned "The College Widow" and William H. Crane's production, "Father and the Boys." In 1911 she appeared in "Baby Mine" and in 1912 with Mme. Simone in "The Return from Jerusalem." In 1913, Miss Troutman had the lead in "A Pair of Sixes," and last year she played opposite Lou Tellegen in "Taking Chances," at the Thirty-ninth Street theater.

Miss Troutman, never having been in pictures, is very anxious to appear on the screen. "And I don't think that appearing on the screen will hurt my name on the legitimate stage, either," she adds.

Change in Triangle Program

"The Iron Strain" Substituted for "The Coward" for Knickerbocker Opening—Activity at Studios.

THOMAS H. INCE wired Messrs. Kessel and Baumann last Saturday that he had decided to present as his first Triangle release Dustin Farnum in "The Iron Strain" instead of Frank Keenan in "The Coward." While Mr. Ince feels that "The Coward" is a splendid picture, he thinks perhaps that it is too much of a man's play for his introduction to the great Triangle service. Powerful emotional love stories are most in favor with all classes of theatergoers. Dustin Farnum's Alaskan offering affords just this kind of entertainment. With Enid Markey as the rebellious wife and Louise Glaum as the siren of the Arctic cabaret, each in love with Dustin Farnum as the husky "Chuck" Hemingway, there are tremendous opportunities for the exploiting of primitive emotions. It must not be thought that the caveman idea predominating the play is carried out in a brutal manner. "Chuck" Hemingway is a young Eastern collegian in disguise, the enforced wife is his social equal, and Kitty Molloy, the music hall favorite, is at least a sincere, passionate bit of humanity. It is said that Mr. Farnum has never appeared to better advantage than in this story of the Alaskan wilds, which was written for him by C. Gardner Sullivan and Thomas H. Ince and produced under the personal supervision of the latter. The other plays of the Triangle opening, namely, Raymond Hitchcock in "My Valet" and Douglas Fairbanks in "The Lamb," will remain unchanged.

The three Triangle studios of Hollywood, Inceville and Keystone are now at the top of activify, with more distinguished players gathered there than are to be found in any other theatrical center of the world except possibly New York's Broadway and Forty-second street district. On Tuesday, August 31, Billie Burke hit the trail from New York to Los Angeles that had been recently trodden by De Wolf Hopper ten days before and by Weber and Fields on Saturday. It is said that the temperamental little star refused to travel to California in company with any other thespians, but insisted on having her own private car which Messrs. Kessel and Baumann obligingly gave her. That explains the delay in her departure from the Saturday to the Tuesday. Miss Burke's tiny pink ears are not to be annoyed by the coarse Dutch accents of Messrs. Weber and Fields out on the Coast, because all her filming will be done at Inceville, while "Joe" and "Lew" will at the same time go to work at Keystone where, Mack Sennett is preparing for them a third or fourth degree in camera play initiation.

Mary Boland, formerly John Drew's leading woman, and last season star in "My Lady's Dress," has meantime arrived in Inceville, where Mr. Ince is preparing to present her in a five-part crook drama. Bruce MacRae has also come on the scene there and his first appearance will be made as leading man with Bessie Barriscale.

At Griffithville the most recent accession is that of Paul Gilmore, the well-known romantic actor. Mr. Griffith has selected for him an intensely dramatic scenario, entitled "The Penitentes," and a great supporting cast, including Joseph Henabery and Josephine Crowell, who made big hits in "The Birth of a Nation," also Seena Owen, Irene Hunt, F. A. Turner, A. D. Sears, Harry Hamm and Edward Warren.

Great progress is being made on the dramatization of Sir Gilbert Parker's "Jordan Is a Hard Road," in which Frank Campeau will appear with Dorothy Gish, Owen Moore, Sarah Truax and Ralph Lewis. Helen Ware is still another recent accession and will be filmed in an emotional work typical of her most famous stage characters.

Almost hourly the staff of Mack Sennett's Keystone studio is increased. William Jerome and Vincent Bryan are the latest additions to the battery of scenario writers headed by Hampton Del Ruth. With immense industry, Frederick Palmer puts forth a daily press sheet, rivalling the press agents respectively of the Quadruple Entente and of Germany in the fecundity and originality of his efforts. Probably Mr. Sennett, in the acting department, has gathered together a greater collection of notable "comics" than any other comedy producer in the world.

Louis Gottschalk, by the way, is composing the thematic music which henceforth is to accompany all the Keystone comedies under Triangle egis. William Furst, the noted musical director, is still out there dividing his time between the three studios and seeing to it that all the music is completed and rehearsed before the pictures are shipped east.

Viola Dana

THE success of Viola Dana in the newer, "quiet" type of features will do its part, and an effective one, in helping to advance motion picture standards and art. Contrasted with the early plays bristling with fierce and rapid action, her plays—those in which she has starred—seem something of another clime. In the crude beginnings of the "silent" drama, it was held as a canon that to make an effective play there must be action—and more action. There are many today who still believe that the best picture is the one that holds the greatest amount of action — action in the purely physical sense. To those the Viola Dana features have been a revelation.

Viola Dana.

Strictly speaking, her plays, such as "On Dangerous Paths" and her latest, "The Slavey Student," are almost devoid of rapid action —the rapid action which gives an actor little opportunity to express himself or his personality—effaces it all in the melodramatic onrush of action. Instead, those plays typify the refining of the photoplay as the action is more mental, emotional, and requires a more refined art on the part of the player. In a word, Miss Dana's remarkable growth of screen popularity is a tribute to, and a triumph of, her personality and a genius for expressing it on the shadowy stage, overcoming the loss of the powerful aid of the spoken word.

In living up to, and surpassing, the super-reputation always gained by a child genius, evidenced in her country-wide sensation as the Broadway child star in "The Poor Little Rich Girl," and other plays, she has disproved, in at least her case, that infant prodigies do not always "peter out" as they grow to maturer years, as is generally believed because so many have failed to keep their genius.

RICHARD CARLE THE NEW PATHE STAR.

Richard Carle, who has been secured to star in the forthcoming Pathe Gold Rooster Play, "Mary's Lamb," produced by Donald Mackenzie, is easily one of the foremost figures on the American stage today. He was born in Somerville, Mass., making his first stage appearance with James F. Powers and Peter F. Dailey in "A Straight Tip." He made his first marked success in "The Lady Slavey." As a legitimate actor Mr. Carle won much notice as to the carpenter in Zangwill's "Children of the Ghetto." He made a hit on the London stage in "The Casino Girl," and retains his popularity in England to this day. Returning to this country he starred in his own musical comedies "The Mayor of Tokio," and "The Tenderfoot." In November, 1907, he appeared in his own comedy "Mary's Lamb," which is now being put into pictures. To show Mr. Carle's ability it is only necessary to say that for the last ten years he has been at the head of his own companies as star, and is the author of no fewer than ten musical comedies. The list comprises "Mam'selle 'Awkins," "The Storks," "The Tenderfoot," "The Maid and the Mummy," "The Mayor of Tokio," "The Spring Chicken," "Mary's Lamb," "The Hurdy Gurdy Girl," "The Boy and the Girl," and "Jumping Jupiter."

PERSONS BACK IN LOS ANGELES.

Thomas Persons, superintendent of the Selig Polyscope Company's Pacific Coast studios, has returned to Los Angeles to resume his duties after a pleasantly spent vacation in Chicago and New York City. Mr. Persons is enthusiastic over the outlook for productions in course of preparation at the Selig Pacific Coast studios. Not only are they preparing some magnificent spectacles, but forthcoming Selig picture plays in one, two and three reels will be above the average.

Horsley Signs New People

Jay Hunt Will Direct Three Reel Features—A New Horsley Brand for the Mutual, Starring Crane Wilbur.

JAY HUNT has been secured by David Horsley to direct the production of the three-reel features starring Crane Wilbur, the popular photoplayer, which Mr. Horsley will release on the Mutual program. Mr. Hunt is now at work on the first picture, "The Protest," which will be released September 29. He comes to the Horsley studios from Inceville, where for a long time he was associated with Thos. Ince in the production of pictures for the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

Jay Hunt.

Besides being recognized as an excellent director, Mr. Hunt is looked upon as one of the best character actors in motion pictures, a line of acting he followed many years on the speaking stage as well as in pictures. Mr. Hunt was born in Philadelphia. His early inclinations for life's work was to become a lawyer, but he abandoned this plan to be an artist, for which he believed himself particularly talented. He had high aspirations of seeing his canvases hung in the famous salons of the world, but never realized his ambition and succumbed to the glare of the footlights. His initial effort as an actor was with John Drew's company in Philadelphia. After an eventful career he deserted the spoken for the silent drama in June, 1910, when he became one of the staff of directors with the Vitagraph Company of America in their New York studio. In March, 1913, he joined the New York Motion Picture Corporation, which organization he leaves to join Mr. Horsley.

Crane Wilbur, the popular photoplay star, has been engaged for the leading parts in the new brand of three-reel features which Mr. Horsley is producing and which will be released through the Mutual program beginning September 29. Crane Wilbur is today one of the most popular players in pictures. He is an ideal type of leading man and as such has scored emphatic successes. His greatest hit was made in the Pathe serial, "The Perils of Pauline," in which he assumed the leading male role, playing opposite Pearl White. So signal had been his success that as soon as he had finished his season with Pathe he was engaged by the Lubin Company to play the leading male part in "The Road of Strife," a serial which is now running. In this, too, he scored a success, adding much to his already enviable reputation.

Crane Wilbur.

Mr. Wilbur was born in Athens, N. Y., and comes from a family of actors. He is a nephew of Wm. H. Crane and was at one time with one of his uncle's companies on a tour of the world.

His stage experience dates back to boyhood days. His first appearance was in London with Henry Irving in a production of "Robespierre." Afterward he played a number of parts in important productions in England, and then returned to America, where he became a member of Mrs. Fiske's famous Manhattan Company, with which organization he remained for a long time. Following his engagement with Mrs. Fiske Mr. Wilbur played leading roles in American successes and it was his work in these plays that brought him to the attention of motion picture producers.

Mr. Wilbur's first appearance in a David Horsley picture will be made September 29 when "The Protest," the initial release of Mr. Horsley's new brand of three reelers (the name of which will be announced later), is released. In this picture he plays the part of a young district attorney—a part in which his ability is given wide scope. Mr. Wilbur will be supported by a cast of well-known players.

The acquisition of Mr. Hunt and Mr. Wilbur, as director and leading man, respectively, indicates the standard Mr. Horsley's latest brand will set.

Arthur Momand's Cartoons

RIGHT away a guy gets conspicuous—next thing you know he's in the moving pictures. That is what happened to Mr. McGinnis and his whole family in the daily cartoon extravaganza "Keeping Up with the Joneses." So it is that this comic, which graces the pages of a big string of American dailies, is to appear on the Mutual Film Corporation's $8,000,000 program.

Arrangements have been completed with "Pop," father of the series, to put it into animated cartoons for release on the Mutual program. The Joneses matter will be animated by Harry Palmer, cartoonist for the Gaumont Company. Five hundred feet a week of this subject will be released on a split reel carrying an equal footage of "Seeing America First."

Arthur Momand.

"Pop," as he signs his cartoons in the Associated Newspapers, is Arthur R. Momand, a newspaper artist of high repute. Mr. Momand was born in California along in 1888, before it became the fashion to brag about the climate down at San Diego. Shortly thereafter he brought his parents to New York. A few years later he was about to matriculate at Princeton when an editor got in the way and gave him a job. This was Henry Grant Dart, then art editor of the New York World. Mr. Momand stayed with the World seven years, there gaining a name as the maker of various series including "Mr. I. N. Dutch."

Next Mr. Momand appeared on the staff of the Evening Telegram, where he created the series "Pazzaza." Success encouraged Mr. Momand to go abroad for study. He spent a year at the Julian Academy and there evolved his most human series of them all, "Keeping Up with the Joneses." This series is now running in about 150 daily newspapers in the United States and Canada. It deals in the most cheerful sort of way with the most intimate foibles of American family life. But why analyze and be serious. Look at it and laugh.

MOROSCO SIGNS DAL CLAWSON.

The Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company has secured the services of Dal Clawson, the celebrated camera man, to take entire charge of all camera work in Morosco productions.

Dal Clawson's work in taking the now famous "Hypocrites," "Captain Courtesy" and other sensational features noted for particularly beautiful photography put the biggest producers in the country on his trail, and Oliver Morosco had to outbid at one time or another practically the entire field.

Efficiency in Directors

Director Heffron of the Selig Staff Throws Some Light on the Subject.

T. N. HEFFRON, director of Selig Red Seal plays at the Selig studios in Chicago, Ill., has stepped to the home plate with a reply to an article recently appearing in many publications on the subject of the alleged loss of time and the waste in motion picture studios and for which alleged conditions, according to the article, the director of motion pictures is responsible.

"The appalling wastage noted by Harry Riechenbach during his recent visit to several Los Angeles motion picture studios, and which he attributes to the indifference of directors might be corrected by such an efficiency expert as he has in mind, and it might not," asserts Mr. Heffron.

"If the conditions he mentions there are general there soon will be no need of efficiency men, directors, or any other devotees of the film industry. A director who photographs but forty-five feet of film in nine hours would require a month to complete a thousand-foot subject. This would be scarcely sufficient speed to meet present demands for films. But I cannot believe the 'noted director' quoted represents a class. I rather believe he is an isolated instance.

"The majority of directors I have been associated with make it a regular practice to complete a thousand feet of film in less than a week and I personally have turned out five and six reel subjects in three weeks; in fact, my average for features, and I have perhaps made as many as any other feature director, has been less than three weeks. These conditions prevailed at every studio where I was a director.

"Efficient directors are not careless or indifferent, and if they spend hours in rehearsing a 'simple scene' they are probably striving for something that is worth all the time and effort expended, even though it might not so appear to the casual observer who knows nothing about the relative importance of that 'simple scene.' I know a dramatic producer who spent an entire week rehearsing a single scene in a play and then cut it out; he is regarded as America's greatest producer.

"For all the responsibility that accompanies directorship, I am inclined to believe that blame overshadows the praise. The director is often given a weak story and blamed for not making it strong. He is blamed for using indifferent actors and actresses when others cannot be conveniently had. He is blamed for not taking scenes under improper weather conditions, and blamed when he does take them. In fact, the director comes in for all the blame of a bad or an indifferent film by every one except those who know the conditions under which directors have to work. Thank goodness there are those who really know and understand because they have acquired their knowledge by diligent application and keen observation.

"Since I have been a motion picture director I have virtually employed the same methods as I did as a producer and stock director, and have found that they meet with practically the same response.

"After getting a scenario, if I do not write it myself, I revamp and alter it to meet my views, select the cast, and have a reading rehearsal at which every one makes pencil memoranda of each scene he appears in. I tell each in the cast how to dress the part and personally inspect all wardrobe. I then have a conference with the mechanical heads of departments, giving property list to the property man, designating kind and periods of furniture and decorations, a scenic plot to the carpenter and scenic artist, and the light plot to the electrician. I then commence taking exterior scenes in order to give the studio heads a chance to prepare the interior sets for the following day and I work as systematically as is possible for a motion picture director to work. Every one concerned knows what is to be done the following day, and often several days ahead, and I am sure there are many directors who do likewise. As can be seen, when a scenario is received work is commenced on it immediately. Sets are called for a day ahead, actors are engaged and get their wardrobe a day ahead, exterior locations are secured a day ahead; in fact, almost everything is done a day ahead. A stock producer with his working staffs and artists have an entire week of preparation and all concerned in such productions have all the way from six weeks to six months and yet the same results are expected of a picture director as a dramatic director and the latter is not harassed with 'hurry, hurry, hurry.'

"The 'fit from flit to flit' custom so popular in California must have come into vogue since I left there. Every first-class director that I know of finishes one location before going to another and I cannot conceive of a real director doing otherwise. As to taking the scenes in consecutive order, that would certainly mean the consumption of appalling wastage, if it were religiously observed. Scene one may be an interior and scene two may be located perhaps many miles from the studio. In order to take the scenes consecutively one would be obliged to jump from the interior to the exterior with perhaps several changes in wardrobe. If the actor wears the same clothing in, say, scenes one, five, eleven and twenty-five, with same location, the knowing director, in order to save time, makes the scenes in that order.

"If an efficient director is given a good scenario he evolves an excellent film from it, and if given a bad story he occasionally makes a good film of it, but I do not know of a single instance where an efficient director has made a bad film out of a good scenario. That prerogative belongs to the cutter."

Victor Moore to Become Lasky Star

VICTOR MOORE, one of the leading comedians of the legitimate and vaudeville stage for the past ten years, and who was the star of several seasons in George M. Cohan's comedy, "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," has decided to forsake the legitimate and vaudeville for a period of years, at an enormous salary to appear exclusively in Paramount Pictures produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

Victor Moore.

In this important engagement is seen a specific instance of the trend of affairs theatrical into new channels. Many managers of the legitimate stage have held firmly against the photoplay invasion and have refused to permit their stars to appear in photoplay productions during the life of their contract. But the advance and transition was not to be denied until with Mr. Moore's engagement the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company establishes a precedent with so important a star in holding him exclusively.

At the same time, Mr. Moore's engagement is announced, plans for a series of "Chimmie Fadden" photo-comedies are declareed completed by the Lasky Company. Mr. Moore's first appearance on the screen was in the Paramount picture, "Snobs," produced by Lasky, followed by a picturization of E. W. Townsend's "Chimmie Fadden." By his work in this latter production Mr. Moore stamped himself at once as a comedian of exceptional talents. His next Paramount release will be "Chimmie Fadden Out West," the second of the series of "Chimmie" comedies produced under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille.

CAMPBELL MacCULLOCH WITH TRIANGLE.

The many newspaper and professional friends of Campbell MacCulloch will be pleased to learn that he has been appointed national publicity manager of the Triangle Film Corporation. He will make his headquarters with Henry MacMahon, the general press representative, in the Longacre Building, New York City. Mr. MacCulloch will have supervisory charge of questions of national publicity. He will originate ideas.

MacCulloch and MacMahon worked together on the Morning Telegraph fourteen years ago. The Scotchman was later appointed general press representative of the Liebler theatrical productions, a position in which he made great success as a publicity promoter of such stars as Eleanor Robson and Viola Allen and such plays as "Salomy Jane," "Mrs. Wiggs," "In the Palace of the King," "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," etc. Subsequently, Mr. MacCulloch transferred his activities to the editorial department of the Century Magazine, where he again demonstrated his fitness to handle literary and artistic subjects. Of recent years he has not been active in press affairs except as New York correspondent of a Boston newspaper.

New Essanay Studio

Plans Prepared for Mammoth Structure on Argyle Street, Chicago—Now Using Tents.

THE Essanay company has drawn plans for what probably will be the largest indoor photoplay studio. Ground will be broken for the new studio about the middle of September, as soon as the temporary building, which was built for the taking of scenes in Essanay's six-act photoplay, "In the Palace of the King," written by F. Marion Crawford, is torn down.

The studio will be three hundred and fifty feet in length and one hundred and seventy-five in width, occupying a total floor space of 61,250 square feet. Its estimated cost is $150,000.

The building will be a two-story brick structure and will be a material addition to the two studios located on Argyle street, Chicago. The entire lower story will be used as a studio, while the upper floor will be utilized for the offices of directors and assistants and other officials of the company.

The offices on the second floor of the old building will be given over entirely to dressing rooms for the increasing number of actors Essanay is now engaging. The two studios now at Chicago will be continued in use for the production of pictures, the company needing all the floor space available.

Since increasing the number of weekly releases to eleven reels, exclusive of the Chaplin comedies and the V-L-S-E multiple reel features, Essanay has been considerably cramped for indoor studio space. The extra features have entailed the engagement of a larger force of actors and directors as well as officials. In taking "In the Palace of the King," in which five thousand persons were engaged, it was necessary to put up four large tents on the Essanay grounds for dressing-room purposes. With all the costuming in this great spectacular production even this was found inadequate. Consequently it was decided to rush work on the new building at once.

An elaborate system of artificial lighting has been arranged so that Essanay will at no time be dependent on weather conditions for taking its indoor scenes.

Philip Kauffman

ONE of the youngest of the Exchange Managers of Canada—a man who has nevertheless accomplished great things in the Dominion—is Philip Kauffman, general manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Limited, with headquarters at Toronto.

Philip Kauffman.

Mr. Kauffman started in business with the Allens in 1909 at Brantford, Ont. After about a year he was transferred West; opened the Vancouver office and handled the sales company output. In 1910 he went to Manila; opened an office and after six months sold out, returning to Canada, via China, India and Europe.

On Mr. Kauffman's return he was given charge of the Toronto office and later opened the Montreal and St. John office. He was appointed general manager of Eastern Canada for the Canadian Films Company, under which name the Allens were then operating.

Mr. Kauffman assisted in obtaining an exclusive franchise for Universal films for Canada for his company. After three years of successful handling, the firm sold their exchanges to the Universal Film Company. The Allens re-entered the field with Famous and Lasky and Bosworth productions, and Mr. Kauffman as general manager has built up the largest feature film business in Canada.

Many young men in Canada have been given their start in the film business by Mr. Kauffman and are still holding important positions. Despite his vast experience he is still a young man and is the best booster for Famous, Lasky and Bosworth films.

"Pokes and Jabbs"

BEFORE Louis Burnstein, general manager, and "Bobbie" Burns and "Walt" Stull, the comedians, decided to organize the Wizard Motion Pictures Corporation for the production of comedies, they conducted an investigation of moving picture theaters to discover what sort of motion picture comedy is in greatest demand. From their observations they determined that the public wants clean, original, snappy slap-stick with enough of a story and situations which appeal to the intelligent as well as the uneducated. In the few months of its existence as a comedy producing company, which releases through the World Film Corporation, the Wizard Company have carried out their determination to make good comedy by producing twelve one-reel pictures in which Mr. Burns and Mr. Stull have themselves featured as "Pokes and Jabbs," two distinctively funny comedians with their own methods of making laughs.

"Bobbie" Burns.

"Walt" Stull.

"Pokes and Jabbs" are two henpecks, and the Wizard series, which pictures the antics of the two men, received its name in a peculiar manner. Mr. Burnstein was saying, "We want to get a name for these pictures which will show that there are a lot of pokes and jabs in it," and one of the men who heard him spoke up and answered, "That's the very name you want—Pokes and Jabbs." So "Pokes and Jabbs" is what Burns and Stull will remain throughout the pictures. Mr. Burns, who is a well-trained acrobat, and played with "The Wizard of Oz," "Babes in Toyland," "The Follies of 1909-1910" at the Hippodrome, and in many pictures, has adopted a peculiar make-up and funny clothes which make him very distinctive, as has Mr. Stull. "Pokes and Jabbs" in "Midnight Prowlers" is the latest of the series.

FEATURING THE STARS.

"The House of the Photoplayer" is the title that is being given the Victoria theater, of Rochester, N. Y. This is due to the fact that Booking Manager John J. Farren has been making a feature of the personal appearance of the photoplay stars whenever it has been possible for him to obtain the services of one. To date he has played Francis X. Bushman, Miss Florence Turner (last appearance in this country), Crane Wilbur, Jimmie Morrison and Tom Powers, Vitagraph Company; Miss Edith Storey, Vitagraph Company; Earl Williams, Vitagraph Company; Bill Bailey and a number of others. Manager Farren would be more than pleased to hear from any photoplayers who would like to fill in a three days' sojourn in Rochester and can guarantee them a pleasant engagement and the best of treatment. He gives as reference any of the above players. Manager Farren is a member of the Screen Club and a "good fellow." Richester is a very nice city in which to spend a vacation, so if you have a few days open, you photoplayers, it would be well to consider Brother Screener Farren's proposition.

WARWICK PLAYS A GENTLEMANLY VILLAIN.

World Film will shortly present Robert Warwick in a Capellani production called "The Flash of an Emerald." Robert Warwick plays a character which is officially described as a "social vulture," preying on his friends and diverting suspicion by his "gentlemanly graciousness." At the end of the play when Lucien Waldeck (that's the gentlemanly villain's name), is revealed as the thief, of the enormously valuable emerald, he commits suicide.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

EXHIBITOR PAYS CENSORSHIP BILLS.

That Is the Conclusion Reached by Secretary Concannon, of the Kansas League—Appeals for Resistance.

SECRETARY P. J. CONCANNON, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kansas, addresses a letter to the Moving Picture World in which he reviews the work of the Kansas Censorship Board and points out how the cost of the law under which the board was brought into existence has been shifted upon the backs of the exhibitors of that state. This and other burdens have made the business of exhibiting pictures in Kansas a precarious occupation. That it is up to the exhibitors of the state to remedy this condition is made plain by Secretary Concannon in his letter which is published here in full:

"Emporia, Kansas, August 28, 1915.

"Gentlemen: In regard to the censorship laws now in force in the state of Kansas: This law was enacted by the legislature of 1913-14, held up by an injunction, and finally decided by the United States Supreme Court as constitutional.

"The law, on the face of it, is supposed to be for the public welfare and morality, but in fact is a revenue measure pure and simple. In the first four months this law has been in force, the state has collected about $4,400, with a paid out expense of $700, thus leaving $3,700 net to the state. To this $4,400 will have to be added another $4,400 as expense for having film censored. I have talked with most of the film exchange managers of Kansas City and the lowest estimate I got from any of them was $1.75 per reel. Most of them placed it at $2.00, thus making the censorship cost $4.00 per reel.

"Now, who pays this? Some of the exchanges are charging the exhibitor ten cents per reel. Others are not. I want to say this to all exhibitors: You are paying the bill. No exchange can afford to pay such amounts out of their treasuries and give it to the exhibitor. The exchange is bound to shift this load on the exhibitor. One of the natural laws of modern business is, 'The ultimate consumer pays all costs and profits.' In this case it will not work. The exhibitor cannot make the patron of his house shoulder this extra burden. He cannot increase his admission price. Under the circumstances, he will have to dig it up out of his profits. At the present time, we are taxed on the value of our investment by state, county and city, licensed by United States and city, and now this added burden of censorship.

"If we bear this burden without resenting it in any manner, we will find when the legislature is in session the next time that this was only an entering wedge. The picture shows will be considered legitimate prey. Every legislator who goes to Topeka will have a pet bill before the house, presumably to guard the morals of the youth of the state, but in fact to get an easy position for some of their friends and produce revenue for the state.

"The remedy for all this trouble lies in the exhibitor's hands. He has the greatest and most powerful weapon in the state right at his command—the screen. Ninety per cent. of the exhibitors are prone to let things be as they are, or let someone else look after it. They expect the exchange or the league officers to look out for their interests.

"The film exchanges cannot do a thing in the way of having the present law repealed. The exhibitors of the state will have to ORGANIZE and make this fight themselves. The exchanges will do everything in their power and help the exhibitors in every possible manner.

"ORGANIZE and be in position before the next election to fight every candidate for a state office that is not with us, and work tooth and nail for the man that is with us. Throw politics to the winds. Work your screen in the interests of your business. Yours to win out,

"P. J. CONCANNON, Secretary."

Terry Ramsaye

New Publicity Man of the Mutual.

TERRY RAMSAYE is the new director of publicity for Mutual Corporation. He has set himself the task of editing and reconstructing "Reel Life," the Mutual's magazine, besides the general publicity work of the organization and the boosting of the new $8,000,000 Mutual program.

Mr. Ramsaye, he prefers to be called "Terry"—is widely known in the newspaper and publicity field. He has a newspaper record that begins out where the Buffalo grass is short and curly and runs east to Park Row. Among the spots he has touched in his busy career may be enumerated the Kansas City Star, Omaha Bee, St. Paul Pioneer-Press and Dispatch, Associated Press, Chicago American, Chicago Tribune, International News Service, Nelson Chesman Advertising Agency, Western Land Products Exhibit, Bell Telephone Company,—ad infinitum. Seventeen newspapers in all, and a lot of other work. He has been traveling eastward and upward all the way.

Terry Ramsaye.

Mr. Ramsaye admits that he came from Kansas, and that with ordinary luck and perseverence he will shortly be 30 years old. He has been a contributor to the magazines with a range of subjects from the heavy technical to the whipped cream school of literature. He has been up and down the line from cub reporter to managing editor to press agent.

EQUITABLE FIGHTS EMPLOYMENT AGENTS.

Upon the allegations of a number of actors and actresses employed as extras, the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation declares that it will lodge charges with the Commissioner of Licenses against certain employment agents who have been charging illegal fees for securing work for them. It is alleged that as much as seventy-five per cent. has been charged players for service which the law limits to five per cent.

To make the crusade more effective, the Equitable proposes to establish its own employment agency and will render service to those seeking employment, without cost. Invitations have been extended to other motion picture producing companies, requesting them to join in a movement to establish one central agency to serve all companies.

The law governing employment agencies is strict, and violations in the way of illegal fees is usually followed by the agent losing his license.

FROHMAN TO RELEASE THROUGH PATHE.

Pathe announces that the Frohman Amusement Corporation will, in the future, release its pictures through Pathe. This new alliance will be of great interest to the trade and give even greater strength to the Pathe program. The great resources of the Frohman Amusement Corporation in the way of valuable plays, etc., is too well known to require comment.

New Equitable Stars

Margarita Fischer Comes on from American and Charles J. Ross Breaks In.

MARGARITA FISCHER, known throughout filmdom by the popularity she achieved as star of American Beauty films, has been engaged by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation and under the direction of Harry A. Pollard, who has been directing Miss Fischer throughout her entire film career, will begin work within a few days in a five-reel production which will characterize the Equitable Program the latter part of November.

Miss Fischer, when the Mutual Masterpieces first came into being, was given the honor of being the star of the first roles. Her work in "The Quest" established her as an emotional actress of no mean calibre and so well was she received in "The Quest" that her other feature productions, "The Lonesome Heart," and "The Girl from His Town" were immediately sent over the Mutual Program. In preparation of her work with the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, Miss Fischer and her director Mr. Pollard have been searching the fictional markets for the past three weeks for suitable vehicles for her appearance, and it is now thought in a recent dramatic success.

Margarita Fischer.

Harry A. Pollard, who has been directing Miss Fischer for the past three years and one of the most competent and efficient directors in filmdon, will have complete charge of the company in which Miss Fischer will appear.

The Fischer productions will be made by Equitable at their Wizard studio at 310 West 52d street where a company is now being assembled to support the famous little star.

Another important acquisition to the Equitable roster of stars is Charles J. Ross, who will make his first appearance in an important screen production under the Equitable banner to be released late in October. The vehicle selected for Mr. Ross' appearance is an adaptation into screen form of the famous dramatic production, "The Senator," which was more than popular some years ago, both in New York and on tour.

Charles J. Ross.

Mr. Ross, recently completed a starring engagement at the Winter Garden, is resting up on his Jersey estate, Ross - Fenton Farm, and will come to New York September 5th to begin preparations for his studio work. Mr. Ross will work at the Flushing studio, either under director Culison or Ince, or at the Triumph studio under director Joseph Golden.

Robert Edeson, first seen in motion pictures in the Lasky production of "The Call of the North" and "Where the Trail Divides," is another Equitable star, having signed contracts with that concern this week calling for a number of productions. Mr. Edeson will devote four days a week to work at the Equitable studios.

Picture Hospital Fund Suggested

Movement to Establish Organization That Will Provide Hospital Treatment for Worthy Cases.

A MOVEMENT is on foot in the film trade to create a Motion Picture Hospital Fund, the chief object of which will be to secure proper medical treatment for those connected with the industry who may be incapacitated through illness or injury. While it is a fact that in practically all cases where a player is injured in the course of his work he is taken care of by his company it has been pointed out that many times players and especially employes working for small salaries are taken ill and have insufficient means to obtain prompt hospital attention. There are other cases where men or women out of employment are taken ill.

During the past week the subject has aroused attention in the trade centering around New York City following a letter sent out suggesting that contributions be forwarded to representatives of the Moving Picture World, the Dramatic Mirror, the Motion Picture News and the Morning Telegraph. The responses have been sufficient in number to indicate that in the project there is a substantial interest. A meeting of the temporary committee was held on Tuesday at the Screen Club. It was then decided to ask the newspapers named to receive subscriptions that may be sent to the Motion Picture Hospital Fund and to hold another meeting a week later, at which time such further steps might be taken as the circumstances would justify.

The sentiment developed at the meeting that it would be essential to place permanently in charge of the movement, should developments warrant a vigorous campaign, men who could command the confidence of the whole trade. One of the most prominent manufacturers has expressed his willingness to do what he can to further the fund and its objects, as an official or privately, and to contribute substantially.

The plan as outlined originally, and which of course is subject to such alteration as experience may indicate, does not contemplate the accumulation of a large fund, but rather to obtain sufficient money to enable the custodians of it to secure beds in hospitals for treatment of worthy cases. It was not intended that the scope should be limited to New York or its vicinity, but that it should include, for instance, Los Angeles, Jacksonville, etc.

Conducted along right lines and by responsible men it is the belief of the Moving Picture World that the Motion Picture Hospital Fund will merit the support of the industry.

ROY APPLEGATE WITH EQUITABLE.

Roy Applegate, who recently directed "All for a Girl" for the Mirograph Company, has joined the Equitable stock company to play the heavy parts. Mr. Applegate is well known in pictures. Through a coincidence his first experience in the pictures was with Isidor Bernstein, the general director of the Equitable, with the old Republic company in "Before Yorktown," and again, in Mr. Applegate's last engagement, Mr. Applegate is with Mr. Bernstein. After a time with the Republic company, Mr. Applegate went to Eclair and then to Lubin, where he was an associate director with Arthur Johnson. He left the pictures four years ago, and remained away until last year, when he returned to play Simon Legree in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." After that an engagement followed with the Life Photo Company, during which Mr. Applegate played with Lionel Barrymore and Cathrine Countess, prior to his engagement with the Equitable. "Life's Crucible" and "The Bludgeon" are the two pictures in which Mr. Applegate has worked, and which will be released through the World Film. The well known heavy is very tall and dark and is an excellent type for the character work for which he has been chosen.

MOSS THEATER IN BROOKLYN.

The Washington theater, situated at Forty-fourth street and Fifth avenue, Brooklyn, the newest and handsomest playhouse in the City of Churches, will throw open its doors the latter part of September. B. S. Moss, who controls the Regent, Hamilton, Jefferson, Eighty-sixth Street and Prospect theaters in New York City, will direct the policy of the new playhouse which will be conducted as a high-class motion picture theater, with prices ranging from ten to twenty-five cents. The Washington will seat 2,000.

PETE SCHMID'S BACK.

Pete Schmid, of Bosworth, is back from his vacation spent at Greenwood Lake. Pete came back weighing about fifteen pounds heavier, and while there purchased a mount which he says he will exercise in Central Park.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

National Theater Owners' Association Formed Behind Closed Doors.

THE second meeting of some of the prominent theater owners in the United States was held in the Hotel Sherman, August 25 and 26. The sessions were all held behind closed doors and the business transacted was withheld from the press with the exception of the following paragraphs, given out in typewriting:

"The theater owners at this adjourned meeting in the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, stayed in session August 25 and 26. They formed an organization to be known as the National Theater Owners' Association. The object of the association was agre ed on as being to advance in every possible way the interests of owners of theaters exhibiting motion pictures.

"The organization will in the beginning be governed by a board of trustees with not to exceed thirty members. This board will complete the organization plan."

The memers of the board of trustees appointed at the meeting were: Thomas Saxe, Milwaukee; E. Mandelbaum, Cleveland; J. H. Kunsky, Detroit; Wm. Sievers, St. Louis, and J. Ditmars, Louisville.

By-laws were drawn up, but will not be adopted until the next meeting.

The place and date of the next meeting will be set by the board of trustees.

The exhibitors present or represented at the meeting were: William Sievers, St. Louis, representing Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska; Tom H. Boland, Oklahoma City, representing Oklahoma; N. H. Gordon, Boston, representing the New England States; Thos. Saxe, Milwaukee, representing Wisconsin; Thos. Furniss, Duluth, representing Minnesota; J. H. Kunsky, Detroit, representing Michigan; E. Mandelbaum, Cleveland, representing Ohio and Western Pennsylvania; F. J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, representing Indiana; J. Ditmars, Louisville, representing Kentucky and Tennessee, and Turner & Dahnken, San Francisco, representing the Pacific Coast.

The following, who were present or represented at the first meeting, held in the Hotel Sherman several weeks ago, were not present or represented: J. E. Bryant, Waterloo, representing Northern and Western Iowa; E. H. Hulsey, Dallas, representing Texas; A. H. Blank, Des Moines, representing Central and Eastern Iowa; Aaron A. Jones, Chicago, representing Illinois; Tom Moore, Washington, D. C., representing Washington City and Virginia; J. Eugene Pearce, New Orleans, representing Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Arkansas and Louisiana; Max Spiegel, New York City, representing New York City; M. H. Mark, New York City, representing New York State, and H. A. Sims, representing Salt Lake City, Utah, Idaho and Wyoming.

Wm. H. Swanson, who owns important theaters in Salt Lake City, was in attendance and was permitted to give his views before those present, but was not admitted to participate in the deliberations of the body in session.

Chicago Film Brevities.

I regret very much that I chanced to be out of the office when my old friend, George U. Stevenson, called on Thursday, August 6. Mr. Stevenson returned to New York the following day. It has been gratifying for me to watch the pronounced success made by Mr. Stevenson in important positions in the publicity department of Universal. George was well and favorably known in Chicago for quite a number of years and left a host of friends behind him when he left for New York City.

Mr. and Mrs. Guy Mahoney, owners of the Palm theater in Missouri Valley, Ia., made a pleasant call on Wednesday, August 25. They arrived in this city Sunday, August 22, and spent four days enjoying the sights of the city and visiting the surrounding theaters. The Palm theater has a seating capacity of 250, and runs General Film service at five and ten cents admission. Mr. Mahoney was also interested in an airdome this summer. Stock and vaudeville were used in conjunction with pictures. The airdome has a seating capacity of 800 and an admission price of ten and twenty cents was charged. On account of the rainy weather the airdome in that part of the country had an unsuccessful season.

Wm. L. Merrill, owner of the United Film Exchange, Minneapolis, was in the city during the meeting of prominent theater owners at the Sherman House last week. He was on the lookout for certain moving picture subjects that were being shown in the city by several New Yorkers at the time.

J. M. Gusky, traveling representative for the Anti-Trust branch of Universal, in this city, has severed his connections in order to engage in the exhibition field. Mr. Gusky will henceforth manage the Crystal theater, Sturgis, Mich., beginning September 1. The Crystal at present seats 350 people, but Mr. Gusky has arranged to increase its capacity to 500. He had already contracted for programs consisting of the Paramount, Metro, Fox, the General Film Co., and Universal service. An admission of ten cents will be charged for programs of five and six reels. Mr. Gusky has been with the Anti-Trust branch in the capacity mentioned for over a year. He made many friends in the territory covered by him, which included Illinois, Indiana and Michigan. Mr. C. R. Plough, manager of the Anti-Trust, considered Mr. Gusky one of his most successful salesmen and was sorry to lose him. To the friends made by Mr. Gusky in the territory mentioned he takes this means of wishing them a hearty good-bye and to thank them for past courtesies. Mr. Gusky subscribed for the World and was loud in his praise of that publication.

Francis X. Bushman was seen in the city Wednesday, August 25, on his way from New York City to the Coast. Mr. Bushman informed me that he and the company surrounding him for the production of Quality features will proceed to the new Metro studio in New York City in about seven or eight weeks.

D. B. Maver, proprietor of the Pilsen theater, 3204 West Twenty-sixth street, this city, called last week at this office and subscribed for the World. The Pilsen seats 299 people, and charges an admission of five cents for five reels of General Film service. Mr. Maver stated that business has been good during the three weeks that he has been lessee of the house.

Among the expert artists who have been engaged by Essanay to take part in the production of "In the Palace of the King," is Mrs. Arend Van Vlissingen, who discovered and brought out Isidora Duncan, the world-famous classic danseuse. Mrs. Van Vlissingen, who is a past-master in terpsichorean art, was engaged specially to train the several hundred professional dancers who will appear in the beautiful court dance of the six-reel photoplay. Mrs. Van Vlissingen is widely known and her success in this country, in classic dances, has been long established. Another important fact was taken into consideration in the engagement of this lady, besides her recognized ability as an instructor. She was a close personal friend of F. Marion Crawford, who wrote "In the Palace of the King," and all his works are thoroughly familiar to her. A crack company of Essanay players is now working on "Robinson Crusoe," the story of which is known to every civilized boy and girl in the world, not to speak of adults. The filmed story will be in eight chapters, of one reel each.

While "Joseph and His Brethren" was being shown at a camp meeting, at New Lenox, Ill., by the Rev. James O'May of Aurora, one night last week, a big English bull dog entered into the action of the picture in a startling way. A meek sheep dog was trotting along behind the pictured "Joseph" and the bull dog, who chanced to be in the audience, dashed down the aisle with a growl and sprang at the screen. The press account stated that "Joseph" lost his dog and half a leg. The bull dog was captured and expelled ignominiously from the meeting.

Another act of vandalism, which is attributed to factional fights between rival moving picture operators, took place Friday, August 27. The Kimbark theater, 6240 Kimbark avenue, was the scene of the outrage. Five men in a swiftly moving automobile drove past the theatre and smashed the six plate glass doors in front of the house, with bricks. R. P. Roper, owner of the theater, stated that his operator, Gustave Kolbe, is a member of Local No. 157, of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and that the trouble must be due to the rivalry existing between it and another union organization of operators. The men who committed the depredation escaped.

The Chicago Tribune's German war pictures, taken by Edwin F. Weigle, Tribune war photographer, were given their first presentation at the Studebaker, Saturday, August 28. The Studebaker box office has given out that 10,000 people viewed the pictures during the day. Mr. Weigle gives an interesting lecture, recounting his experiences during the taking of the pictures. The Tribune-Russian war pictures, which had a memorable week's showing at the Studebaker, were transferred to the Midway Gardens, East 60th street and Cottage Grove avenue, where they are being viewed by vast audiences nightly. After their run at the Studebaker, the German war pictures will be transferred to the Bismarck Gardens, on the North Side.

The Marlowe theater, 63d and Stewart streets, has been leased by Plough, Connors & Koffman, Inc., for a term of years. This fine modern theater has been used by nearly every department in the amusement line, moving pictures included. Under the new regime it will be used for the presentation of high class feature photoplays.

"An Alien," adapted from "The Sign of the Road," a powerful playlet in which George Beban has starred for five years in the principal vaudeville theaters in this country and abroad, began a run at the Fine Arts theater on Saturday, August 28. This fine photodrama, directed by Thomas H. Ince, has been presented on Broadway, in New York, for fifteen consecutive weeks.

The Essanay Film Mfg. Co. will soon begin to build its third studio on the Essanay grounds at 1333 Argyle street, this city. The new studio will be 350 feet long by 175 feet wide, and will furnish room for three companies to engage in producing photoplays at the same time. It has been given out that the estimated cost will be about $150,000. The main structure of the new studio will be completed in sixty or ninety days.

It will be remembered that Universal took over the Williamson submarine pictures, which created a big sensation at the Studebaker and Fine Arts theaters in this city about eight months ago. It is now stated that Universal is at present financing the Williamsons during their production of another submarine picture. The Bahama Islands furnish the scene for the new eight-reel picture, which, it is said, will have a love story in it.

Tom North, Seattle manager of V-L-S-E, Inc., has originated a weekly publication, "The V-L-S-E Pals," for exhibitors in his territory, which includes Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho. Number 1, Vol. 1, was issued on August 14. The publication is of four pages, octavo size, and judging from the welcome given it by exhibitors, as shown by correspondence appearing in Number 2, Vol. 2, Mr. North has hit the nail squarely on the head. Mr. North, the editor, will present "a beautiful gold watch, suitably inscribed, to the lady or gentleman pal who submits the best idea for advertising a Big Four feature." One of the conditions is that every idea sumitted shall have been put in active operation by the originator. The contest will close Wednesday, December 15, and the decision will be announced in "The V-L-S-E Pals," in the issue of December 18.

Otis Harlan became reminiscent the other day and recalled several interesting incidents connected with his career in the Hoyt plays. He referred to the success of the old song, "Razzle Dazzle," which was written by William Barton, and which he sang in "A Brass Monkey." Barton was so pleased with Harlan's popularity in this song that he made him a present of "The Wild Man of Borneo," another famous old-time song hit. Each of these songs made a fortune and both were widly encored in the Hoyt productions. The original "Razzle Dazzle" Quartet included Otis Harlan, Tim Murphy and William F. Mack. Otis Harlan will shortly be seen on the screen in the character of Goodrich Mudd, in Selig's Red Seal photoplay, "A Black Sheep."

Sheridan in Kleine's " The Money Master"

ONE of the most important and interesting of recent screen acquisitions is Mr. Frank Sheridan who makes his premier film appearance in George Kleine's "The Money Master."

Described by the dean of American critics, William Winter, as "The American Coquelin," Mr. Sheridan brings to "The Money Master" a rare personality, an extraordinary experience and an intuitive knowledge of the camera not always found in the upper realms of theatrical stardom. In other words, Mr. Sheridan "gets over" and gets over so thoroughly and satisfactorily that one cannot soon forget his striking portraiture of the hardened, forceful, ruthless money king. It is one of those deft, artistic character portrayals seldom seen and long remembered.

Frank Sheridan.

Those who are familiar personally with Mr. Sheridan know him to be possessed of the attributes of the average giant. Managers in their search of types and the faithful portrayal of certain roles have been wont in recent years to stretch the size of the characters so long as Mr. Sheridan could portray their types. Probably the most noted of these, as far as popular success is concerned, was the character of Captain Williams in "Paid in Full."

Many of those who witnessed "The Boss," in which Mr. Holbrook Blinn starred, will remember Mr. Sheridan in the role of the rough but kindly God-fearing archbishop. Another of the characters created by Mr. Sheridan was that of Larry McCarty in "The Unwritten Law."

Mr. Sheridan surpassed, however, the popularity of any of these characters in his portrayal of the trainer in "Wildfire," when he appeared in the support of Lillian Russell a few years ago in her Coast to Coast tour. Last season Mr. Sheridan was the suave, aesthetic John Brandt in the all-star cast of "Fine Feathers," and prior to that he impersonated the gutteral-voiced, pipe-smoking Captain Hatch in "The Bird of Paradise."

JENNET WORTH RUSTICATING IN CATSKILLS.

Miss Jennet Worth, prominent character woman of the Rolph Players, has been enjoying a month of rest and recreation at the Glenbrook, Shandaken village, in the Catskill mountains. Trying to prove that a frisky calf had upper teeth gave her a few exciting moments that would have gone well in a picture comedy. The farmer came to her rescue and she doesn't know yet about those uppers.

BROOKS JOINS NORTH AMERICAN.

Edgar O. Brooks, well-known film man, has succeeded L. L. Beaudry as Greater New York representative of the North American Film Corporation. He will have the placing of the famous serial, "The Diamond from the Sky," in the territory named.

LOS ANGELES LETTER

Fine Arts Activities.

THE Fine Arts Films studio, D. W. Griffith's big plant at 4500 Sunset Boulevard, formerly known as the Majestic-Reliance studios, is the scene of great activity. Fine Arts Films designate the name selected for the two dollar Triangle picture plays now being produced under the general supervision of Mr. Griffith. Seven of these film productions, starring well-known players, are now under way. A new stage has been recently completed. It measures 190 feet in length and 70 feet in width and possesses many unique features including a new diffuser system. The camera department, which is stated to represent an investment of $50,000, is in charge of G. W. Bitzer, who photographed "The Birth of a Nation."

One of the more pretentious of the coming Fine Arts productions is "Jordan Is a Hard Road," a film adaptation from Sir Gilbert Parker's popular novel. The principals in the cast are Dorothy Gish, Frank Campeau, Sarah Truax, Owen Moore, Ralph Lewis and Walter Long. The scenes are laid in Canada, and in order to secure a true atmosphere, a complete Canadian village is being constructed. Another notable production is "The Sable Lorcha," a picturization from Horace Hazeltine's novel, featuring Tully Marshall and Thomas Jefferson. One hundred Chinamen were secured from San Francisco's Chinatown to take part in this picture. They were brought down to Los Angeles in a special train under the supervision of a government official. Other Fine Arts Films now being produced are "The Man and the Test," starring Douglas Fairbanks; "The Lily and the Rose," featuring Lillian Gish, Rozsika Dolly and Wilfred Lucas; "The Martyrs of the Alamo," with Sam de Grasse, Walter Long, A. D. Sears, Alfred Paget, Augustus Carney, Juanita Hanson and Ora Carew in the cast; "Old Heidelberg," a picturization of the play, which Richard Mansfield made famous fifteen years ago, featuring Dorothy Gish and Wallace Reid, and finally "The Scarlet Band," from the story by Robert M. Baker and John Emerson, the principal part to be played by John Emerson, the author, supported by Bessie Love, Spottiswoode Aitken, W. E. Lawrence and other well-known players.

A recent addition to the Griffith forces is the distinguished comic opera star De Wolf Hopper, who has been engaged, it is stated, for a year at the salary of $125,000. Mr. Hopper will arrive at the Fine Arts studios in the early part of September. He will be starred in picture versions of his operatic successes, and the first will probably be "Don Quixote," to be followed by "Wang," "Panjandrum," "Merry Wives of Windsor," "Robert Macaire" and some of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas.

Forty-two leading stars have now been engaged by the Griffith-Sennett-Ince Triangle combination and it is probable that they will engage as many more within the next few months. These stars will be supported by the leading principals of the respective Los Angeles studios.

W. H. Clune Now a Producer.

As briefly stated in last week's letter, W. H. Clune, the Los Angeles exhibitor, has entered the manufacturing field and purchased the old Famous Players studio, located at Bronson and Melrose avenues.

Lloyd Brown, manager of Clune's Auditorium theater, has been appointed general manager of this new enterprise. In charge of production is Donald Crisp, well known as leading man and director with Biograph, Griffith and Famous Players.

In an interview with a representative of this paper Mr. Brown stated that the phenomenal success of "The Clansman" at the Auditorium theatre had clearly demonstrated the value of big feature productions in large houses. The supply of these large productions was not in proportion to the demand, and Mr. Brown stated that he had been trying for some time to secure a worthy successor to Griffith's wonderful photodrama. He had not been successful, so therefore, after careful consideration of the matter, Mr. Clune and Mr. Brown had decided to enter the manufacturing field and produce large feature plays, with the principal object in view to supply their own chain of theaters.

"Ramona," the well-known story by Helen Hunt Jackson, is the first subject to be produced, and Director Crisp is already at work selecting the cast. The picture will be made in twelve reels; a prologue in four reels and two acts of four reels each. Considerable money will be expended on this production.

As a means to an end, the end being publicity, one of the larger Los Angeles hotels is planning to pull off a photoplayers' supper dance, at which many of the biggest stars are supposed to be present. During the past few months many concerns have taken advantage of Los Angeles players by using their pictures, names, and influence in bringing business to their door.

The San Diego exposition officials are planning to pull off a Movie Day at their fair. The men at San Francisco certainly made a grand success of their picture day.

The Screen Club, much heralded organization of publicity men and magazine writers, held a meeting the other night in Jahnke's Tavern. The club will be completely resurrected and more members taken in and a regular program arranged.

Al Jennings, ex-bandit, who produced the story "Beating Back," telling of his experiences as a highwayman, has been signed by the Mutual to supervise scenes for the train and bank robberies in the picture "Jordan Is a Hard Road," by Sir Gilbert Parker, scenarioized by Mary H. O'Connor.

"Where is your club?" has been asked local picture actors so many times of late by traveling and newly arriving actors that the film capital men have urged Fred Mace, of the Keystone, who fathered the original and very successful Photoplayers' Club, to call a straw vote to ascertain whether the representative men in the industry today would like to form a new club and put it on a sound basis. It is Mace's idea to select a secretary from the film industry and place him in charge, on a salary. Formerly the manager, who was the steward and chief about the club, was a disinterested outsider. Mace believes that if a competent secretary is in charge there will be no chance for any irregularities. The membership will be limited to those actually interested in the great film-making business.

To censor the scenarios instead of the films is proposed by Mrs. Earl Rogers, of the Los Angeles board of censors. Her husband, Attorney Earl Rogers, is preparing a draft for a new ordinance, but nothing definite has been announced as yet.

tion of seven installments to this great continued photo novel will mean much to the program. Emerson Hough, the author, and his agent, Seth Mayde, spent some time with the producer in discussing the stories for the seven new pictures. A conference was held with the principals, author, and producer, which sounded the start of the continuation of the pictures.

Frank Reicher, director of the Lasky Co., has finished "The Secret Sin," starring Blanche Sweet. He will next begin

Weber and Fields, the famous comedians, are expected at the Keystone studios within the next week.

Eddie Foy and Jean Schwartz at the Keystone Studio.

George H. Melford is starting this week the production of "The Red Mirage," a story of Algeria and the Foreign Legion. Lou Tellegen is being starred in this coming Lasky feature, with the able support of Theodore Roberts, James Neill, Dorothy Davenport and Tom Forman. To get a true atmosphere to some of the scenes that are supposed to take place in the Sahara Desert, the entire company of fifty people, with eight camels, twenty horses and many pack burros, will go down to the Imperial Valley. Near the little town of Indio is a dried-out lake, 300 feet below the sea level, which will give a most realistic setting to these desert scenes. Water will be carried in true desert fashion in bags of sheep skin.

Henry Otto has completely recovered from his nervous breakdown.

The International Film and Producing Company, with offices at 309 Bumiller Building, Los Angeles, has taken over the old Kalem studio at Santa Monica and is rebuilding the place preparatory to making Pathe comedies. Charles P. Hollingsworth is the general superintendent, T. W. Geary is the general manager, E. Martin is the publicity man, Frank Shaw is the director, and Will H. White is the cameraman. Scenarios will be sent from New York. The players have not yet been selected, but Mr. Geary promises some new material for the International comedies. Extensive improvements are being made and in a week the camera will be turning on one of the finest little studios in the film center.

At the Vitagraph, Dave Smith is putting over a good one, "Nobody at Home," which, as the title implies, is a comedy. It is by Edwin Ray Coffin, and, in spite of the name, is a real live story which features the Triangle of Georges—Kungel, Holt and Stanley. Anne Schaefer is the woman in the story.

Dragged to the top of a mast on a ship in Los Angeles harbor and thrown eighty-five feet to the sea below was the exciting and painful experience of Bruce Randall, one of Balboa's Pathe actors. The scenes were made during a mutiny on board the vessel and a great fight is featured in the picture, which is one installment of the "Neal of the Navy" series. Randall sustained minor injuries when he struck the water. Lillian Lorraine and William Courtleigh, Jr., play the leads in this picture, which is directed by Harry Harvey.

Director Ulysses Davis, who has made many feature pictures, besides a whole shelf of one-reelers for the Vitagraph, has resigned and will take a vacation touring the southland before engaging another position.

Paul Powell, directing "The Lily and the Rose," a Fine Arts film, has gone with his company to San Diego to get some appropriate settings.

* * *

G. M. Anderson, known on the curtain as Broncho Billy, was in town this week. He dropped down from San Francisco Tuesday and returned on the following day. He said he came just to see what was going on. Charlie Chaplin and Jesse J. Robbins met him at the depot and escorted him to the Essanay studio on the mountain top.

* * *

Beverly Bayne will soon be working at the Quality studio, and is probably by this time already en route to the film center. Francis X. Bushman arrived home again and is finishing "Pennington's Choice," under the direction of W. J. Bowman. Another company will probably be put on in a short time.

Kenneth McGaffey, publicity man for the Lasky forces, has gone to San Francisco to see Miss Anita King, the Paramount-Lasky automobile girl, off from the exposition city. She drove the whole distance from here north in record time.

* * *

No sooner had daybreak showed the ruins at Inceville where the fire galloped away with the paint and carpenter shop than Thomas H. Ince was on the job giving directions for the rebuilding of the several structures that were destroyed. They will be rebuilt on a larger scale.

Pathe has scored again. This time the weekly cameraman, who is always before the hour with his camera, took pictures of an operation in the local county hospital. This is the first time that such a performance has been made here and the most prominent surgeons showed much interest by attending the operation. It was the saving of a little girl's life by the grafting of skin from adults. Mr. Buffum secured some fine photographs which will be included on the regular weekly news reel. The doctors said it was somewhat ahead of the times, and was exceptionally educational.

Sam Spedon, head of Vitagraph's publicity bureau, shook the dust of Los Angeles from his shoes last Monday and trekked across the sands of our desert locations bound for New York. He said, before he departed, that he was going to advocate moving East Fifteenth street and Locust avenue out here and place them on about twenty acres of good land. Well, we wish he would do it. Everyone was sorry to see him leave.

* * *

H. Pathe Lehrman, head of the L-K-O, has put on another company. This is a "Kid" outfit and has as its leading players Little Billy Jacobs and Olive Johnson.

Myrtle Gonzalez, who is being featured in Vitagraph's current Blue Ribbon release, "The Chalice of Courage," by Cyrus Townsend Brady, has resigned from the western branch of the big concern and is enjoying a vacation in her motor before signing with another company. Alfred Vosburgh has also left the local Vitagraph for another company.

The midsummer dancing championship to be decided in a few days at one of the country clubs is arousing much interest in that there will be on the floor many couples, a majority being from filmland. Among the artists who will hop for the great $200 cup are Wallie Reid, George Larkin, H. Pathe Lehrman and Ford Sterling.

Helen Holmes, formerly the hazardous railroad girl of Kalem fame, has taken up her duties at the Big U plant, where she is appearing in a feature picture.

Hal E. Roach, directing Pathe comedies at the Rolin Film studio, is putting on the tenth number of the "Lonesome Luke" serial, which is a sure enough fun picture. In this film he uses the interior of a shoe store. The two leading players are Bebe Daniels and Harold Lloyd. Harry Pollard has swung over to this place from the Essanay.

* * *

At the Kalem studio James Horne is finishing a two-reel Chinese drama. The sets are magnificent and details are good.

* * *

The Morosco Company has put on another company, with Jack Clark at the helm and Blanche Ring featured. The first story is "The Yankee Girl." Page Peters has joined this firm and is now at work here.

Kenneth A. O'Hara, Ince's crack publicity man, has been laid up at home with a siege of la grippe, but he was able to attend to his duties after three days under the care of a doctor.

* * *

While doing some fire scenes at the Glendale Kalem studios last week, Tony Murchison, one of the actors, was badly burned about the face and hands. Fortunately, he was not seriously injured, although it took a doctor and several feet of bandages to fix him up.

Last week a trio of robbers held up a bank on one side of the city. While a posse of police and citizens chased them in automobiles, people along the streets ran out on hearing the shots, but smiled and returned inside laughing and thinking they had seen a thrilling scene made for the pictures. But imagine their surprise when they read scare heads in the papers telling of the rich haul and escape of the bandits.

"Pop" Hoadley is here. He rolled into town and hung his hat up at a hotel saying that, as he had seen the country from the train, he was already satisfied to find a bunaglow with a permanent hatrack. That's his impression of the film town. He is tapping out scenarios for Burton King at Selig's. King has joined the company to finish the "Bloom Center" jay series which Marshal Neilan left unfinished when he jumped over to the Famous Players. "Pop" says "after a ride in a flivver around the country I see that they raise more stuff hereabouts than the whole durned state of Connecticut, and that's going some!"

The Worthington company of Universalites have returned from a long trip to Catalina Island, where they "did some water stuff." Herbert Rawlinson did wonderful athletic stunts while playing on the beach.

George Kann, secretary of the Universal Company, arrived Sunday at the City to pay it a visit. He is on a vacation and this was the logical place for him to come. He will see the expositions and return later to New York.

* * *

Don Meaney, manager of productions at the Quality studio, advertised this week for one hundred men to work in a stock exchange scene, and when he came to the studio at 8 o'clock there were two thousand men crowding the street to get in.

* * *

C. F. Croxall has bought the Apollo theater, located at 4821 Vermont avenue. The Apollo has a seating capacity of seven hundred, and is one of the largest and best equipped of the suburban houses. General service and V-L-S-E features are used. Admission, five cents for children and ten cents for adults.

George Eastman, president of the Eastman Kodak Co., will make a short stopover in the city on the 25th, on his way to the San Diego Fair.

* * *

Pedro de Cordoba, who played opposite Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," has been engaged as leading man at the Greek theater in Berkley.

Blanche Ring begins her first picture with the Morosco Photoplay Co. being starred in "The Yankee Girl," a coming feature production.

George Ade is in the city writing fables and scenarios when otherwise not occupied. Emerson Hough is also here looking over the film situation.

TOURNEUR'S NEXT "A BUTTERFLY ON THE WHEEL."

Maurice Tourneur has finished Frederic Arnold Kummer's play, "The Ivory Snuff Box," which will be released by the World Film September 13. It was no easy matter to find a play that would satisfy Mr. Tourneur's artistic requirements. Many plays were examined and refused, but finally Mr. Tourneur decided that in the famous English society play, "A Butterfly on the Wheel," he had a story worthy of his attention. Who the star will be has not as yet been decided, but exhibitors know that Mr. Tourneur can be trusted to pick a company that will get every ounce of value out of their work.

New Studio at Universal City

Increase of Producing Facilities Required to Keep Up with Demand.

UNIVERSAL CITY is still suffering from growing pains. Despite the fact that the only moving picture municipality in the world now has the largest stage, the Universal has found it impossible to work all its companies in the two and a half acres of stage space now provided.

Accordingly, steel workers are putting up another glass and steel studio, 500 feet long by 100 feet in width. This gives Universal City five stages, three of the above dimensions, one open-air stage, 200 by 100 feet, the artificial light studio, 200 by 100, and the Christie comedy stage, which measures 125 by 100 feet. These stages, including the one now under construction, will cover three and one half acres of ground.

The roof of the studio now building is being so constructed that it can be used for an electric light studio or, during the summer months, as an ordinary open-air stage. An unusually efficient system of diffusers, designed and constructed by the Universal technical department, will be used in place of the ordinary diffuser system commonly employed. The new stage will be used exclusively by the two Nestor comedy companies, one under the direction of Al. E. Christie, the other under the direction of Horace Davey. The side walls of the stage will be constructed of steel and concrete.

Concurrently with the construction of the new stage, additional dressing rooms to accommodate the constantly growing population of actors at Big U town are being built. When the long rows of dressing rooms at Universal City were thrown open on March 15 it was thought that they would accommodate the players for years to come. It is a significant commentary on the growth of the Universal that only six months after their completion it has been found necessary to build two more "streets" of "bath houses."

PIERCE TACKLES OHIO CENSORS.

Carl H. Pierce, special representative of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, has left New York on the Twentieth Century Limited to attend the meeting of the Paramount Manufacturers and Exchange Managers in Chicago, which is to be held September 2.

Mr. Pierce has been requested to speak on the subject of Service to Exchanges and Exhibitors, it having been acclaimed unanimously throughout the country that the offices of the companies which he represents have given unusually efficient service in the way of assisting the exhibitors and exchange men in the presentation and exploitation of film plays.

On conclusion of the Chicago meeting it is expected that Mr. Pierce will journey to Columbus, Ohio, to see what can be done towards getting "Hypocrites" passed in Ohio. "I feel that where public, press and even United States courts have passed upon this photoplay and have decided that it is a fit play to show, that the Ohio exhibitors should not be deprived of the profit to be derived from it. Nor should the Ohio public, in my judgment, be deprived of the benefit to be obtained through seeing it."

Mr. Pierce's successful efforts to have "John Barleycorn" passed in Pennsylvania and Ohio and his work with "Sea Wolf" in Philadelphia are indications that if it is at all possible to do anything in the Ohio situation, this will be accomplished ere his return to New York.

THE "BROKEN COIN" EXTENDED.

"The Broken Coin," which had been intended for fifteen reels, will be extended to twenty-two, as the story is not nearly completed, and the fifteenth installment has been filmed.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

STAR THEATER, MODESTO, CAL.

This Photoplay House Is One of the Best in the San Joaquin Valley—Owner Entered Business in 1906.

SINCE W. B. Martin's entrance into the picture business in 1906 he has been successful. He has owned and controlled picture theaters in Oakland, Alameda and Salinas, all in the State of California. Three years ago he came to Modesto, Cal., where he opened the Modesto theater and ran it at a good margin of profit until December, 1913, when on the 8th of that month the house was burned down. The loss sustained was heavy as there was no insurance on the property.

Undaunted by this unfortunate occurrence, Mr. Martin immediately had plans drawn for a bigger picture theater, but before the transaction was closed, he purchased an established house in Modesto, and conducted it for a year and a half with considerable success. Mr. Martin then disposed of this structure and opened his New Star, an exterior view of which is herewith published. It is a model little house, built of fireproof material. The lobby is wide and deep, and posters announcing current and coming productions are placed in neat frames which fit in equidistant recesses at the top of marble wainscoting two feet in height. The box office is in the center of the lobby and is made of marble. An artistic glass and metal canopy extends over the sidewalk, and the name of the theater is emblazoned in a tall perpendicular electric sign. The interior is spacious, and two wide aisles running from back to front divide the seating arrangement. The walls are marked off in big squares which extend from the ceiling to the wainscoting and are finished in a border of gold. Large ventilation gratings are placed at regular intervals along the ceiling and numerous electroliers are suspended. The projection battery consists of two Power's 6a machines, a double dissolver, a Westinghouse 55 ampere motor generator, an emergency transformer and numerous other up-to-date apparatus. This house is one of the best exclusive picture theaters in the San Joaquin Valley. The admission prices are five and ten cents, and Mr. Martin is satisfied with the results since the house was opened.

HICKORY THEATER, ST. JOSEPH, MO.

First Year in Business Shows Good Profit for Photoplay House—Has Throw of 93 Feet.

AT the end of practically one year's existence, the books of the Hickory theater, which is situated at the corner of 11th and Hickory streets, St. Joseph, Mo., show that it has had a profitable year. To be exact, the theater's birthday falls on September 5 next. The Hickory is a two-story structure built of brick and other fire-resisting material, and although its exterior appearance is not as attractive as some other motion picture houses, its conservative aspect is none the less inviting to the public. The same is true of the interior; no efforts have been made at ostentatious decorations; yet there is an atmosphere of homeliness perceptible.

There are 550 comfortable chairs in the auditorium. There is plenty of room for more seats, but the owner had in mind the convenience of his patrons and consequently had each row of seats placed at such a distance apart to allow of plenty of room for easy egress and ingress. There are two wide aisles and plenty of exits. The dimensions of the property upon which the theater stands are 40 by 110 feet. The operating booth is considered one of the best in St. Joseph. The throw is 93 feet and the size of the screen is 12 by 15 feet. In the projection room there are two latest model Simplex machines, a Mercury Arc Rectifier and a rheostat for emergency purposes. The operating room is constructed of four-inch fireproof walls with metal drop slides over the portholes.

The location of the Hickory is in one of the best outlying residential districts of St. Joseph. Three matinees a week are given, they being on Tuesday, Saturday and Sunday. The program is changed daily. General and World Film subjects are run. Music is furnished by an electric piano. The theatre was built by John Egli, who manages it. He is assisted by William Leucht, Jr. This is Mr. Egli's initial experience in the picture business, and that his efforts to build up a profitable business are as successful as they are commendable is evidenced by the first year of excellent business.

BELMAR THEATER, PITTSBURGH, PA.

The Belmar Theater, located at the corner of Homewood avenue and Bennett street, Homewood, Pittsburgh, Pa., is one of the most beautiful picture houses in that city. It has a seating capacity of 600 and cost $52,000 to build. It is owned by James B. Clark of Messrs. Rowland & Clark, two well known picture men.

British Notes

AFTER all, it is the plain, simple advertising idea that is most convincing. One of the most deservedly successful notions ever shipped to this side are the life-size cardboard silhouettes of Chaplin and Ritchie. At the moment of writing I should think eight out of every ten theaters in the country have one or the other at the door. And like everything original, including their prototypes, the popular "stunt" of the Essanay and Universal companies has been ruthlessly perverted. I saw one of the Chaplin cut-outs with a pair of clogs slung over the shoulder advertising the wares of a cobbler in Liverpool; another is reported to have been effectively used in a similar fashion by a grocery establishment in London. Quite a mild and agreeable form of swindle is feeding upon the reputation of others. A music hall revue in Manchester this week has its mainspring of humor boosted as "Charlie Chaplin," while Ritchie, Reeves and Chaplin are fighting it out on your side as to who was the original drunk in "Humming Birds." Karno has resurrected his hoary-headed skit to the tune of a Chaplin Waltz now in its second edition. Another recognized indignity attendant upon those who tower on the dizzy heights of fame is to be pilloried in "Punch." In the current number "Charlie's" cardboard contour forms the nucleus of a recruiting rub.

The description in a past issue of the "World" of a screen theater in an apple orchard can be likened in its curiosity to a show I recently encountered in a remote hamlet in the North. When a native of this settlement informed me that the arena of the show was up seven flights of steps and the balcony down two, one might reasonably expect to discover the realization of a new fanaticism in architecture. But no; it was just an ordinary superannuated chapel half way up a steep hill-side turned over to "the pictures." Its peculiar situation demanded a preliminary treadmill exercise before admission could be obtained to the body of the hall, while access to the gallery necessitated a detour up and behind the building with a stone staircase down to the roof level. Since the commercialization of the motion picture began in England we have seen literally anything from a duke's palace to a rag shop turned over to the new affinity by people of the get-rich-quick persuasion. That the result is not always a happy one was discovered the other week by a butcher in Bolton, who, after wielding the cleaver faithfully for thirty years, succumbed to the lure and converted his slaughter house into the most highly perfumed nickelodeon in the country.

"Premiums" I notice is a term employed in the States to imply something that is being given away. Its meaning in this country is invariably the reverse, expressing something to be paid and synonymous with insurance. But this does not mean that baiting the public is unknown to British showmen. Unfortunately, it is very much with us and, like the poor, will always be. The practice seems to have had its inception from the idea of going one better than the opposition and doubtless owes its origin to the tea trade. Be that as it may, there is no gainsaying the hold on certain exhibitors the idea has laid, yet the veriest novice might know that to extend to patrons a free feed, then show them a junk program is about as witless an action as that of the manager displaying in his lobby the legend, "Don't go down the street to be taken in; come in here." The commonest form of "premium" here is the light refection. In either Manchester or Liverpool I can pay my threepence, sip a cup of tolerably decent coffee with a cigarette thrown in and watch a six-weeks-old program of two hours' duration without disbursing another cent. Even now I have forgotten to add that a printed program is supplied also for the inclusive charge. How is it done? Hush! Begin with item No. 1, the coffee, or tea, whichever you prefer. In return for advertising Mr. ———'s tea upon the screen after each film and upon the program, he is supplied with as much as he can use for a month only. The same with the cigarette which bears a printed advertisement for a local tobacco packing company. At the end of the month Mr. ———'s competitors and presumably those of the tobacconist's are willing to try advertisements upon the same terms, and so it goes on ad inf. The films at 6000 ft. six weeks old, are run in conjunction with two other dime shows in the near vicinity. A youth on a motor-cycle has to see they cross over in time. Finally, we have the free program, which is more than paid for by neighboring shopkeepers.

The Yorkshire Cine Co. of London are introducing this month a little screen innovation in the shape of a kinema-interview. It is rather remarkable, with so many scintillations in the film world from the "legit," we have not had such a suggestion exploited before. The kinema interview is a short topical, not longer than 250 feet, picturizing some domestic or personal phase in the life of a celebrity. Obviously, the idea is to provide the exhibitor with something big in the name of a "star" at a small figure. The above company has taken stage celebrities as a beginning, the first on the list being Ella Retford and Vesta Tilley.

I observe that J. Frank Brockliss, Limited, through the non-arrival of negatives from New York, are being compelled to postpone for a month the circulation of "The Busy Bell Boy."

Director Bentley of the Universal (ex. the British and Colonial Co.) has experienced his little vicissitudes during the taking of the final scenes of the now completed screen version of Dickens' "Hard Times." Under normal conditions the story would have been released by this, but we are living, in this country at any rate, under exceedingly abnormal conditions which hit the producer of motion picture films about as hard as anyone. The immovable omnipotence of the military authorities raised one or two disconcerting exactions respecting the choice of locations, but despite these and other exigencies, the resourceful Bentley found the whole of his scenic material without journeying more than a few miles from the metropolis. The title of the subject would probably weigh heavy in the producer's mind when, after concluding arrangements with the railroad company for use of their property, an order came from the War Office that upon no consideration could any part of a railway be photographed; or when he had engaged a fleet of motor omnibuses and taken his 200 supers out into the country to do some rustic scenes and was politely informed that owing to its proximity to a flying ground, no pictures could be taken in that district. The production when released will, I venture, be viewed with interest by the American trade. Firstly, it is Bentley's initial effort in his new capacity and something of a one-man show of his film producing attainments. He prepared the scenario himself. Secondly to a country that is indebted for much of its progress to railroad development the introduction into a standard classic of the iron horse cannot be without appeal. A faithful imitation of a primitive locomotive of Stephenson's old "rocket" type, imparts a novel atmosphere to some of the scenes.

Panoramic View of Kalem Company's

Raffell's Exclusives, Limited, a pioneer house in the renting business here, with extensions both intricate and numerous, have secured the agency for three out of the five continents for the entire output of the recently constituted Metro Pictures Corporation of New York. Henceforth all Metro releases for Europe, Asia, Africa and some parts of South America will be dealt out direct from Raffell's place in London. Harry G. Cohen negotiated this deal on behalf of the combine last week, and it is freely stated that a sum well over half a million dollars was the basis of the new agreement. The first specimen copies of Metro films are already in Raffell's showrooms and appear to promise much. If the statement of Mr. Cohen is correct that nine out of every twelve leading theaters in the United States and Canada are now using the Metro programme, the organization can reasonably anticipate good business on this side under such favorable auspices as Raffell's.

The anti-censorial agitation against the prohibition levied by Mr. G. A. Redford upon the Bosworth picture, "Hypocrites," still waxes fast and furious. Two hundred and fifty people distinguished in different walks of life saw the screening of the work by invitation at the West End Cinema a few days ago. Each was asked to vote pro or con for the exhibition of the subject and the result of the ballot was 11 against and 218 for its exhibition. As a sermon in celluloid with a strong moral pointed at the commoner sins of society, the film purports to do no more than the majority of present day novels. The drawback from the censor's point of view is obvious. The language of the screen is plainer, more graphic, more expressive and convincing than that of the written or spoken word. The allegorical personification of Truth by a female form unveiled is, of course, the "raison d'etre," and in regard to this episode, one sympathizer of the Shaftesbury Avenue tribunal has ingeniously attempted to sidetrack the controversy by identifying the objection with the respective principles and ideals of art practiced on the one hand by the school that considers the employment of the nude figure "infra dig." and on the other by those who see no harm in its restrained use. The result of the ballot taken among eminent artists, sculptors and clergymen is clearly an encouragement to the producer of the film in his aesthetic aspirations, through the motion camera. Admittedly, it is a difficult task, for unlike the sculptor or painter, he cannot mould his subject exactly to his own ideas. He works considerably more in the concrete than the abstract and like the photographer, he must make the best of a fixed, immovable subject given to him. Every year, at the exhibitions of the Royal Photographic Society and the London Salon of Photography, beautiful figure studies are inspected by the same class of people who visit the Royal Academy and I have seen there studies in the nude as noble in conception and execution as ever on canvas. The only difference in point of principle between these and the kinematographic representation is that the latter has the added charm of motion. The object of every artist, whether he works in paste or pigment, is to record the beauty of life and nature, and to my way of thinking, let it be a nude study or a simple landscape, the man who can picture what his mind sees in motion is at a decided advantage.

The Essanay Company, following in the departure of the Pathe Company initiated ten days ago have this week notified the trade of their intention to rent out their products direct. The new policy of the famous Chicago house is the immediate outcome of its decision to curtail the issue of short pictures and more important to maintain absolute control of every subject exhibited under the mark of the Indian's head. A circumstance which has materially influenced the company to precipitate this—to the English market—new state of affairs, may be cited as indicating what it is expressly wished to avoid in future. Chaplin pictures have been sold in this country upon a scale ranging from 150 to 200 copies of each subject with the very palpable consequence of congesting the market. Furthermore, in a few cases, Essanay films have been shipped abroad in large batches after going the rounds of the home shows to the detriment of the firm's interests in such dominions. Until the end of September the current system of releasing films on the open market will be kept in vogue, but beginning the new quarter, the Essanay exhibitor will have to give in his order direct to Mr. Spoor. "What will happen," a few exhibitors are asking, "to the showman who can give a large regular order? Will he be singled out for preferential treatment?" Obviously the Essanay, or for that matter, any other company, is not out to produce films from purely philanthropic motives, and I think Mr. Spoor has himself stated that those who support the ordinary productions of the company will get the best terms for "Chaplins." But "high fianance" is to find no expression through this change. The only difference may be that the heavy buyer will have a better discount. Fixed definite arrangements have not yet been formulated, but the suggested scheme for serving the smaller exhibitor is commendably fair. Of the twelve reels released weekly, he may take as low as three (changed twice) and have a "Chaplin" included in this order.

The adoption of these methods by two important manufacturers must at no distant date have its reflex upon the remainder of the trade. The two camps will have to be clearly defined. So far the only counter-stroke, so far as the American houses are concerned, to the vigorous lead-off by the Pathe and Essanay comes from a strong determination by Selig, the Trans-Atlantic Company and others to speed up their output of short subjects, if only to preserve an open market. Amongst others an attitude of hesitative contemplation is plainly perceptible. The move is too important and its effects too extensive to make in a hurry. Paul Kimberley of the Thanhouser Company is busy making a practical test of the support given films placed on the open market. "The Cycle of Hatred," originally designed to be exhibited as an exclusive, will be put out next month under open conditions. The sale of the subject will doubtless mould the policy of the firm in its future business on this side.

Ben Webster, the actor of His Majesty's Theatre, London, has been starred again in a dramatic production of the Clarendon Company, entitled "In the Blood," which will be available for the exhibitor early in the autumn. Another film of note and outstanding character is in course of preparation by Will Barker, of Barker Motion Photography, Limited. It is an official industrial or "interest" film taken under the auspices of the Metropolitan Water Board of London, and deals in an instructive manner with the details of the water supply of London. For future reference a copy of the film is to be preserved by the Board.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

THERE is a good field open to some up-to-date detective agency that can formulate a plan that will protect the motion picture people against the various fakirs and imposters who impose upon manufacturers and exhibitors of the pictures, and also the players. They are operating throughout the country and causing the people engaged in the business an immense amount of annoyance and, frequently, financial loss. The offenders are divided into classes. They are the criminals—the crank, the so-called practical joker and the beat. The most annoying of all to the players are the practical jokers. They began operations some time ago, but were stopped by publicity. Recently they again became active. Their victims call them practical jokers because in no case has it been determined that the operators have profited financially, although the victims have suffered monetary losses. The operation is to have sent c. o. d. merchandise the players do not order. If the deliveries are made to the players in person they are rejected as not having been ordered. But as some players frequently order goods they wish to use in plays, or for some special event that makes early delivery important, they leave standing orders at the studios. hotels, or homes, that c. o. d. deliveries be accepted in their absence. They have thus become loaded with goods that were not ordered by them and are worthless. In many instances charges of considerable amount have been paid on packages that contained only articles valued at but a few cents—such as cheap dolls, toy tea sets, etc. Such deliveries have added color to the theory that the people behind the operations think they are putting over a practical joke. It is a serious matter in whatever light it is viewed. If the delivery is rejected it places the players in an embarrassing position with the merchants when they attempt to place a bona fide order. One very prominent player says he has repeatedly been obliged to spend some time in convincing the house he deals with that he did not order rejected shipments. The first conclusion reached by the merchant is that the player has changed his mind and uses the fake order story as a subterfuge. This works to the player's disadvantage when a hurry order is sent by telephone.

The cranks, or "fans," are the men and women whose greatest hobby is to make people believe they are prominent photo players. Having succeeded in ingratiating themselves into a gathering in a cabaret, or some social function, and shrewdly learning that the people they are with do not know the player intended to be represented, the crank becomes the guest of the evening. It is perhaps a good joke on the hosts, but an exceedingly poor one on the real photo players, who subsequently become deluged by letters, telegrams and telephone calls reminding them of engagements made, criticising them for not keeping them, or intimating that a return of the small loan made would be very opportune. Such "jokes" do not tend to increase the popularity of the real players and they are put to much inconvenience to personally explain to the correspondents that they have been victimized. One lady unsuccessfully spent considerable money in trying to locate a woman who impersonated her at a gathering which was at least questionable.

These fakirs, jokers, or whatever one may wish to call them, also become heartless imposters upon their entertainers, who nurse a longing for a chance to figure on the motion picture screen. With false promises of influence they raise their hopes to a point of confidence that results in a crushing blow when the aspirant ultimately meets the real player and learns of the duplicity.

The criminal class is of several species. There is the swindler who gets advance payments from exhibitors on fake premiums and advertising schemes, the employment agent who takes most of the pay due his victims and credits it to the commission account, the school manager who takes the last cent from deluded boys and girls on promises of employment and fails to make good. Many of the so-called schools for education in scenario writing come under the same head. While existing laws may not bring some of the operations within indictable lines, nevertheless the results are criminal in nature. But the meanest of all offenders are the scoundrels who prey upon innocent girls by misrepresenting themselves as owners, managers or directors of prominent motion picture companies. The number of men who are pursuing this disreputable line of work is surprising. The number of their victims is far greater. The lamentable feature is that most of the victims are ashamed to come to the front when they find they have been deluded. It may be also stated authentically that such operations are not restricted to men who seek victims in public places. From statements made by young girls who were sufficiently fortified to withstand advances many of the advertisers for moving picture players would not stand a superficial investigation by agents engaged in detecting vice. And the operations are not limited to the unsuspecting young people. Two photo players, ladies of unquestionable respectability, recently told of their experience with one of these men. The writer urged them to expose the offenders, but they feared the effect of association with such cases. Both these ladies are photo players. They were disengaged at the time they made application to the man in question. They were so shocked by the proposals made that both were on the verge of nervous prostration.

The police department has a staff of women operatives engaged in unearthing fake fortune tellers and like imposters. It is suggested that these operatives be detailed for a while in making a clean-up of the fake motion picture people.

One of the local papers has opened warfare on agents who take as commissions the lion's share of the pay allowed "extras" by motion picture companies and announces that to beat the game one company has opened an agency of its own, so that the "extras" will get full pay. This is the only effective means by which the shark agents can be beaten, although the idea is not an original one. One of the oldest companies in the business has had the plan in operation for several years. A man who has been engaged in the hiring of "extras" direct said the other day: "There is a class of people who are willing to take almost any price offered for 'extra' work. They are a lower class who have filled in as 'supers' on stages for fifty cents a performance. But there is another class of a higher strata that are professionals, or semi-professionals, who have been forced by adversity and lack of opportunity to accept extra work for small pay. These are the real complainants. They are misled by agents as to the amount of compensation, or forced by circumstances to accept what the agent is willing to give them. An agent called upon me recently and offered to furnish all the people I wanted at any time, regardless of type. The only condition he imposed was that the pay for the 'extras' should be turned over to him in bulk, or by check, so that he could pay them at his office and they would not know what I paid him. I insisted upon paying each 'extra' and taking individual receipts, allowing him to be present and collect, his commission. This he refused to do, saying some of the people would walk away and 'stick' him. I maintained that expectation of future work was his protection. Finally he said he could not get enough out of the 'extra' on such a basis and declared negotiations off. While it may be true that some people will defraud agents of their commissions if opportunity affords, still the amount involved in individual legitimate commissions is so small that it is not at all likely that the agent can suffer much. On the other hand, the motion picture companies must jealously guard their reputations, and nothing will tend more strongly to tarnish that reputation than reports that the companies do not pay the employes as agreed. It is true that legally the picture company is absolved when it deals with an agent and pays him, but in complaining of any unjust act on the part of the agent the victims (perhaps unintentionally) unfavorably influence public opinion by using the name of the picture company the work was done for. Experience in this connection has done more than anything else in causing many of the companies to hire 'extras' direct. In the old days theatrical agents dealt with the theaters they supplied and the people they engaged on written contracts. The motion picture business is different. Where the negotiations are verbal it is safety first. To avoid any labor clashes the only way is to cut out the middle man and see that the laborer gets his hire. It seems severe on the agents, but the theatrical agent is a part of the old line of work and has been passing as rapidly as the stage. Motion pictures have not opened a new field for him, although he has tried to make it so, and he cannot make up the loss by exorbitant commissions. Such charges tend to discourage 'extras,' and this reputable companies cannot tolerate as good work on the part of 'extras' is as essential in the motion picture business as good work on the part of the principals. A mob disgruntled by the acts of an agent may spoil a very costly scene."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Policies.

RECENTLY the subjoined paragraph appeared in one of the New York theatrical prints. The item was based on the appraisal of the estate of the late Max Anderson in which the stock in the houses mentioned had fallen from par to $25. It goes on to say:

> Thus, in the short time since the Williams theaters went under the Keith management their value has decreased just three-quarters.
> It has been no secret among theatrical folk for a long time that the Keith interests were badly stung in their deal with Mr. Williams.
>
> While these houses were all big money makers while he had them, they become money losers after passing from his hands.
>
> In an effort to stem the tide, prices were cut in half at the Colonial, Alhambra and at the Royal, which succeeded the Bronx as the uptown theater of the combination, and at the same time performers were forced to accept half salaries when playing these houses.
>
> Percy G. Williams always was considered one of the shrewdest men in the show business and the manner in which he "got from under" just at the time when the tide was about to turn against the houses he controlled is further proof of the correctness of this estimate of his acumen.

There is a lesson here for the photoplay Exhibitors who can read between the lines.

Percy Williams was a shrewd manager. Starting with one small house in the Brooklyn suburbs, he left the business with five first-class vaudeville houses, two lesser ones and a stock house. He did not "get from under," as the paragraph suggests. He sold out when a suitably enticing offer was made and the offer was made because he, almost alone, of the leading managers was willing to pay the increasing prices that vaudeville performers demanded. Probably if he still held control he would still be making money.

The meat of the situation is this. The houses made money under his management. They lost under another management, and prices had to be cut to meet the situation and this did not suffice. That was just wher the trouble came, as anyone who knew the Williams idea can understand, and it was our privilege to have known him intimately.

When he opened the first of the large houses, the Orpheum, he came into the territory of Hyde and Behman's, then the only first class house in Brooklyn devoted to vaudeville. Before the house opened the Hyde and Benham enterprise dropped its prices, then ranging from fifteen cents to one dollar to the ten-twenty-thirty scale. They cheapened the show to match and failed to do business while Williams was forced to sell more dollar seats because his patrons did not want the self same seats at seventy-five cents.

And he gave a program worth a dollar, which was why he could sell at the price. On one occasion he was able to engage the Kilties Band. He had the major portion of the program already booked. Instead of cancelling the previous headliners, he kept these and let out the cheaper half of the show to make room for the band. "It will bring a lot of new people," he explained in answer to our question. "I want the regular show to look its best; not its worst." He lost money on the week but made a gain that showed for months afterward.

He was bought out because his exit from the game would make possible a general cutting down of the programs at all Greater New York houses, all more or less affiliated with the exception of one house. The cost of the bills was cut, but the receipts suffered a greater degree. It was not the house or its location, but the management that counted. Precisely the same thing holds good in pictures. If your receipts drop, it does not always follow that the reduction of expenses will equalize matters. That course may bring a still further drop in the takings. Sometimes the best economy is to spend more money to get more money. It does not mean getting a larger number of reels. It means paying more to get what intelligent people will be willing to pay more money for. Then tell that class of prospective patrons that you have what they want, and prove it to them.

Wow!

H. E. Jameson, who travels in the middle west for the Pathe exchange of Kansas City, sends in an advertisement that, as he says, would be funny were it less serious. It is taken from a Topeka paper and apparently advertises a stock and a picture theater. The stock house offers this delectable underline:

THE HOUSE OF BONDAGE

WHY GIRLS GO WRONG

DAMAGED GOODS

THE LURE

HER FIRST FALSE STEP

The picture theater offers three reels and a tabloid musical comedy for ten cents. Presumably the reels are of the sort you might expect from a management that picks the plays it does. And, by the way, remember that these five plays are passed uncensored because they are stage plays and not pictures. It doesn't seem quite fair, does it?

With Doors.

Proctor's Griswold, Troy, N. Y., sends in a new form of program. It is virtually four pages, but by folding it gives two pages and four half pages, the ends of the opened sheet folding to the centre to give the effect of a door which is lettered "Walker Whiteside greets you in—" Opening up the doors they give on a picture of the player, one of the flaps gives a running comment and the other are some press notices. On the back is the full program for the week. The idea is not wholly new, but it is uncommon, as, indeed, are most of the ideas that Mr. Emde sends in.

A Letter to a Friend.

Lately a good friend sent a letter that ran:

> Enclosed please find three programs which I submit for comment. I sent three with the same request about five weeks ago, but failed to get an opinion. In the Film Index you gave me credit for the Twentieth Century idea. If I am going back or standing still, I want to know it. You helped me to improve my work and encouraged me so often that I don't like the idea of Brother Sargent being so stingy with—

The name follows, but the name is not essential. We might use the writer's name or a dozen others with equal truth. It is because the letter is so generally applicable that we are replying here. This is what we wrote:

> It is probable that by now you have seen the comment. It is necessary, since I am in and out of town, to work well ahead. Now and then an item gets lost or buried, but the programs were commented upon, I think.
>
> You ask for a frank opinion and I am giving it. You are not going ahead, and it is because you have done so well in the past that I jumped on the stuff. It is not so much you as your printer, but you should not let any printer that ever stuck type get you in trouble. And this cuss is getting you into trouble, for he is getting you to spend money on a job that is not worth money of any kind. The trouble is that you try to get too durned much on a bill and then, as though that were not enough, you let the printer muss it all up. You only run a one-week program in a four page program with a four by six type page. I am sending you a program with a page half an inch smaller each way, and the man not only gets in two weeks to your one, but he says more than you do and still he gets a pretty looking page where you get only a hopeless hash of type. Just to test out the idea, a man was passing my desk a moment ago and I asked him what he thought. If I told you the copy reader would cut it out. Then I showed him the other fellow's and he said "That's pretty." He was right, and I think you will agree with him and me if you will take the trouble to make a comparison. His layout suggests straight reading. Yours, with its two point cut off rules and one point rules to separate each item, suggests the reading of interminable paragraphs. The man doesn't even start to read your offering because he knows he will not finish. Of course you have three and four titles to his one feature, but the idea holds good. Tell of your feature and then run a line about the others in the same paragraph to get one paragraph to the day. And look up a printer who knows how to set. I think that a large part of your trouble lies in the fact that you cannot talk back to the printer. He has followed instructions. He has not used either good judgment or good taste, but he has done as he has been told. Change to a man with better taste in type and then let him tell you if you cannot tell him. Tell less and get some white space or else fool them and make them think there is not very much by cutting down the amount of display.
> Your ideas are all right. You have inventiveness, but you don't know printing and you are up against a printer who apparently knows little more about good work than you do. It's a bad combination. Learn to talk type. Then learn to talk to the printer, and hug to your breast the one great fact that it is not what is printed but what will be read and read with interest that counts. Once you learn this you will be getting the two bells and going ahead again, but you must realize that you cannot print a book in a four page program and that too much black type will scare off the most confirmed fan.

Every house manager who advertises should learn all that he can about printing. In Picture Theater Advertising three chapters are given to this because it is so important that the Exhibitor should be able to argue intelligently with the man who sets type. It is not sufficient to be able to write a good advertisement. It must be well displayed, too.

Agreed.

E. B. Thomas, of the Durrell, Cambridge, Mass., sends in a set of programs for comment. He says, in part:

> Am, of course, a steady reader of the paper from "kiver to kiver" literally. Changed printers last week. Changed back again this week. Worth the difference of fifty cents. Cost

Ten colleges—the brainiest men in the country wrote in this contest. This is the result—the prize play.

It is a college play to stir the young and make the older patrons dream of younger days.

> $3 per thousand in two-thousand lots. Too much? The man does his own laying out. I send him the rough draft and he selects the type and arranged the display. Looks good to me. Would you change?

That's the sort of man who gets ahead. He pays fifty cents more for his programs because they look better. Some exhibitors look at prices and some at results. The man who looks at results is the same man who can see that if he pays an extra ten dollars for service and draws fifteen dollars more in patronage, his services is not costing him ten dollars more, but five dollars less.

The cheaper program is by no means a bad looking sheet. It is a good job, as the average job goes. Of course, the printer had a good model to follow, so the credit may not be all his. But the higher-priced man is a real printer. A man who was probably born to be a printer. He does not pay any more for his type than the other man, but he picks better faces. This does not mean that he picks out all the faces that look like decent type at a masked ball. He does not load up with shaded and rugged and outline and inline and all the rest of the freaks, good as many of those are, but he uses care in the selection of body types. He knows that some faces are a shade more elegant than others, and he gets the better face. And on top of that he knows how to put type into the chase. He has some stuff that is own first cousin to the other man's, but it looks different. It is more pleasing to the eye. It is more legible. It is right. We can verify Mr. Thomas' suspicions. We cannot offer suggestion other than to stick to the printer and see that the latter is careful of his health and keeps out of the way of automobiles. If we could afford the space we would like to reproduce two of the programs complete, but these two pages will show the difference. One looks white beside the other merely because of the selection of type. One stands out. The other is negative. It is not bad, but it is not so good as the other. There is a difference of more than fifty cents a thousand in the effect on the recipient.

No Comment.

J. A. Erdman, of Erdman and Schultz, the Rex, Clay Centre, Kansas, sends in his first program for comment. It is an eight pager including a Hennegan cover. The program proper might be pulled in a little to get some space for chat and house argument, but apart from that there seems to be little need for change. The advertising is properly repressed, though two pages are carried, and the display is clean and readable without being crowded. It will work well for the house as it stands.

In a Way.

T. E. Yemm, of the Grand and Lyric, Du Quoin, Ill., has the right idea of making business when he writes:

> In looking over The Moving Picture World every week, I find many valuable suggestions, which are no doubt very helpful to the Exhibitor, in fact I find it so myself.
>
> I am enclosing you a hand bill which we get out every week, and make a house to house canvass every Monday morning. While this bill is sort of a summary of the week's bill, we find it very successful, our idea of a hand bill is two fold, the first place it is a reminder. They know where the picture show is, and that there is a show there every night, and that is about the end of it.
>
> But a herald put into their homes nine times out of ten will be read, then they can plan accordingly, if they can't go to-night, possibly they can the next night or the next, and they will have an idea what they will see, or if Monday's bill don't appeal to them maybe some bill will.
> We also use a Stock Bill for our Serial Stories and all Feature Pictures with the stories completed in it.

The herald is properly nothing but a throwaway printed up for the week. As a throwaway it would be too crowded, but as an elementary herald it may lead to better things later. In its present form it is merely a strip six by fifteen inches, common news.

The chief fault is that the bill is not dated. The heading says "Look what's on at the Grand this week." It does not say what week, nor are the days dated in any manner. It is confusing in this respect. The date should invariably be used. As a start toward a real program this is good, for, as Mr. Yemm says, a herald in the house helps them to plan for the week, but if money permits they should be given something that will look better in the house. A four page program on better paper would cost little more and a couple of advertisements would more than pay the extra cost. We wish they would think the matter over and then send us copies of the program.

Been Anniversing.

Mrs. R. R. Moore, of the Ideal, Akron, Ohio, has been having the sort of anniversary that makes subsequent anniversaries possible. She did not sail in to make all the extra money she could. She invited the town to rejoice with her, by far the better way. There was a change of program twice daily, matinee and night offering different subjects. A night ticket carried with it a ticket for a matinee from Tuesday to Friday inclusive. Tuesday the men received souvenirs and on Wednesday they were given to the ladies, the kiddies getting theirs on Saturday afternoon. There were other distributions of presents and on Tuesday and Wednesday the Safety First films were run off between matinee and night when no admission was charged, the idea being that workmen could stop in on their way from work and see these important subjects free. The films were also run at the Saturday matinee for the kiddies, along with some comedies. This extract is the keynote of the program:

> This "Anniversary week" is our effort to show you that we want to merit your continued friendship and good will. We want you to feel that there is a personality about the Ideal that exists only at the Ideal. You will always see the best films we can procure, you will always find a perfectly clean and well ventilated theater and always receive the same courteous attention. Our success lies in your appreciation of all these. If you do not come we shall at least feel a little hurt about it, for this is offered to you with a hearty good will.

That is the right sort of an anniversary. It should be run as a celebration, a heart offering, and not wholly as a commercial enterprise. That starts the coming year right and makes people glad you are there. There is no time when an undue thought of the box office is out of place than at an anniversary. Mrs. Moore writes,

> They are still talking about the way we treated them all during the week. We feel the results of it in good business this week, too.

Precisely, and the good results will continue through the weeks to come, because more than ever the patrons feel that the management is a friend and not merely a purveyor of amusement.

Program Stuff.

Outside of the unpardonable puns on "crank," this story, taken from The Movie Fan, the house organ of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Col., will make good filler for other programs:

> During the month of June the operators ran 848 reels averaging 1,000 feet to the reel, making a total of 848,000 feet of film. In order to run this number of feet through the machine which runs one foot to each turn of the crank, our operator turned the crank during the month 848,000 times. So please excuse the operator if he is a little cranky.
>
> Don't get him peeved as you must surely know that a guy who turns a crank that number of times during the month must have some muscle in his right arm.
>
> There are sixteen pictures to a foot, which makes 12,568,000 pictures. The mechanism of a picture machine is so geared that the cam shaft revolves once for every picture. The month of June reduced to miles would be 162½ miles, which amount would reach within six miles of Tennessee Pass. The average time required to run one reel is fifteen minutes, therefore our operators worked 225 5-6 hours during the month.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

PICTURE THEATRE ADVERTISING

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing, and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. Mr. Sargent tells all he knows and this includes what several hundred successful exhibitors have told him. More than 100 examples. An introduction and then 299 pages of solid text. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. Handsome clothboard binding. By mail, postpaid $2.00.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

It's True.

JUST as a pleasant variation to the usual howl came this letter from a Washington correspondent:

> I have been plodding along for the past six months, making a sale now and then, but always to the same two editors; never dreaming that my work was attracting attention elsewhere. Recently I have received letters from the heads of two large companies, setting forth their wants and stating that my work had been brought to their attention and that they would be pleased to have me submit to them. Verily this game has its surprises! But, after all, it merely confirms what you frequently say in your department to the effect that even the little fellows are being watched.

Now let some of you take heart again. If you can write the stuff that is wanted, you'll be able to sell it in the long run. There is no market for junk stuff and it will not pay you to try to sell stuff merely because you think you should be encouraged by an occasional sale. You cannot sell until you have something to sell that someone else wants, but if you can offer good material you will eventually find your opening.

It is all right to say that you stand no chance on the outside, but those inside know better. They know how they got in and how others came in and they know that pull accounts for about five per cent. of those who get in, but these seldom last. The rest just climb on on merit. One insider only fifteen months ago was an attendant in an insane asylum, another man was a poster artist. Howard Irving Young went from the college class room to staff work and is, so far as we know, the only man who has never earned his living through other than photoplay work. They come from all walks of life, but they all have story sense, and this, plus general intelligence, gets them where they want to be.

On the Screen.

The other day we met a lady. She was a very nice lady, indeed, but there was a lot she did not know about selling a script. She brought it into a studio written in pencil on a scratch pad, the sheets of which were still glued together, and she wanted to see the man who was busy handling the efforts of several hundred people. She wanted him to let the studio and the factory run themselves while he told her how to write scripts.

She did find a person willing to offer suggestions, but she was not willing to take them. She had studied the pictures on the screen and she knew. She interrupted an important scene to have a woman cross the room because she had noted that very often, in a scene, there was some action irrelevant to the main story. That the action was also unobtrusive was something she had not noticed. She had noted that now and then there was a scene introduced that seemed to have been put in for nothing more than to please the eye. She had about a thousand feet of purely pictorial stuff in a single sequence; a whole week, in time that meant absolutely nothing to the story.

She had noticed, too, that her stories were much better than many that she had seen on the screen. She could not accept the explanation that perhaps the story that had been purchased was better than the story as it got to the screen. She knew it all and she had apparently wandered in to verify her suspicions and when she was told something else she was not ready to accept the dictum. She knew. She merely wished to be told that she was right.

Not all of this type of beginner gets to the studio, which is fortunate for the real students. They probably will not get anywhere themselves because when they get good advice they refuse to take it and cling to preconceived notions. If they believe that they should write in lead pencil, they will keep on writing in lead pencil. If they believe that they must see "Mr. Biograph" to sell the Biograph, they will spend the time writing to Mr. Biograph that should be spent in practice work. They will not learn even when they seem to seek instruction and the more they are told that black is black, the more certain are they that it is white, or at least a very light grey.

If you study the screen, do so prepared to accept or reject what you see. If you are told that leaders should be used sparingly and then see one that fairly bristles with leaders, and which looks particularly good, notwithstanding, do not go home and ever after write ten per cent. story and ninety per cent. leader. Study why the over-leaded story was pleasing. In a similar position use leaders. At other times use them as sparingly as is possible with clarity maintained.

If you see a scene that seems to be a little more than a landscape gem, do not figure that scenics must be added to all scripts. Tell yourself that there are times when a landscape scene may help to ease the action down to normal and then do not try to overboil all your action just to have an excuse for writing in a pretty scene that means nothing. And above all, do not put into your head the notion that your stuff is better than the stuff that sells. It may be that your stuff appeals to you more, but if you can write better stuff, you can sell it, at least now and then. The greatest curse the young writer has is this self praise. It is deadly to ambition and effort. There is no use writing better than you are writing if your work is already better than what is written, but don't get the idea that it is better.

Writing Action.

From far-off California, but away from the picture belt, comes this inquiry:

> I'm an embryo writer—of thirty some odd—old enough to have some idea of my limitations, and to keep in bounds.
>
> Besides your Technique and The World, what books would you advise me to study in order to get started right? I have E. H. Ball's "Art of the Photoplay," and think I have gotten some good pointers out of it.
> What I want particularly to know is, how to present the story to the editor so that he will want to read it. I have the impression that a lot of stuff is never read—perhaps "stuff" is kee-rect and it does not deserve reading. But granting that the story is good and that the "mechanics" are reasonably satisfactory. I notice most of Ball's scenes are written so that the conversation between the players suggests the action. For instance, Ball writes, "Enter brother, who tells her to cheer up. He has an idea. Asks if she would like to square things with the Count, etc., etc." I can not write that way. When I write a scene the conversation is a secondary matter. I see the action as though the screen were before me,—all the little actions and facial expressions, the positions of the hands, the poise and turnings of the body, all the little "business" that affects and expresses the emotions and relations between the players, and tells the story. To have to write it like the above example would make it entirely ineffective. To illustrate, I give the following extract from one of my scenarios:

The extract is too long to be given here. It runs 34 lines, though a part of this space is taken by a diagram of the crosses (the movements of the players about the stage.) The script does not say that the gentleman kisses the lady's locks. It says "he kisses her shining hair with his thick lips." The script of action has the real literary flavor. It is descriptive matter that with slight amplification could be lifted into a novel. But the director doesn't want to read a novel. He does not want to pause and appreciate niceties of phrasing and construction. He wants to know what it is that the scene is all about.

Eustace Hale Ball is an old hand at the writing game. He is one of the few who can write a good dime novel (and few can) or he can write pretentious stuff. But he writes action when he writes photoplay, because whatever tendency toward literature in the script he may have had was beaten out of him when he was an editor for Eclair and others.

As Arthur D. Hotaling said very lately, the author who does not know the photoplay stage may write a beautifully planned scene, every action being planned to get the most minute detail. "But," added the director, "perhaps the man who puts the story on sees that if he has grand piano up stage on the right instead of down stage in the center he can make the point with greater dramatic force. He moves the piano to get the effect. Now, every bit of business as planned by the author is all wrong because the piano is in the way."

We believe—and we hope—that the time will come when the author will be able to write the action in detail, but we know that until a scene has been made it is always possible to change for the better. It cannot be inflexible.

If you wish to make the editor want to read the story, give him the best synopsis you know how. If you can do that you will have his interest and the brief planned action will amplify itself into something that perhaps even the author did not dream of.

And then the inquirer adds:

> I have rewritten the 80 scenes of this play six times and every revision has improved it. When I send my name into the studios, I want my effort to denote intelligence.

That's the idea. Have merit your trade mark and you'll win.

How Does It Help?

Here is an extract from a letter:

> These manuscripts may appear to be in rather vague form, but since I had them typewritten I acquired a better knowledge. I don't believe you will reject these, as both have superb themes. * * * Would you be so kind as to give me a little encouragement, as I have the talent for this work.

In other words the man knows that the scripts are faulty, yet he expects a company to purchase them because he had them typed and does not want to go to the expense of retyping. He wants to sell them because he says they are superb, and he wants to be encouraged because he knows he is talented.

Editors are in the business to buy good work, not faulty work, and they encourage those who try, not those who beg for sympathy. How does it help the sale of a script for the writer to admit that it is not his best?

Optimism.

Since it was announced that the Famous Players was buying a little from the outside, many requests have been received for the address of the company, which is not given in its advertisements. Most of them were from persons whose very letters showed their unfitness for the work. Famous Players wants stuff equal to the book stories they have been making. They do not want one reels strung out into five or six or the half formed ideas of the novices. They want really big stuff and it is a waste of postage to offer less.

As we feared, the novices are taking an almost hectic interest in the page to a scene idea. The discussion was started for the benefit of those who knew, but the little writer who knows there must be something the matter with his form because there positively can be nothing wrong with the idea is getting worried.

In the first place, the page to a scene does not mean that a whole sheet of typewriter paper is used. The sheets range from quarter to half size. Some are ruled for scene, leader, costumes and action. Some are unruled. One of the veteran writers uses ordinary pads which he has punched to fit a loose leaf cover about four and a half by six inches. He types the scene at the top and then notes the action. It may run a hundred or a hundred and fifty words or may be merely a memorandum. One page lately merely read "This is the scene where Jane meets Henry." Another form runs the cutbacks as a single scene and draws a line where the breaks are to come. Ninety per cent. of the page to a scene books are copied from the old-fashioned continuity of action.

This is a matter with which the outside author has little or nothing to do. The page to a scene is valuable to him only in that it permits him to add to or subtract from scenes in the trial script without having to recopy an entire page. He should copy these loose leaf scenes into a continuity of action when he has it right and the director will fix up his own book. Let's talk about something else for a change.

Imagination.

Positively the greatest need in the scripts of today is a greater proportion of imagination. It is not possible to follow old and hackneyed lines. It is not possible to sell stuff that closely follows 99 per cent. of all similar ideas that have gone before. The man and woman who get the chance now are the ones who can take the commonplace and raise it to the ideal through imagination and ingenious development.

Before photoplays were produced, all ideas were new to photoplay. But a hundred plays more or less, probably more, have been written on the subject of the libertine who unknowingly has fallen in love with his own daughter. Imagination must now take this theme and so elaborate and expand it that it is no longer the same story, but something wholly and entirely new. It must offer all new factors.

Almost any half-trained imagination can now conceive the idea of the father in love with his own natural daughter. It takes a higher imagination to evolve a situation in which a boy and girl fall in love with each other, the respective parents not knowing that the children are half related.

Anyone can conceive the once popular idea of the child stolen by gypsies to reappear and be recognized in later life. That was popular long before "The Bohemian Girl" was written, to trace it back to its most usual source. But the trained imagination will steal the child, bring back a second and hold the real claimant in reserve for new and fresher complications.

In other words you must work harder today than you did two or three years ago if you want to make sales, but the stories will be paid for on a more generous scale and so the extra work is repaid.

Synopsis Only.

Recently circumstances have made it expedient for us to write synopses only instead of putting down all the action before it is shown. This is because we submit six or eight ideas a week and develop the best one of the lot. And we have found that it is seldom that the finished story very markedly resembles the synopsis and once the most promising idea went all to pieces when we tried to make it into a play. The synopses have been brief, it is admitted, much shorter than the usual synopsis when unaccompanied by the action, but the important fact is that the synopsis is in no way the guage of excellence, and the synopsis that is not made from a full plot of action is utterly worthless to the beginner as a study in plotting.

This is what we have always contended and with this contention most practical editors have agreed, but now we speak by the book and not from theory.

Handy.

If your desk facilities are limited get a paperoid or fiberoid or any kind of "oid" envelopes large enough to contain the regulation sheet without folding. Keep your papers in these, each lot by itself. They take up less room than typewriter paper boxes, will expand to fit your needs and can be used for months without wearing out.

Small Casts.

Now and then some photoplay author proudly announces that he has written a play with but three or four characters. He announces the fact with pride. Then he wonders why he does not sell it. He has been told that the best play centers the interest in one or two characters and holds the action to not more than five. Here he is within the limit and no extra people. The story can be put on for almost nothing.

That's just the trouble. Most of the men in the picture business want quantity as well as quality. They want to feel that they are buying what cost something to make. They want to see more people. They want to see a number of sets. They want stuff that does not look cheap and economical, and so, no matter what the value of the story may be, the picture with too small a cast or with any evident money saving attachment is avoided by the editors as a rule.

By all means hold the major cast to as few persons as possible, the hero, heroine and villain, with one or two more, perhaps, but do not have the girl answer the door to save the expense of the maid, or let the hero drive his own car to keep a chauffeur out of the cast. Do not deliberately try to spend money, but do not try to save it. Try, instead, to make a picture look as though it cost double what it does. That's one of the selling tricks.

There are ways of saving money without seeming to. Suppose that the heroine's father kills himself and you bring a crowd into the house. Perhaps they force their way in from the street, attracted by the shot, or perhaps they are guests at a ball who come rushing in. Plan to work the extra people in few sets. If they are in the ball room, work them in the ball room and library. Do not run them through a hall and down a flight of stairs just to get more action. The ball room, the library, the flat hall and the stairs will not all be set at the same time. One or perhaps two will be set, but it is seldom that a director can have four sets standing on the floor at the same time. Using people in four sets may involve their employment for two days where by using them in the ball room and library sets alone they can be worked in one day, saving from two to five dollars apiece for each person, since these two sets can be worked in a day and the hall and stairway be used the next day with only the regular cast.

In the same way if you show a garden party with action in the house as well, keep the extras out in the open unless they are actually needed in the house. Then they can be worked in the exterior locations and the next day the inside scenes can be picked up with the regulars They cannot as a rule work both in one day since the location may be several miles from the studio where the interiors are played off.

Getting down even finer, perhaps the maid is given a bit of big business just because she happens to be in the cast. That bit may not only hold her over from day to day, but will require the employment of a five dollar player instead of a two or three dollar player, since she must be able to act her bit, though any girl could play the part with this one scene out.

These are some of the little points that make it more economical to take a script from a trained writer at one hundred dollars than an amateur idea for fifteen.

Plotting.

If you had an automobile chassis you would not regard it as complete until you built a body on it and even then the automobile journals will tell you of half a hundred things you can add from flower vases to one-man tops. If you had the frame work of a house you would want to put on the siding, set in doors and windows, put in floors and lights and plumbing, plaster the walls, add furniture and all that and still your wife will be pulling wires for a pergola and things like that.

But if you get the basis of a plot, you hustle over to the machine, write it out and then spoil your young life and your chances of salvation by damning the editors for not being able to see the story.

A plot is like the automobile chassis or the framework of the house. It is merely something on which you can build a complete structure. Starting with a chassis, you can build a seat from an old soap box and make it run. You can put a temporary sheathing on the house. It will do, but it will not be as good as a seven passenger body or a shingled house.

It is the same with a plot. It may be crude, almost a makeshift, or it may be something so excellent that editors will wonder and directors rejoice. It is all up to you.

And just remember that the man who built your automobile body did not learn in a day and that the man who puts the finishing touches to your house has served his apprenticeship. If you want to build plots you must first learn how and then gain proficiency through practice.

The true art of writing photoplay lies not in getting the plot so much as in developing the plot once the groundwork is obtained.

Take your plot and fix it up by adding factors, just as you put doors and windows and floors and furniture to the house frame. Do not suppose that at this late day you can possibly sell the bare outline of a plot. It must be well rounded and complete. It must have novel features and offer new thoughts. It must contain not only plot but the incident that rounds out the plot.

You cannot announce in a leader that John Smith is a miser. Add some action that shows that he is a miser. Do not merely announce that Henry Jones is a thief. Advance some action other than an actual theft to give color to the statement. Do not drive from the first premise to the climax with no relieving incident. Embroider your facts with related incident, matter that sustains and amplifies the demonstration of your story.

At first this will be difficult, but with constant and assiduous practice and with a proper supply of working plots, facility will be developed and you will not think in outlines but in full form, you will think not plots but the stories built around plots.

Then, and not until then, may you call yourself an author. Then and not until then will you have passed your apprenticeship.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important! Operators Notice!

THIS DEPARTMENT has received such an enormous number of kicks about the poor inspection of films that I am going to make you the following proposition. I am doing this at the request of one of the largest film manufacturers in the country. Where you find evidence of poor inspection, cut out the faulty part, or the poor splices, and forward them to me, with the data as to what day the films were received, and what exchange they were received from. You may either sign the letter, or sign your name on a separate slip of paper, and enclose a stamped, blank envelope. I will then forward the whole thing to the headquarters of the company handling that exchange, with request they investigate the matter, and remedy whatever is wrong with the inspection in their exchange. Now please understand that I must have the following data: First: What make of film is it; second: Does it come from a Universal, a General Film, a Mutual, or an independent exchange; third: What day was it received? Don't mix up bad patches, or other faults, cut from several reels. If you take out faults from several reels, put each one in a separate envelope and mark them with the name of the film, when the film was receivd, and what exchange it came from; or, if you cannot use so many envelopes, pin the pieces of film together and attach a tag; also don't forget the postage, because, while I am willing to do this, I cannot pay out two or three dollars a day in postage to accomplish even as great a good as I hope will result from this proposition.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail, on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 101.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What, in your opinion, is the best form of condenser mount? Operators will please be careful in answering this question, as I intend presenting the replies to machine manufacturers, if there is a practical unanimity of opinion.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 95.

The Roll of Honor on this question consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York, and C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada.

The replies of Brothers Smith and Dann are selected for publication.

Reply to Question No. 95.

By Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas.

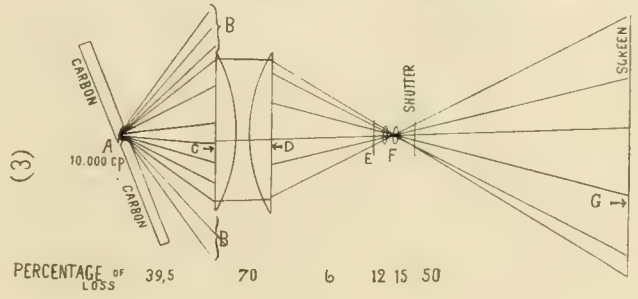
The Question:

What is axial spherical aberration, and what is its effect on the screen? Taking the total illumination of the crater as the basis, what losses of light occur between the crater of the carbon and the eye of the spectator in the audience.

The Answer:

Axial spherical aberration is that quality of an uncorrected lens which causes rays passing through its outer edge to focus at a point nearer the lens than will rays passing through points near its center. Parallel rays passing through the outer end of the lens are refracted more than are parallel rays passing through points nearer the center of the lens and this causes the above named condition.

As for the second part of the question, the diagram is self-explanatory. I have indicated the rays of light from crater to screen. There is a loss of 3,950 C. P. in the interior of the lamphouse walls. The loss in the objective lens is 1,081 C. P.; the shutter cuts 50 per cent. which equals 3,061.5 C. P., and 3,061.5, therefore, constitutes the screen illumination. The screen may be one which absorbs no light, or it may be one which absorbs a great deal of it. There is a loss of 39.5 between the crater and the condensers, or assuming the absorption to be 1,000 C. P. a loss of 3,950 C. P., leaving a total of 6,050 C. P. at the condenser. The condenser itself absorbs 70 per cent., or 4,235 C. P.



The film causes a loss of about 12 per cent., that is to say the celluloid, and the loss in the objective lens is 15 per cent.

[I have not gone over Brother Smith's figures, but I think his percentages are reasonably correct. The amount of light lost in the lamphouse itself would, I should imagine, be rather hard to determine.

The answer by C. A. Dann, Toronto, came late, and while it gives no detailed data, is so complete in indicating the various elements producing light loss that it is appended hereto.—Editor.]

Answer to Question No. 95.

By C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada.

(a) A lens that has axial spherical aberration is one that brings the rays of light refracted through its outer edge to different focal points than those projected near its center or axis. The results of axial spherical aberration in the condenser, as far as the screen is concerned, will in some cases probably be a loss in intensity of illumination, a waste of light, and in some cases the purity of the light may be affected, and a ghost appear on the screen.

(b) The first loss of light I would suggest would be those rays which are thrown into and absorbed by the sides of the crater of the carbon; the second, those rays which are cast outside the circumference of the condenser onto the front wall of the lamphouse; the third, those rays reflected back by the back condenser; the fourth, those rays absorbed by the glass of the condensers; the fifth, those rays thrown against the edges of the slide carrier; the sixth, the rays thrown into and absorbed by the metal of the hood; the seventh, those rays intercepted by the cooling plate at the aperture; the eighth, the rays absorbed by the dark portions of the film; the ninth, all rays absorbed by the glass of the objective system; the tenth, those rays absorbed by the screen; the eleventh, those rays absorbed by foreign matter, such as dust in the air of the theater; the twelfth, those rays which are killed or neutralized by the house lighting system, or light admitted from outside.

[How about the light cut by the revolving shutter, friend Dann? Guess that's one on you.—Editor.]

In a Hurry.

Just before the second edition was entirely exhausted the following was received from G. M. W. Richmond, Geneseo, New York:

> Enclosed find money order for $2.75 for a copy of the second edition of the "Handbook for Operators and Managers," and a copy of the question booklet. This is the second Handbook I have purchased. The first I loaned to a friend, and he apparently has taken a great fancy to it. I have been without my book now for some little time, and would request that you rush this order as fast as possible; also please advise me when my subscription to the "World" expires.

I print this merely to show that operators who have purchased the Handbook and know what is in it don't care to be without it. The second edition is, as I have said, all gone. I hope I will be able to release the third edition by January 1st, but that, of course, remains to be seen. If you could see the stack of Handbook manuscript piled up around me you would wonder if it would ever be finished, and, frankly, sometimes when I look at the mess on my desk in the morning I wonder where I had better start in. The desk is full of it! one filing case is full of it; the shelves are full of it, and my secretary dreams of it by night, while by day she snaps her teeth at me when I even mention Handbook. (She says if that is a fact her teeth will soon be worn out, for I am mentioning it all the time.)

Power's 6-B

For some time past the editor has understood that the Nicholas Power Company was at work on new equipment. Recently he was summoned to the office of that distinguished corporation and invited to "look things over."

The looking-over process was a most agreeable surprise. The stand, lamphouse and take-up have been vastly improved—so much so that it is a newly-designated apparatus.

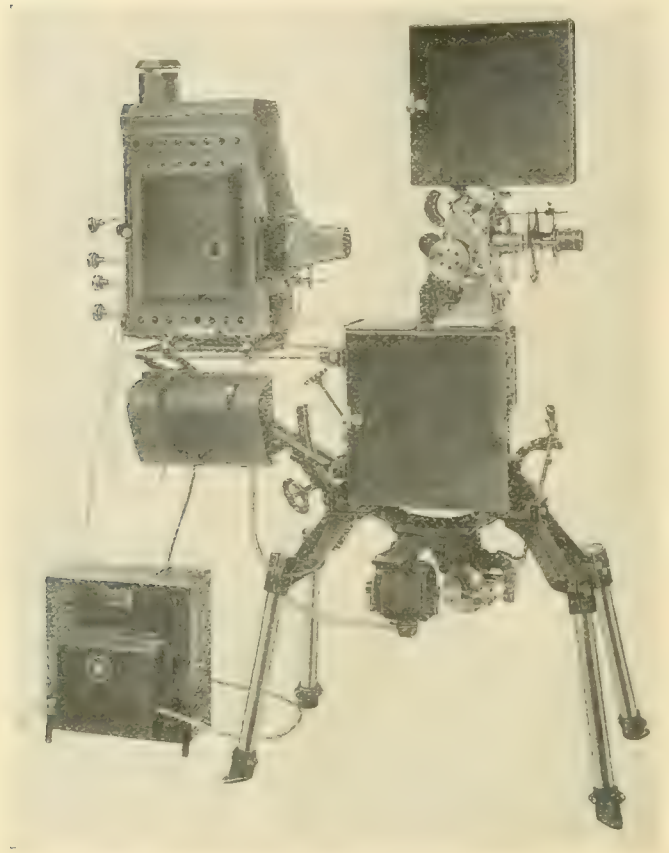


Fig. 1. Model 6B in Level Position.

Starting at the top of the lamphouse, the perforated metal has been removed, and the form of the top has been changed to a sort of mansard roof affair, see Fig. 1, with a 4-inch open flue in the top near the back end. About 2 inches underneath the top of the lamphouse, in which is the flue opening, there is a partition, indicated by dotted line, Fig. 1, and heavy black line, Fig. 2, which extends from the back end to within 3 inches of the front end, so that the heat must pass around through the duct thus formed in order to reach the flue. Under the condenser is a sort of extension, 1 inch wide and open at the bottom, the bottom being guarded by perforated metal. This serves the double purpose of providing an air inlet exactly where it is needed, and allowing the lamp to be shoved further forward without bringing the bottom carbon arm into contact with the front lamphouse wall. Immediately over the condenser is another air chute extending up nearly to the top of the lamphouse, with an opening at its upper end. This is designed to allow the hot air from the condenser to pass into the top of the lamphouse and out through the afore-mentioned flue, which latter is presumed to be connected to a 4-inch pipe leading up into the operating room ventilating flue, thus carrying away practically all of the heat of the arc. The doors of the lamphouse have undergone a radical change. They are now embossed to a depth of $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches, and have an inner metal lining, with an air space of about $\frac{1}{4}$ of an inch between the inner and outer wall, the whole resulting in a very stiff double door, and one well calculated to prevent the radiation of heat.

The condenser casing is now made of cast metal, a very decided improvement over the old style sheet metal affair. The lens itself is held in an improved metal keeper. The condenser mount now is in about as good form as it can well be gotten without going directly into the heavier metal mounts which have been recommended by this department.

The magazine doors are provided with an improved catch, an improved fire-trap, and with a keeper to prevent the door from swinging backward when it is open. As it is now, the door can only swing at right angles with the magazines. The lower magazine has also been provided with an improved catch and keeper, but it is in the stand that we meet the most radical change.

The improved stand sets level all the time, the only use for the adjustable legs being to enable the operator to set his machine at any desired height. The upper part of the stand, as now made, rocks on the lower half. By loosening hand wheel A, Figs. 2 and 3, casting B is released from quadrant C, so that by turning hand wheel D the most minute change in the pitch of the stand may instantly be made, and this may be done while the picture is being projected, without in any way interfering with the result on the screen, except to move the whole picture up or down. The machine may, by this arrangement, be rocked from a position where it is actually projecting upward, to an angle which will cause a downward pitch in the projection of almost 35 degrees. When the desired angle is attained, hand wheel A, Fig. 2 and 3, is tightened, and this holds the whole thing rigidly in place. Bolts E-E-E, Fig. 3, work in slots. Behind these studs are heavy coil springs which, together with a hub-mounting on lower section, holds the upper casting carrying the mechanism, lamphouse, etc., snugly to the lower casting, yet allowing of the angle of the machine being altered at any time merely by loosening hand wheel A and adjusting wheel D.

By this arrangement the motor always sets in a level position. This is a decided advantage. The take-up pulley is designed to carry a round belt, and is approximately $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter. A friction disc of similar diameter is rigidly attached to this spindle carrying the lower, or take-up reel. Between the pulley and disc is a fibre washer which, in operation, is clamped between one side of the pulley on one side of the friction disc, the three parts being held together, under pressure, by a coil spring. This form of construction provides a very much larger friction surface than was had with the old style take-up, in consequence of which it may be set much more loosely. The advantage in this is that, with ample friction surface, when the tension is set to provide sufficient pull to take up the entire reel of film, the initial pull on the film at starting is considerably less than when the small-friction-surface take-up is used. Inasmuch as great damage is done to film by excessive pull at the beginning of the run, the decrease in pull made possible by the improved take-up is a thing which will be beneficial to the entire business.

In addition to the foregoing, the 6B equipment will include many refinements in the mechanism. These having been gradually effected, as experience demonstrated their need, and opportunity permitted, their incorporation. Some of them have been in use for a considerable time, but a portion were recently designed, specially to become a part of the 6B equipment. They are thirteen in number, as follows:

1. The No. 602 top casting was changed for the purpose of making same heavier and more rigid so as to avoid any vibration of the upper magazine.
2. The No. 605 stereo holder was improved, giving same all universal adjustments.
3. The No. 607 stereo collar casting can now be used for either quarter or half size lenses.
4. The No. 641 large idler gear spindle was lengthened for purpose of adapting same for a double bearing.
5. The No. 641 bearing and oil tubes were added to the mechanism, giving an extra bearing to large idler gear and spindle.

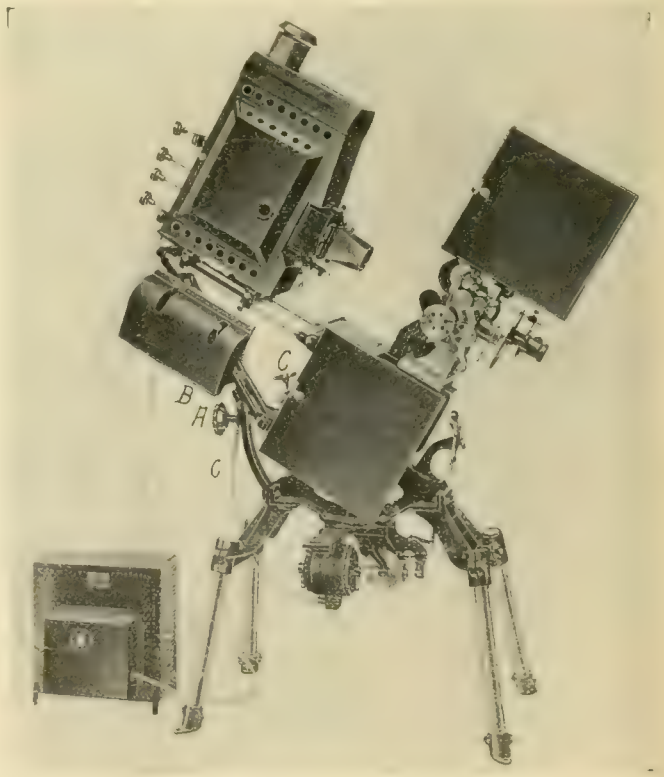

Fig. 2. Model 6B in Tilted Position.

6. The form of No. 669 apron for intermittent sprocket was changed to prevent the wear of the hooks on the sprocket teeth.
7. Side of the No. 706—a lower fire-shield now perforated so that the operator can continually see the lower loop of the film.
8. Now using an extra apron on top of mechanism in order to prevent film from winding on upper sprocket.

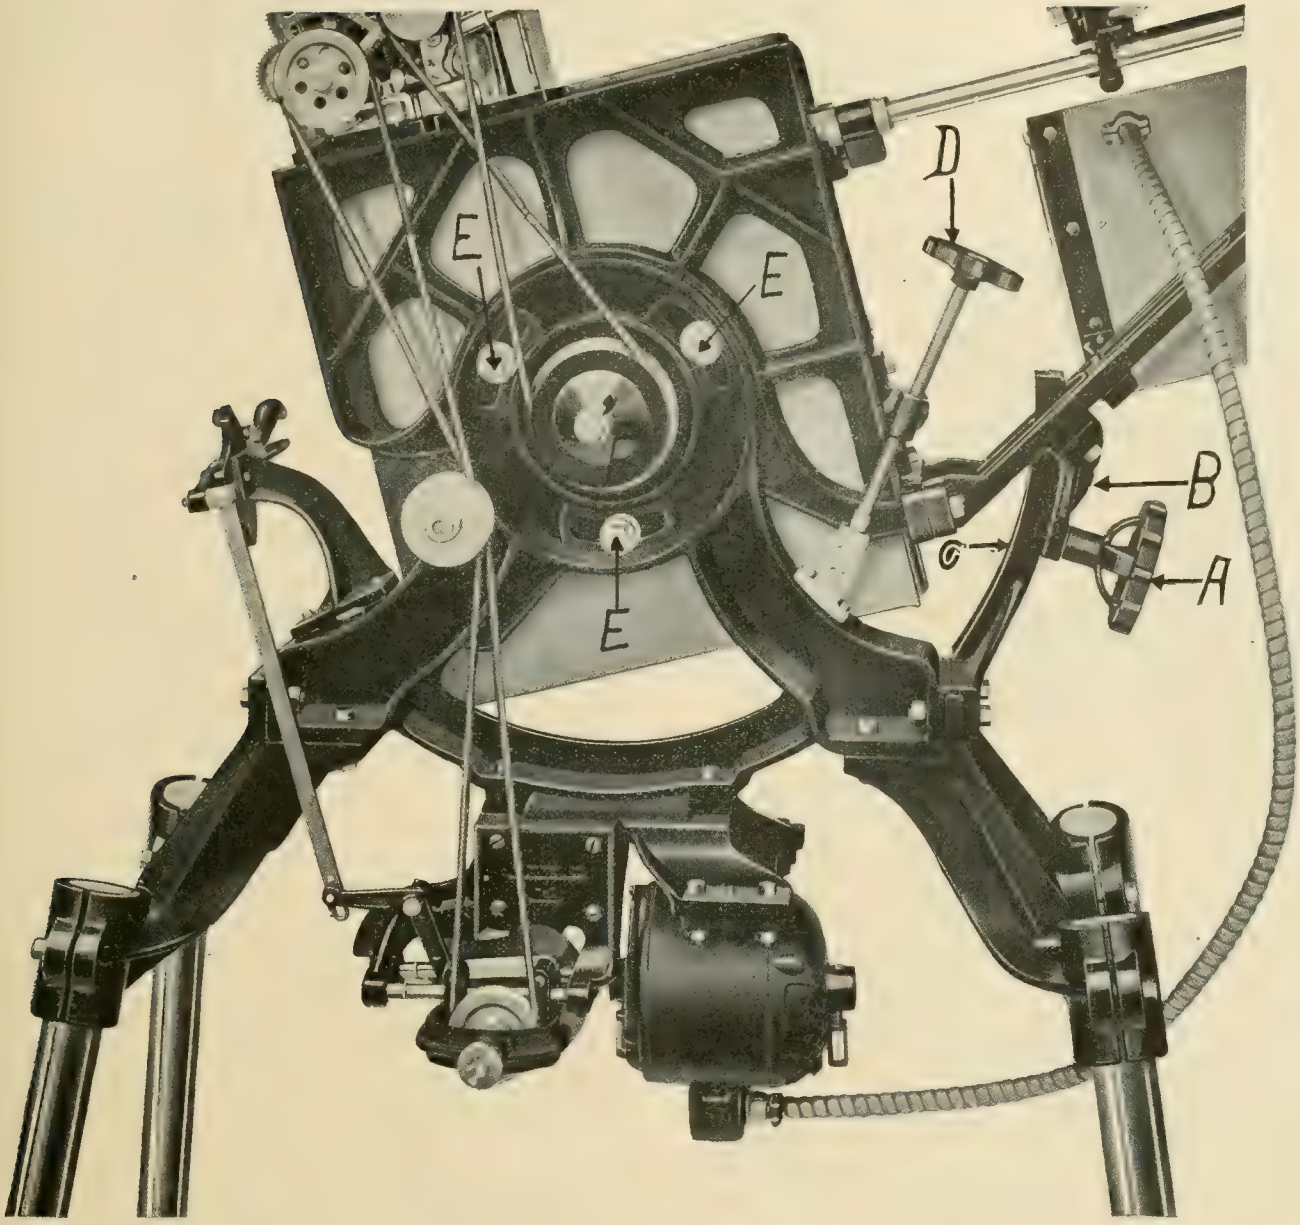

Fig. 3. Side View of 6B, Showing Tilting Mechanism.

9. All driving gears made of bronze.

10. Change made on the loop setter fork, putting a hand adjustment on same so as the operator can easily retain his lower loop if the automatic adjustment should fail.

11. All lamp houses are now equipped with the new style adjustable condenser mount, made of heavy cast iron and adjusting on sliding rods at each end.

12. On the arc lamps now using a 5/16-inch wing nut and stud in place of a machine screw and hexagon nut, for the purpose of locking the carbon holder and to keep same firm and steady.

13. A change has been made on the arc lamp by replacing the pins in the No. 813 main lateral adjusting castings and the No. 825 upper carbon slide castings by two fork shaped steel forgings. The purpose of this change was to lengthen the life of the No. 815, side adjusting sleeve, through which this forging slides. This will put the greater wearing area on the forging in place of on the pin and sleeve. The comparative wearing area between the forging and the pin has been lowered to about one hundredth part.

He Explodes.

R. S. Yancy, Decatur, Illinois, says:

> This is my first "explosion," though I have been a reader of our department for a number of years. Have read, with much interest, Carl Laemmle's views of film damage on the part of operators; also your war against poor inspection. I cannot see where that will help a great deal, as the bad patches are not made in the exchanges. Why correct an outrage? Why not make it so unpleasant for the punks who make those patches that there would be no such thing as an inspection department needed. If every operator did his work right film would last longer and be in better condition. No one knows as well as an operator when a thick patch or bad sprocket holes go through the machine, and the places where the film has been wet and the emulsion smeared, and he should remove these faults right then and there It seems that as it is the operator who makes the bad patches, mis-frames, and does many other things he ought not to do, he is, therefore, the one to get after.

Sorry, Brother Yancy, but I am afraid your explosion went off half cocked. I don't agree with you. Quite true many operators make poor patches; also it is quite true that many operators make poor patches for the very simple reason that they don't have the time to make good ones, and that is the manager's fault. Also it is quite true that many of the mis-frames, stiff patches, mismatched sprocket holes, etc., are the product of the twelve-year-old usher, who knows as much about patching film as a cat knows about ice cream, and has just about the same amount of interest in his work as a razor back swine has in the hereafter, which fault must also be laid, not to the operator, but to the theater manager.

But even granting that all you say to be true ,there is no use in pursuing a vision or chasing a rainbow. You cannot prevent the operator or reel boy from doing these things, but we can compel the exchange to keep reels in at least fairly good repair. That is what they are paid to do. It is presumed to be included in the price of the service, therefore why go after the operator? That end of it is up to the film exchange. If the film exchange manager exercised ordinary common sense, and followed good business methods, he would not only have the films thoroughly inspected and repaired, but he would require the inspector to keep a record of all repairs made on every reel, and then he could very quickly tell which theater, or, if you please, which operator or reel boy was doing the damage. It would then be an easy matter to get after that theater and force it to mend its ways. No, Friend Yancy, you are wrong, from any and every point of view. The film exchange has the right to demand of the theater that it treat the goods entrusted to it with reasonable care, and pay for any excess damage, but, on the other hand, the theater has an absolute right to demand that the films be sent to it in good condition free from misframes, broken sprocket holes, mis-matched sphocket holes, stiff, wide patches, etc., and the operator has at least the moral right to refuse to make repairs on a film, other than damage caused by himself, unless he be paid overtime for doing it.

Picture Shooters.

Harry Everhart, Greenville, Ohio, writes:

Here is a photograph of two very brilliant I. A. T. S. E. operators of the National theater, Greenville, Ohio. The one at the right is Yours Truly, who has been operating for five years, and the Power's SixA is my favorite. The other uses Harold Cochran for a handle.

I am running the photograph because plenty of people will be glad to know what a genuine smile looks like. You are wearing a variety of standing collar that is fashionable in Louisiana. Are all the Ohio operators as affectionate as these two, I wonder. Plainly the one in the chair likes to be loved. Observe his look of joy.

Local No. 273.

Brother L. Phillips, president of Local 273, New Haven, Conn., was a visitor at the editor's sanctum recently. The editor is counting his minutes, like a miser counts his gold, these days, but, nevertheless, was glad to give a few of them to Friend Phillips, because he represents a live wire union, and a union which contains at least a leavening of high class men.

Brother Phillips informs me the local is progressive, and that in his opinion it is unwise for any local to depend wholly and simply on the power of might to improve conditions, meaning by this that the men should enedavor to improve themselves in their craft, and thus be in a position to demand high salaries on the grounds that they can, will, and do deliver high class results on the screen. In pursuance of this idea President Phillips is examining into the various avenues of projection knowledge, the idea being to induce the entire membership of Local 273 to participate in a course of study along the lines of electrics, optics, and other things pertaining to projection. Brother Phillips hopes the day will come when every member of the New Haven local will be justly entitled to style himself a projection engineer.

That kind of proposition certainly has the strongest possible approval of this department, which has long contended that, whereas the operator is unquestionably entitled to increased salary—in fact in many sections of the country to two or three times what he is now getting, still, in order to be justified in demanding better salaries it is necessary that he improve his knowledge, and improve the results he is putting on the screen.

It certainly would sound strange to a manager who really knows his business to be asked to pay his operator twenty-five, thirty, or forty dollars a week, when that operator could not give him an intelligent answer to, for instance, the question: "What optical principles are involved in the revolving shutter of your mechanism?"

We wish President Phillips all possible success in his campaign of and for education of the operators of his local. The union is fortunate in having as its official head a man who has such thoroughly progressive ideas, and I want to say right now that at any time this department can be of any service to Local 273, or its president, that fact only has to be made known. It is a pleasure to help those who are willing to try to help themselves.

Screens.

A. F. Davis, Perry, New York, says:

> Noticed A. A. Lemmert's article in August 7th issue, concerning stippled screens, and thought perhaps I might be able to help him. Have just returned home from Erie, Pa., where I installed the operating room in a new theater, the "Crescent," located at 548 West 18th street, owned and managed by Mr. H. E. Hammond. The throw is 118 feet, and he uses D. C. through an A. C. to D. C. Fort Wayne compensarc. I advised him to purchase a Mirroroid screen, as I have used one and found it to be excellent, but he said he would first try out a scheme of his own. On a plaster wall he spread a coat of flarine, consisting of zinc mixed with water. This was mixed as thickly as it could be spread, and another man followed with a soft bristle brush, 4 x 8 inches square, and stippled the surface. The stippling covered up all trace of the laps. After it had dried, which took about twenty-four hours he applied another coat, and this was repeated until he had put on three coats, each coat being stippled. The result was a flat, white surface, thickly covered with what you might describe as minute "craters," or little, round depressions. The flarine being mixed with water instead of oil gives a flat, while surface with no gloss, and when the picture was projected to it I certainly was surprised. With 30 amperes we got a sharp, brilliant picture, free from haze, and with good detail and depth. There was no distortion when viewed from the side seats, but the house is only 27 feet wide. I think, however, there would have been none to speak of in a much wider auditorium. I have always been a booster for the Mirroroid screen, but I had to remove my hat to Mr. Hammond's home-made curtain.

I certainly would like to see that surface. Dry zinc mixed with water (I did not know it would mix with water) ought to make about as white a surface as one could procure. As to the stippling idea, well that was one of my own, and, frankly, I was not sure it would work out to advantage. Yet, I would like to see that screen, and would like to see it very much.

Poor Patches.

T. K. Wood, Ardmore, Oklahoma, says:

> Here is one of the many patches I cut out of the two-reel Thanhouser, "Crossed Wires," July 29th. The sample seen ought to be enough to satisfy anyone as to the kind of would-be operator who runs these films ahead of your Humble Servant. I have been an operator for approximately four years, and previous to that served more than a year's apprenticeship before I was ever left alone in an operating room. I read the department every week, and the more I read it the more I want to do so, because it has helped me to figure out many things in the line of my profession. Am very anxious to know the result of the light ray experiments. In closing I wish the best of success to you and our department.

It is hardly necessary to comment on the splice. It measures exactly ¾ of an inch wide, and the gentleman who made it has actually scraped off the emulsion from the entire ¾ of an inch. Even so, it pulled apart with perfect ease, because he had not scraped the back side of the celluloid on the other end, and had applied very little pressure in making the patch; also, probably the cement was not of the best. Brother Wood has taken the right course. He served a year's apprenticeship, and he is using his brains as well as his hands. He is not ashamed to gather in all the knowledge available, and that is what makes a successful man, not only in operating but in any other of the many walks of life.

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS in cinematography addressed to this department will receive carbon copy of the department's reply by mail when four cents in stamps are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which cannot be replied to in this department, $1.00.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is a rule of this department that no apparatus will be recommended editorially until the value of such appliances have been demonstrated to its editor.

Valuable Formula Booklet.

A BOOKLET of formulas used in cinematography is issued for free distribution to any motion picture worker who is sufficiently interested to write for a copy by the Berlin Aniline Works, 213-215 Water Street, New York City. Not only does it contain formulas for the development of Eastman film but also for the leading brands made by foreign manufacturers. In addition to developing formulas there are numbers of tested recipes with directions for use under the following heads: Fixing baths, Reducers, Intensifiers, Toning, Tinting, Color toning. A number of common troubles which occur in the use of films are discussed and remedies suggested while the back of the booklet gives a number of valuable miscellaneous formulae and tables for the conversion of metric measures to English and vice-versa. It should be a valuable booklet to any cameraman or factory worker.

What Lens?

F. A. A., San Antonio, Texas:

> Incloses a cut clipped from the Moving Picture World reproducing a scene from the Pathe serial, "Who Pays," and asks "kindly let me know what kind of a lens is used in this picture for close up scene."

The clipping is a reproduction of an ordinary still picture, such as is made in all studios for advertising and publicity work. Still camera and still picture are expressions used in moving picture studios to distinguish an ordinary camera and an ordinary photograph from a moving picture camera and a moving picture.

As I do not know what sort of an outfit was used by the photographer who made this picture, it is impossible to say exactly what kind of a lens was used. There are a great many different makes of lenses used on still cameras, but it is probable that F. A. A. wishes to know the lens used in this moving picture camera. In that case it was probably a Zeiss Tessar f 3.5 or a Voigtlander Heliar f 4.5, or perhaps a Goerz Kino Hypar f 3.5.

Books on Cinematography.

R. E. M., Mobile, Alabama, writes:

> I have been an operator for a number of years and have been more or less interested in motion picture photography and have at last decided to try and get a camera, but being inexperienced in this line I am at loss of what kind of camera to get. Could you recommend a good camera, one that will stand a good deal of wear and take a good picture, for an amateur?
> Is there any good book on Motion Picture Photography? If so, please give publisher's name and price of same if possible.

There are a number of good cameras advertised in the Moving Picture World. Write to the agents or manufacturers for catalogues and decide for yourself from their description what machine is best suited for your use.

There are no books published which can be highly recommended for the amateur cinematographer. The three following books are probably the best published at the present time in this country. They are:

Practical Cinematography and Its Application ($1.10). Moving Pictures, How They are Made and Worked ($1.50). Both by Frederick A. Talbot J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia, publishers.

Cyclopedia of Motion Picture Work, by David S. Hulfish ($4.00). American School of Correspondence, Chicago, publishers.

Experience, But No Position.

Frank E. Art, Chicago, Illinois, says:

> In your new position you will doubtless have many inquiries for cameramen and I will be highly pleased if you will give me your assistance. I will tell you what I am up against. I am a mechanic and have put in about five years building motion picture apparatus. I have built dozens of cameras, printers, perforators, etc., and know how to handle dissolve, mask and trick work and get many results that the average cameraman cannot. I put in four years with Bell and Howell and one year with the American Cinematograph Company.
> Last summer my partner and I went into the film business and endeavored to take pictures. I say endeavored, because we tried real hard. Well, after spoiling several thousand feet of film and running into practically every obstacle known to a cameraman we finally were able to get a good negative under practically any condition. Then we ran into poor work at the various developing plants around town and finally wound up by doing our own work. This came easy, because my folks are still photographers. I also got formulas for toning and got some fine results.
> Then as business conditions got very bad and we were doing industrial work and taking a few features of important local happenings and booking same ourselves, we naturally ran out of money. Now it is impossible for me to find a cameraman's job. In fact people will not give me a trial unless I can show references, and when I tell them I was in business for myself and refer them to the people I did work for, they think I am a failure and will not give me a try-out. They don't realize that I have gone through the majority of knocks and bumps and with a little more development should make a good cameraman.
>
> You can see my position. I can take good pictures, I understand developing and printing and understand the mechanical end. I am sure I would make a good man for any studio, and I take the liberty of asking you for your advice in the matter of securing a position under the circumstances. I am not a fellow who never spoiled a negative. I have spoiled lots of them and paid for it myself in learning to take real pictures, and I believe that with the experiences I have gone through I will spoil less film and get better photgraphy than a man who has not been through the mill.
> I am anxious to get out with the camera again. I am a hustler, use good judgment and am a fellow who can get along with almost anyone.

Here is a man who seems to be running in hard luck, but I am sure that with the experience he seems to have had that he will land something good before long. Are you sure, Friend Art, that you have gone after a job hard enough? Surely there is some firm in Chicago which will give a man a chance to prove his ability, if not as a cameraman at least in one of the positions he seems capable of filling, and if he should take one of these minor positions and make good he should be able to create enough confidence in his employer to give him a chance for advancement.

Here's wishing you luck at any rate.

Operator Interested in Cinematography.

A. A., Bellefontaine, Ohio, says:

> I have just been reading your articles on Motion Picture Photography in the Moving Picture World and I am very much interested.
> I have been a projecting machine operator for over five years and have up to only a short time ago taken very little interest in the photographer or his work, but I have awakened to the fact that I have let the past five years slip by without gaining, or rather acquiring, any knowledge of photography whatsoever. In all this time I have been projecting the final result of the cameraman's art without any knowledge of the first principles of photography, but I would like to make a start and wish you would be kind enough to tell me of any book or books which I might buy which would give me the theory, or I might say technical side.
> I realize that I cannot learn this in a few short easy lessons, but I wish to start in at the beginning and study the various subjects relating to photography. I would like to qualify myself for a position in the technical part of a motion picture plant, and anything you may be inclined to suggest that I might procure or do to gain that end will be much appreciated.
> I am not looking for something easy with big pay and short hours, but am desirous of advancing myself in the motion picture field in any legitimate way possible.

It is interesting to hear of operators who realize what great assistance a knowledge of photgraphy might be to them in their work. There are numbers of machine operators who have become good cameramen. Many of them who do not care to leave their home town have made a substantial addition to their salary by buying a camera and taking topical news pictures and local events which were either sold to some of the weeklies or exhibited in their own local theaters.

A. A. will probably be able to find good works on photography in his local library and could purchase some of the books mentioned under "Books on Cinematography."

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

TWICE WON (Biograph), Aug. 23.—A masked lady figures prominently in this one-reel comedy, which is played by Charles Perley, Augusta Anderson and Kate Price. The course of true love runs along pleasantly for the spectator, if not smoothly for the characters in the story, and the acting makes the reel fairly enjoyable.

DOES THE WOMAN FORGET? (Essanay), Aug. 23.—Ruth Stonehouse, Edward C. Cobb and Wm. Belmont, present the problem unfolded by the action in this one-reel drama. A man of position flirts with a poor girl, then leaves her, and she marries a man in her own station of life. Does the woman forget the man of birth and breeding? The proposition is well put, if not the answer. Ruth Stonehouse is natural and convincing as the woman.

THE SPARK AND THE FLAME (Lubin), Aug. 23.—A poor but honest working girl, a well-dressed villain, and a down-and-out young chap in whose bosom the spark of manhood still burns, are the characters in this one-reel drama, which are taken by Dorothy Barrett, George Routh and Robert Gray. The story is an excellent one of its class, and is adequately performed.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 67 (Selig), Aug. 23.—A children's outing at Franklin Park, Boston; "Miss Detroit" winning the motorboat race, Port Washington, N. Y.; unveiling tablet to Lucy Stone, Orange, N. J.; Dr. Ann Shaw addressing the gathering; crack trapshooters contesting, Chicago; C. H. Newcombe wins the championship; baby zebra, Central Park, N. Y.; Moving Picture Theater Managers visit the Selig studio; aeroplane propeller tried out at Watertown, Mass.; Serbian war pictures; new park for National League, Boston; sailors from Atlantic Fleet hold athletic meet at Newport, and the fleet at anchor, are the news items in this number.

THE CUB AND THE DAISY CHAIN (Vitagraph), Aug. 23.—L. Case Russell is the author of this human and refreshing little one-reel comedy with a cub reporter as the hero. When it is stated that Sidney Drew plays the reporter and his better half is also in the cast, the quality of the acting needs no further endorsement.

HAM AND THE EXPERIMENT (Kalem), Aug. 24.—Ham and Bud make an important discovery in this one-reel comedy. A man can have too much of a good thing—even of popularity with the ladies. A love potion, injected into their veins, keeps them busy dodging smitten females, and furnishes a continuous string of laughs for the man-in-front.

DOG-GONE LUCK (Lubin), Aug. 24.—The correct character acting of James Levering, Vincent De Pascale, and Mabel Paige, gives the real Italian flavor to this one-reel comedy, written by Fred H. Hayn. The story is highly amusing. "The Victorious Jockey," a cartoon comedy by Vincent Whitman, is on the same reel.

THE DOUGHNUT VENDER (Selig), Aug. 24.—This one-reel drama tells a simple story, but one which strikes home. The picture of an aged woman bravely facing poverty for the sake of her little grandson, will find a host of sympathetic beholders. Eugenie Forde puts real feeling into the role, and is well supported by Robyn Adair as the warm-hearted Pete Rose.

THE FABLE OF "THE ROYSTERING BLADES" (Essanay), Aug. 25.—"One who would put Satan on the mat must get inside information at his training quarters," is the moral of this George Ade fable. Wallace Beery and Charles J. Stine are the two highly respected members of the celery belt who go to the wicked city and gather a large crop of information. The humor of the reel is a great provoker of chuckles.

CLOTHES MAKE THE MAN (Edison), Aug. 25.—How to make one pair of trousers cover two pairs of lower extremities is amusingly illustrated in this one-reel farce. Most of the incidents are novel, and the cast, headed by Raymond McKee, Yale Benner and Jean Dumar, keep the right tempo all through the performance.

A CITY RUBE (Vitagraph), Aug. 25.—This short-reel comedy makes up in laughs what it lacks in length. It has more fun to the square inch than many a two-reeler. Alfred Vosburgh is clever as the rube. "Pearls of the Baltic," a piece of educational, is on the same reel.

HIS BIRTHDAY GIFT (Biograph), Aug. 26.—A mild little one-reel romance, featuring Charles Perley and Augusta Anderson, this photoplay has the charm of a modest bunch of garden flowers, and will form an excellent contrast to the more stimulating numbers on a program.

THE DRUG CLERK (Essanay), Aug. 26.—The formula of this one-reel farce consists of burlesque acting 100 per cent. pure. Plot, incidents, and any loose bit of fun that came handy, have been shaken up together and labeled a specific for the blues. The article may be prescribed for the average audience.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 68 (Selig), Aug. 26.—An aviator from South America in flight at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, starts off this number. The reel also contains: Fatal fire, Houston, Tex.; Olympic games at the Exposition; on the battle line in France; opening of the new base ball park, Boston; scenes at Marietta and Atlanta, Ga., incidental to the lynching of Leo Frank; auto race, Elgin, Ill.; U. S. troops at Brownsville, Tex.

THE SHERIFF'S BABY (Biograph), Aug. 27.—A reissue of a D. W. Griffith production, this one-reel drama has a cast containing the names of Alfred Paget, Harry Cary, Henry B. Walthall, Lionel Barrymore, Joseph McDermott, Robert Harron, and Kate Bruce. The play tells a story of the western desert and pulsates with life.

HER RETURN (Essanay), Aug. 27.—In this one-reel drama G. M. Anderson appears as a man of wealth and breeding, who is won back to the path of sobriety and virtue by the birth of a son and heir. Mr. Anderson gives a forceful performance of his role, and is finely supported by Marguerite Clayton.

A BATTLE OF WITS (Kalem), Aug. 27.—There is plenty of good red blood in this one-reel re-issue, in which Alice Joyce plays the leading part. Other well-known names in the cast are Logan Paul, Tom Moore, Earle Foxe and Stuart Holmes.

THE MIRROR (Lubin), Aug. 27.—Shannon Fyfe and Lawrence McCloskey are the authors of this one-reel drama, which has been produced by Joseph Kaufman, and intrusted to a cast headed by Crane Wilbur, Ethel Clayton, Thurston Hall, and Bartley McCullum. The result is an excellent photoplay from every point of view.

THE WARDROBE WOMAN (Vitagraph), Aug. 27.—Kate Price as the whole-souled, level-headed Mary Mooney in this one-reel drama makes the character a living woman. The story reveals a certain phase of life behind the scenes with considerable fidelity, and has a strong heart interest. Mary Anderson, Billy Billings, Donald Hall and Geo. Debeck figure prominently in the cast.

THE WHIRLPOOL (Essanay), Sept. 4.—Reviewed by James McQuade on page 1663, issue of September 4.

THE VANDERHOFF AFFAIR (Kalem—Broadway Favorites), Sept. 6.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 1490, issue of August 28.

AMONG THOSE KILLED (Biograph), Sept. 6—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1492, issue of August 28.

A DIFFERENCE OF OPINION (Biograph), Sept. 7.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1324, issue of August 21.

OIL AND WATER (Biograph), Sept. 10.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1175, issue of August 14.

BREAKING THE SHACKLES (Edison), Sept. 11.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1665, issue of September 4.

THE NEED OF MONEY (Biograph), Aug. 28.—The incidents in this one-reel drama are not very plausible, but carry out the title forcibly and tell a sympathetic story. Irma Dawkins, Jack Mulhall and Gus Pixley supply an excellent quality of histrionic art.

MATILDA'S FLING (Edison), Aug. 28.—To call this one-reel drama a screen version of "The Old Homestead," with a female "Josh Whitcomb" for the leading character, would come very near the truth. The photoplay has many entertaining moments, and is cleverly acted by Jessie Stevens, Raymond McKee, John Sturgeon, Jean Dumar and the other members of the cast.

TRAIN ORDER NUMBER 45 (Episode No. 42 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Aug. 28.—In place of an "iron horse," Helen mounts a broncho during the action of this one-reel drama, and shows her skill at cowboy stunts. Life on the rail forms the background of the story, and its supply of excitement is never sidetracked or ditched. Miss Holmes, Rex Downs, Robyn Adair and G. A. Williams make up the picture's "crew."

BILLIE JOINS THE NAVY (Lubin), Aug. 28.—Lieut. J. C. McCracken, U. S. N., is the author of this one-reel farce. The action takes place on a battleship, where unexpected opportunities are found for Billie Reeves to tumble into comic mishaps. One of the best pictures of the series.

THE MASTER OF THE BENGALS (Selig), Aug. 28.—A den of Bengal tigers, an East Indian Rajah, a young American and a beautiful Princess are given prominence in this one-reel Jungle-Zoo drama. The story is romantic, well acted, and has been carefully produced. George Larkins, Sidney Smith, John Lancaster and Irene Wallace are in the cast.

General Film Company Specials.

THE GIRL WITH THE RED FEATHER (Selig), Aug. 23.—This two-reel drama, adapted from a story by Meredith Nicholson, is a rattling good detective play, in which several of the characters have the added grace of humor. In fact, it is a wealthy man's sense of the funny side of things which supplies the happy ending, and gives freshness and zest to the entire tale, without relaxing its strong dramatic grip. Edward J. Peil realizes the character perfectly. Bessie Eyton and Edwin Wallock are equally successful in their roles.

HEARTS AND ROSES (Essanay), Aug. 24.—Joseph A. Roach has put an excellent grade of drama into this three-reel photoplay. The story at all times commands respect, and serves to introduce Darwin Karr, the new Essanay leading man, most favorably. Beverly Bayne's gracious young womanhood and thoroughly dependable art are also of pronounced value to the picture. Herbert Haywood and Richardson Cotton are members of the well-selected cast.

FROM THE DREGS (Vitagraph), Aug. 24.—One of Jasper Ewing Brady's stories of army life, this two-reel drama is a vigorous and skilfully constructed piece of photoplay writing. Producer Lionel Belmore has maintained the atmosphere of battlefield and barracks with fidelity, and Darwin Karr, Ned Finley, Logan Paul and Eleanor Woodruff contribute a high grade of histrionic ability to the performance. Darwin Karr's embodiment of an army officer is a credit to his assumed profession.

A SPECIES OF MEXICAN MAN (Lubin), Aug. 25.—Romaine Fielding, who wrote, produced and plays the leading part in this three-reel drama, has taken present conditions in Mexico and erected upon them a high pressure romance. Mr. Fielding plays his hero in gallant style, and treats his audience to a series of melodramatic incidents that entertain even when they do not convince. The supporting company is a most capable one. Reviewed by Edward Weitzel on page 1666, issue of September 4.

A DOUBLE IDENTITY (Episode No. 6 of "The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel"—Kalem), Aug. 25.—An ingenious "crook," played by Paul C. Hurst, gives the detectives of the Grand Hotel a stiff bit of work to outwit him in this two-reel drama. Producer James W. Horne never allows the excitement to simmer down.

UNDER THE FIDDLER'S ELM (Lubin), Aug. 26.—A highly-educated snake is a novel member of the cast in this two-reel drama. The material was taken from a magazine story by Elliot Balestier, and has been fashioned into an out-of-the-ordinary photoplay by Harry Chandlee. Justina Huff, Edgar Jones and Louis Mortelle have the leading roles.

THE STRANGE CASE OF TALMAI LIND (Selig), Aug. 26.—Kathlyn Williams, who wrote this three-reel drama and who also plays the title role, has fashioned an absorbing photoplay. The theme treats of prenatal influences. The heroine's father is an animal trainer, and the girl's life is strangely bound up with that of a lioness. Miss Williams has no difficulty in realizing the character she has drawn.

THE SLAVEY STUDENT (Edison), Aug. 27.—Lee Arthur has built up a bright and entertaining comedy-drama in this three-reel photoplay, and drawn his plans so that no padding is necessary. The story is human and sensible and contains a cleverly concealed denouement. Viola Dana as the orphan girl, again demonstrates the fact that she is one of the most gifted players now acting for the screen. She is without trickery or affectation, and expresses every emotion of the heart with sure art and complete personal charm. The entire cast, and director John H. Collins, deserve much commendation.

RULE SIXTY-THREE (Essanay), Aug. 28.—P. G. Wodehouse has written a fanciful comedy and supplied his two-reeler with a number of amusing situations. The plot shows cold reason attempting to get the better of Dan Cupid, and suffering ignominious defeat. The three pairs of lovers are played by Bryant Washburn and Jean Moyer, Hugh E. Thompson and Leota Lorraine, Royal Douglas and Charlotte Mineau.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE SILENT VOICE (Quality), Sept. 13.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1662, issue of September 4.

Mutual Film Corporation.

WHAT'S IN A NAME? (Beauty), Aug. 21.—A well-made comedy with a simple but well outlined plot. John Steppling, Beatrice Van and John Sheehan play the principal roles. The story is about two men fishing on the opposite side of a pond where fishing is prohibited. The owners of the pond are told of the trespassers by a small boy and immediately take steps to confiscate the fish and put the fishers to route. They are treated to a good ducking for their pains. The climax of the story shows the older man overlooking pecularity in the name of his daughter's lover, on discovering that he is the same man who helped him at the fishing game.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 34, Aug. 26.—Some of the interesting items of this number are the fountains of Versailles in action for the benefit of the wounded soldiers; speedy hydroplanes competing on Manhasset Bay; the unveiling of the Beethoven bust in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco; the type of U-boat that sank the "Arabic," and the first baby zebra born in captivity.

UNCLE HECK, BY HECK (Beauty), Aug. 28.—John Steppling has the interesting role of Uncle Heck in this amusing little comedy. Uncle Heck is from the country, and in his intimation that he is coming to visit his city relatives, he makes an emphatic assertion that he will not spend any money while there. Unfortunately, his head becomes turned by the women on the street, and he conducts himself so badly, insulting his own niece, whom he has never seen, that on his arrival at the house he pays unlimited sums of money to the women as surety against his nephew learning of his misbehavior.

SHOCKING STOCKINGS (Komic), Aug. 29.—A very amusing comedy with Fay Tincher and Max Davidson, also Chester Withey and Edward Dillon. The scenes of the picture take place at the beach, where Fay Tincher again disports her attractive black and white bathing suit. At one point of the picture a couple of stockinged legs protruding from a heap of sand, after having captivated a few eccentric types, are discovered to belong, not to the pretty bather, but to a judy in a store window.

FOR HIS PAL (Reliance), Aug. 30.—A. D. Sears, Irene Hunt and G. M. Blue appear in this mountain story. The young husband becomes jealous of his pal and the Chinese cook complicates matters after being discharged by the wife. The incidents are rather crowded in this to arouse the strongest feeling. The atmosphere and photography are good.

GREEN APPLES (Beauty), Aug. 31.—A splendid little vacation comedy, with Webster Campbell and Neva Gerber in the cast. The scenes are taken on a fresh air farm where a score or so of boys furnish work for the young doctor by eating green apples. They also precipitate a love affair. Pleasing comedy.

HEARTS AND FLOWERS (Majestic), Aug. 31.—W. E. Lawrence, Francelia Billington and Walter Long appear in this. It is the story of a young musician who is slugged and loses his memory. Later he is discovered by his wife and child through playing his favorite melody. An old theme handled in a pleasing way.

THE TURNING POINT (Reliance), Sept. 1.—A number featuring Ralph Lewis in a double part, also George Stewart and Marguerite Marsh. There is a good story in this, but there is too much jerky action in its development. A Western miner makes use of his likeness to a corrupt senator to stop an attempt at graft. This is interesting, but could have been handled in a stronger way by telling the story in more simple fashion.

HIDDEN CRIMES (Reliance), Sept. 3.—A number featuring Irene Hunt, G. M. Blue and A. D. Sears. Two Western young men are rivals for the girl's hand. One accuses the other of being a former jailbird. The action which follows is very melodramatic. The scenic effects are pleasing and the story fairly strong.

BIDDY BRADY'S BIRTHDAY (Falstaff), Sept. 3.—A good comedy number, featuring Riley Chamberlain as an Irishman who releases a genii from a jug found in the dump heap. A modern story with a fairy tale feature thrown in. The characterizations are good and the comedy better than the average.

A QUESTION OF HONOR (American), Sept. 4.—Jack Richardson, Vivian Rich and Wm. Spencer appear in this number. The girl's father sacrifices his mining claim to save her husband from jail. He agreed to sell it for a thousand dollars, but after waiting to keep his word finally was able to get double that amount. The plot has a nice idea in it but is not particularly strong.

FROM THE RIVER'S DEPTHS (Thanhouser), Sept. 5.—An unusually good one-reel drama, picturing the way in which an escaped convict palms himself on a banker as the son of an English gentleman. The girl discovers the secret and the reel closes with some stirring scenes of a melodramatic character. Well constructed and absorbing in plot.

PANSY'S PRISON PIES (Falstaff), Sept. 6.—This story of the waitress whose traveling man lover almost escapes jail through her aid is amusing in a quiet way. She conveys a file to the prisoner in one of her pies. When the other convicts hold him back he gets the credit for preventing a jail break and is made a police officer. Quite pleasing.

JERRY AND THE GUNMAN (Cub), Sept. 9.—This is the most amusing of the series featuring George Ovey yet shown. It has a better plot than its predecessors and does not depend entirely upon antics, which always succeed better when strung along with a story of some sort. In this number Jerry brings a bad man to justice in an amusing way.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

A BOLD IMPERSONATION (Reliance), Aug. 28.—The opening of this two-reel production would lead one to expect something of unusual excellence. One's hopes are dashed, however, before the close of the picture, when in the home of an aristocratic family, a social scene is interrupted by the rival lovers leaping from their chairs and fighting a duel on the spot. The picture is beautifully set, and is in many ways of unusual excellence, barring the circumstance mentioned.

A CHILD OF THE SURF (Majestic), Aug. 29.—Perhaps it is the charming portrayal of the role of Nancy by "Teddy" Sampson that makes this two-reel production so attractive. There are also unusually well-chosen and beautiful surf scenes to add to the charm of the picture. The atmosphere of the story has been reproduced in a very vivid manner, and the story of the little girl of the sea shore who fell in love with a city chap, much to the concern of her stern old father, is one that cannot fail to interest. The business of the picture is particularly good.

REINCARNATION (Thanhouser), Aug. 31.—A splendid two-reel drama, picturing the trial of a young man falsely accused of crime. The judge in the case goes home and thinks the testimony over. While at home he sees himself and all the other principals in the trial in a previous incarnation where a case of exactly the same sort is tried. The costuming of this former period suggested the early Roman days. This vision of the past leads the judge to think the prisoner at the bar innocent, and later sensational new testimony offered by the girl proves this to be the case. The story is exceptionally strong and makes a good offering.

A LEAP FOR LIFE (Rodeo), Sept. 1.—A two-reel number, featuring Lillian Hamilton, Fred Church and Walter Rogers. The opening scenes are good, where Jose trades his mining claim for a burro. Some of the following scenes are a little obscure in development, but later, when Jose goes out for revenge, a number of stirring incidents occur. A girl is tied to the top of a runaway stage and a woman lies helpless before an on-coming train. The action becomes genuinely thrilling. All of the scenes are well photographed and, taken as a whole, this is an excellent example of the melodramatic photoplay.

WHEN THE CALL CAME (Gaumont), Sept. 10.—A two-reel number, featuring George Larkin, Mrs. Wright, Fred. G. Hearne, Irene Hunt and Louise Thompson. The plot is a conventional one, in which the son of a blind woman steals a brooch. Gleason, a real thief, is accused of the crime, but the son is sentenced eventually. Gleason then takes the son's place unknown to the mother. When the son is released a love affair follows and all ends happily. The plot contains many old situations, and while well constructed, has no particular novelty.

North American Film Corporation

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 18), Aug. 30.—A demonstration of what is supposed to be the consequences of the "charm against harm" left with Esther by her mother is given in this chapter, when in the restaurant fight and destruction by fire, Esther comes out unharmed. In this chapter the extensiveness of some of the sets, chiefly the restaurant set, and the management of the apparent multitude of people taking part in the scenes arranged in these sets is worthy of mention. Powell has caught up with the old Englishman, and the complication of affairs continues to grow interesting.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

POOR SCHMALTZ (Famous Players), Aug. 23.—Reviewed by George Blaisdell on page 1664, issue of September 4.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 67, Aug. 21.—At El Paso, Texas, at a celebration in memory of Saint San Lorenzo the Indians take part in a dance that shows signs of modern influence, with "heel and toe and a polka step." The tree to which Leo Frank hung, and also the early morning funeral of the victim of the mob, in Brooklyn, is shown. A view of the fated ship "Arabic" is another reminder of the times.

PICTURESQUE JAVA, Sept. 6.—This is a beautiful scenic presenting some intensely charming views on the island of Java. On the same reel with "In Dahomey."

IN DAHOMEY, Sept. 6.—A picture of unusual interest, telling something of the customs of the people in this African province. On the same reel with the above.

A MIXUP FOR MASIE, Sept. 6.—One of the "Lonesome Luke" series, and very amusing. The rivalry between Luke and another of his kind for the hand of a pretty miss, causes disastrous results, for Luke, in his sorrow, decides that life holds no further charms for him. The picture is constituted to please almost any audience.

MONKEY SHINES (Starlight), Sept. 11.—In this picture Heine and Louie buy a bootblack stand. Their love of money causes them to cut a slit in a young woman's stocking and extract a roll of bills that she has deposited there for safe-keeping.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

ROMANCE OF ELAINE (Episode 11, "The "Disappearing Helmets"), Aug. 23.—The usual amount of interest attaches to this episode. Elaine is again tempted into the net of the enemy, but this time with a different motive and accompanied by Jamieson. While Jamieson is being held by some electrical device, Elaine is placed in a sack and carried to the water, where a helmet of some sort is placed over her head, and, as far as we know, is consigned to the depths of the sea. The hope which we retain of her rescue, lies in the fact that Prof. Arnold is a witness of the deed.

THE FALLEN STANDARD (Balboa), Sept. 6.—A two-reel production from the Balboa studios, that is fairly interesting. The story is of a young woman who had literary ambitions, and preferred to follow them up, rather than marry at that present moment. In the city she is successful, through a story whose inspiration came from the finding of a baby in the park. This child is taken care of by her, and years later, when he has proven to be a good-for-nothing, he is shot, and it is then discovered that he is the son of the woman who married his foster mother's first love.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 181 (Universal), Aug. 25.—Pictures of baby animals at the New York zoo, peace conference with Mexican leaders, daring aviation feats at the San Diego fair, and Hy Mayer's drawings are among the best things in this.

THE CHIMNEY'S SECRET (Victor), Aug. 25.—This story of the young bank cashier who masquerades as a miserly peddler is not entirely new, but will offer a surprise to many observers. It is quite dramatic in its way and well constructed. Lon Chaney and Gretchen Lederer play the leads.

A MAID AND A MAN (Nestor), Aug. 30.—A clever little comedy, by Al. E. Christie, with Jack Dillon, Neal Burns and Billie Rhodes in the cast. The pretty daughter attires herself as a maid and succeeds in captivating the golf champion. A bright, pleasing number.

A GAME OF LOVE (L-KO), Sept. 1.—A comedy number, featuring Reggie Morris, Peggy Corday and Fatty Voss. The plot is farcical and has to do with the rivalry of two men for the girl's hand. The story is not strong but has amusing moments.

VAGABOND LOVE (Victor), Sept. 3.—A story written by L. V. Jefferson and featuring Kingsley Benedict, Violet MacMillan and Millard K. Wilson. The Italian violinist succeeds by his playing in bringing back the love of the materialistic husband for his wife. The story has a pleasing touch of sentiment in it and is fairly strong in production.

WHEN HIRAM WENT TO THE CITY (Joker), Sept. 4.—This is a rather amusing farce comedy with Max Asher in the lead. When Hiram goes to the city his experiences are many and varied, although his downfall from the social standard comes quick and fast, and he is glad to return to the country with his country sweetheart.

THEIR HAPPY HONEYMOON (Nestor), Sept. 6.—Featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran as two young newlyweds. They become jealous of their wives at the beach and this leads to difficulties. The plot is very slight in this and it proves only a fairly strong offering.

SH! DON'T WAKE THE BABY! (Rex), Sept. 7.—And it's a burglar who does the trick! The theme strikes a sympathetic chord, although we laugh at the efforts of the young couple not to disturb their first born. Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips are the pa and ma.

SILK HOSE AND HIGH PRESSURE (L-KO), Sept. 8.—Three reels of low comedy, with Billie Ritchie, Henry Bergman, Louise Orth and others in the cast. The action follows no definite plot and does not hold the interest very strongly until the last reel. There are amusing spots in this number, but the tone is not of the best. The events of the final reel, when the hose is brought into action, will bring considerable laughter.

THE FINEST GOLD (Big U), Sept. 9.—Murdock MacQuarrie is featured in this as an old miser who hates his grandson's wife. A baby is born and after the grandson's death the child brings about reconciliation with the old miser. Not a new theme by any means, yet the story is pleasingly presented and fairly strong.

GOING TO THE DOGS (Powers), Sept. 9.—A half reel number featuring Madam Busse and her trained dogs. The canines appear in costumes and perform the usual vaudeville tricks quite skilfully. A good number for children in particular.

FROG AND TOAD CELEBRITIES (Powers), Sept. 9.—On same reel with above. Interesting and instructive nature studies conducted by Prof. Raymond L. Ditmars. A pleasing split reel.

A COUNTRY CIRCUS (Victor), Sept. 10.—A dream story, featuring Violet McMillan as a young girl who goes to a circus. The antics of the false animals will amuse children. This is a good number for juvenile observers.

HE FELL IN A CABARET (Nestor), Sept. 10.—A comedy number featuring Lee Moran as a young divinity student who undertakes to reform a cabaret girl. He, of course, falls in love with her and patronizes the place frequently, but she is married. An amusing idea handled in a pleasing way.

AT THE BEACH, INCOGNITO (Joker), Sept. 10.—A low comedy number enacted by a cast which includes Max Asher, Milburne Moranti, Lillian Peacock and Gale Henry. The action takes place at a beach, where two couples carrying carpet bags get their affairs mixed up. This is a fairly strong number.

HIS LAST "THIRTY" (Laemmle), Sept. 11.—A pleasing number featuring Charles (Daddy) Manly as an old telegraph operator who is retired by the office force on what he thinks is a pension. When he learns the truth it is too much for him and he dies wiring "thirty" to his friends. There is some real pathos in this and it makes a good offering.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE DECEIVERS (Gold Seal), Sept. 7.—A two-reel number with J. Thomas Dillon, Agnes Vernon, Charles Giblyn and L. M. Wells in the cast. The story is an interesting one, picturing an eccentric millionaire who advertises for his lost niece. Walsh induces Rita to pose as the girl. She meets Harry, who is introduced as the nephew. When the denouement comes it develops that Harry is another detective, Walsh is arrested for attempted burglary and the girl forgiven and adopted by the millionaire, who really had no niece at all. The yarn, as can be seen, has entertaining qualities and is quite pleasingly presented.

BOTH SIDES OF LIFE (Laemmle), Sept. 9.—A three-reel number, with Ella Hall, Alan Forest, Maude George and Wyndham Standing in the cast. The plot contains three separate threads which are brought together at the close. It contrasts criminal, social and religious life in an interesting way. The story is not in any way exceptional, but it has numerous points of interest. It pictures the manner in which a converted girl crook saves the young minister from the snare set by a society woman. The closing scenes seemed considerably overdrawn.

IN THE SUNSET COUNTRY (Bison), Sept. 10.—A three-reel Western number, written by F. McGrew Willis. The cast includes Wilfred Roger, Sherman Bainbridge, Jack Curtis and Luella Maxim. The settings are picturesque and the story a characteristic one of its type. It tells of the arrival of a minister and his daughter in a Western town, the toughest of the vicinity. The girl's father is killed and there is rivalry for her hand between the road agent and the gambler. The latter is known as a "white" gambler and eventually wins her. This makes an entertaining number and though the situations are not entirely new, it is well handled throughout.

AGNES KEMPLER'S SACRIFICE (Rex), Sept. 12.—A two-reel production, written by Tom Lewis and featuring Hobert Henley, Cleo Madison, Agnes Vernon and others. The young man marries surreptitiously, goes West on a mission and is forced to marry a second time after compromising a young girl. The situation did not seem to be one calling for such heroic measures on the part of the girl's father, who commanded the young man to marry at the point of a gun. The latter might also have shown some sort of resistance before consenting to become a bigamist. The close of the story, showing how the first wife drifts into the underworld and is then rescued by his mother, is more appealing. The moral of this is debatable, though the production, as a whole, is interesting.

THE CLASH OF ARMS (Universal Special), Aug. 30.—Episode Eleven of "The Broken Coin" series. This is the most stirring number of this series yet shown. It shows Kitty and Roleaux joining forces to save their half of the coin from King Phillips' soldiers. Kitty summons military aid from King Michael and some vivid battle scenes follow. The second reel closes with Kitty fainting in the torture chambers of the palace.

THE LAST REASONING (Gold Seal), Aug. 31.—An entertaining three-reel number, written by Harvey Gates, and featuring Herbert Rawlinson, Anna Little, Richard Sterling and Agnes Vernon. The story sets out to be a study of Morons, a low type of people susceptible to criminal tendencies. This motive is not followed through as expected, but the author has fortunately gotten together a story of sufficient dramatic strength to make the omission excusable; it at least escapes being so obvious as frequently happens in stories dealing with criminality. The presentation is good and the cast pleasing.

South African Letter

South Africa as a Film Producing Country.

Kroonstad, O. F. S., South Africa, June 24.

THERE is no reason whatever why a South African producing company should not be successful. Pictorial clearness is easily obtained in our glorious climate, which, though not quite, is almost equal to that of California. We have some of the most superb scenery in the world at our command. Many South African men and women are born to the saddle, and the history of the country is picturesquely crowded with exciting events such as Rorkes Drift, King's ride to Grahamstown, etc., and with a good producer success is assured.

The South African Railways and Publicity.

This department of the railway takes scenic and industrial films of railway building, townships, bridge repairing, etc. The various films are issued under the title of Union Films. Recently they completed their latest picture, the building of the Prieska-Upington Railway. This building was done at the record rate of three miles per day. The film is two thousand feet long and is crowded with interest in every section.

The Theaters Trust, who produce the African Mirror and Santry's Topicalites, have now arranged to produce pictures on a large scale and looked at from an industrial point of view Mr. Schlesinger's scheme has everything to recommend it. An enormous amount of money will be spent locally and a large number of people will be employed in the production work. A new era of industry will be opened up for South Africa and as practically every copy of the films produced will be sold outside of South Africa it means that a lot of foreign money will come into the country.

1915 Report of Bioscope Advisory Committee, Cape Town.

The committee has been criticised for the class of films exhibited at children's matinees. Where the whole art of censoring lies is in the following statement of the committee: "A film cannot be condemned because it is not suitable for a child to see." A little effort has been made by the committee to secure more suitable programs for children but of no avail. The trust remains adamant and even go so far as to admit that they do not care. In regard to the Western type of pictures particularly the committee uttered the following statement: "The cowboy film had a marked effect on children's games but there is nothing to show that the class of films exhibited in the union has led to an increase of crime."

We have had the following pictures screened recently throughout South Africa:

"The Chorus Girl's Thanksgiving," and "The House of Silence," proved to be dramas of considerable interest. "The Time, the Place and the Man," was well received and was voted exceptionally thrilling. "Recreation," a screaming Keystone, brought down the house wherever it was shown for a Keystone is always synonymous with hearty laughter in big letters. "The Painted World" is a Vitagraph Masterpiece and words cannot express the acting of the leading lady. Several of Helen Holmes' railroad pictures have been shown and everywhere have been accorded nothing but the highest praise. At present Helen Holmes is the heroine with whom we all would like to shake hands. We are having one or two scenes from German Southwest Africa in the latest African Mirror and also one or two of German East Africa. Naturally as our General Botha's army is in the Southwest and many South Africans fighting in the East African regions, they hold a timely topical interest for us.

Yours truly, S. H. CRAWFORD.

RICHARD GARRICK JOINS THE GAUMONT CO.

The Gaumont Company has secured the services of Richard Garrick, whose name has long been connected with some of the most important manufacturing companies in the country. Mr. Garrick has been placed in charge of the second Rialto Star Feature Company organized by the Gaumont Company, and is now engaged in the producing of "The House With Nobody In It," a three-reel drama with an all-star cast for release in the regular Mutual program of Sept. 22.

Zena Keefe

ZENA VIRGINIA KEEFE, a girl from out of the Golden West, and one of the youngest leading ladies of the Vitagraph Stock Company, was born in San Francisco, Cal., on June 26, 1896. She is an American girl through and through, coming from purely American stock, her father, James P. Keefe, having been born in Mobile, Ala., and her mother, whose maiden name was Allie Turbiville, in Yazoo, Miss. Miss Keefe is practically a child of the theater, as she made her first professional appearance when but three years of age in Palmer Cox's "Brownies in Fairyland." After this engagement she began her education in a convent in San Francisco, where she stayed until her parents moved to New York. Here she continued her education until an alluring offer to play the Little Mother in "The Fatal Wedding" took her on the road for three successive seasons. Her work in this part attracted so much attention, she was continually receiving offers not only from theatrical magnates, but from moving picture directors. In Miss Keefe's case, the pictures won, but only for a short time, as she was with the Vitagraph a little less than a year when she became a featured attraction in Keith Vaudeville.

Zena Keefe.

During the latter part of 1914, Miss Keefe returned to the Vitagraph Company. The most important pictures in which Miss Keefe has appeared lately include: "The Island of Surprise," "The Tigress," "Life's Yesterday," "The Esterbrooke Case," "Three Hours of a Woman's Life" and others.

PHOTOPLAY FROM HAWAIIAN NATIVE SONGS.

"Alaho-Oe," sung and played by natives of Hawaii at every opportunity, and particularly to friends about to start on a long trip, furnished the idea for the scenario of "Farewell to Thee," a tensely dramatic photoplay, screenings of which were recently completed at the Reliance Mutual studios.

Tourists who have visited Honolulu and other Hawaiian cities are familiar with the tune of the song, and many have declared it to be the most touching of its kind ever heard. In Hawaii, it is the custom for a number of the relatives and friends of the person or persons about to depart on a trip, either by land or sea, to gather at the station or pier and sing and play "Alaho-Oe" until the departure.

MINNIE REAUBEAU HAS LEGACY AWAITING.

The Moving Picture World has received an inquiry from the dramatic editor of the New York Herald as to the whereabouts of Minnie Reaubeau. Miss Reaubeau left her home in Missouri some three months ago to seek employment in motion pictures. In the recent flood in her native state the home of her uncle was overturned. In the debris was found a chest containing $20,000 in gold. Lawyers in St. Louis are now endeavoring to communicate with Miss Reaubeau.

"PEG O' MY HEART?"—NOT YET.

J. Hartley Manners, Globe theatre, London, England, owner of "Peg O' My Heart," advises that there is absolutely no foundation for the rumors relative to his play being put into moving pictures; he has given no authority to any one to produce his play in pictures nor does he intend doing so.

HAYWARD MACK AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

Hayward Mack, the well known New York photoplayer, has joined the Universal forces at Universal City, Cal., under the direction of Murdock MacQuarrie, the famous character leading man and producer of many popular Universal photoplays.

Here and There

Charles Chaplin in "The Bank" Shows Us a New Player and Opens Up Possibilities for the Future.

By George Blaisdell.

ONE frequently hears the question: "How long will Charlie Chaplin last?" The which meaning, in all probability, how long will he continue to be the favorite of a public that is as fickle in its affections as it is vociferous in praise of its idol of the moment. Of course, there are many who are not only not with Chaplin; they are against him. There are exhibitors in this category—not many, to be sure, but they are of sufficient importance, or their houses are, to be entitled to recognition—to respect. We have in mind two managers, each of the best house in his town, who do not show Chaplin pictures. They will tell you their reasons. If these lines should fall under the notice of either, let it be construed as a request to take a squint at "The Bank." They will see a new angle to the comedian's work—another Chaplin; and a welcome one.

In "The Bank" we see a serious Chaplin—not for many minutes, it is true, but for sufficient time to demonstrate that his capabilities are not limited by the boundaries of a rough-and-tumble comic. The same native talent which constitutes him the premier fun-maker enables him to reach into the field of the dramatic, into the realm of pathos. To see Chaplin merge from farce to straight drama is for a moment something in the nature of a jolt. Sitting in a house of a thousand persons the other night one could feel the stillness that settled over the gathering as the realization sunk deeper that the player was more than a comedian.

Entirely aside from its revelation of the possibilities Chaplinwise, "The Bank" is good comedy. There's slapstick a-plenty, of course, and it is fast and riotous, too; but there's a story, the staging is well done and there is a strong cast. Bill Armstrong shows that he is also legstrong; he will be a valuable member of the Boyle Heights studio.

Perhaps in time to come the Essanay may give us a production in which Chaplin will be shown as he walks into Levy's some night—shown in a straight comedy-drama. There'll be no charge for the tip, but the story might even be written around an orchestra leader. And anyone who knows what Chaplin can do with a baton will tell you that here is a chance for a feature.

I see Frank Montgomery has hooked up with Dave Horsley. Which brings to mind a visit one Sunday afternoon at the Hollywood home of Mr. Montgomery and Mona Darkfeather. A most attractive bungalow it is, too, both in its finishing and its furnishings. Offhand one would expect to see in the latter category many relics of the long-time professional association of Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery with the real American Indian. While these are not so strongly in evidence on the walls they are in the house, and on request some of them were brought out. The visit was something like two months ago, but the memory is keen on at least two full-sized Indian dresses that were shown. One of these bore on the front in rows six hundred rattles taken from the snake the mere sight or sound of which causes the wise man to reach, and in a hurry, for his weapon or in its absence a good big stick. It was said the garment represented a combined snake age of about 1,400 years. The second contained genuine Indian bead ornaments which represented in weight the greater part of the thirty-eight pounds at which the dress tipped the scales. It was this particular bit of aboriginal apparel that on one occasion nearly caused the death by drowning of the player who is so well known for her Indian characterizations.

Of revolvers and rifles there were a great number—many of them with a history; and in some cases a bit of the latter had been acquired after their coming into the possession of Mr. Montgomery. There was one revolver, though, that would arouse interest in any company. It was a long Colt "forty-five," of a vintage somewhere around 1860. Carved in the butt were nine L-shaped notches. As one handled this "hefty" weapon it was good to be assured that the revolver had for many years been the side-partner of a California stage-coach driver; that the sinister carvings did not represent the murders committed by a really bad man but rather that number of bad men suddenly converted to good ones. It was interesting, too, to watch Mr. Montgomery by passing the palm of the left hand over the hammer of the weapon held at the hip demonstrate how the old-timers got as quick action out of the pistols of former days as is possible today with an automatic—or practically so.

Out in the yard alongside the garage was tethered Cheyenne, the Indian pony who will readily obey the commands of Mona Darkfeather, but who recognizes no one else as his master. The hostility to Mr. Montgomery is the result of a disagreement between man and horse over certain things called for in a scenario. The pony, like a good Indian, does not forgive or forget. For his mistress, however, he will perform a wide variety of stunts. In the cellar of the home was stored a mass of Indian paraphernalia sufficient in bulk to equip a couple of Indian stores.

Mr. Montgomery was one of the early photoplayers on the coast, when actors were expected to make good in the work of sure-enough cowboys and when cowboys and actors used the same quarters for dressing rooms, if it so happened there were any such inclosed places for dressing and undressing. He was one of the first engaged by Frank Boggs after he brought his Selig company to Southern California and also for a long time was with the New York Motion Picture Corporation in the old Bison days. Later he was with Universal and Kalem, and then went to San Mateo, where he made pictures for the Kriterion program.

In Joe Smiley's Lubin picture "The Witness"—and a good picture it is—the young man who carries the name part does strong work.

Murdock MacQuarrie in "The Last Chance" gives us a picture that has real interest throughout in spite of the fact that it contains no spectacular situations. It is a domestic story—of the wrong done by a sister who aspired to ultimate possession of the fortune of her brother. One of the phases of the subject worth following is the changing of the fashions in both men's and women's apparel in a period covering perhaps twoscore or more of years. Mr. MacQuarrie's work is excellent. Adele Farrington has the unpopular role, and she displays rare skill. There is another player in this well-played picture whose work is striking. She is one of the youngest in the cast; her name is Betty Nathan, if out of two names on the screen we picked the right one. Her interpretations of the role of the granddaughter was worthy of an older actress.

A card recently received from Catalina Island indicated that Mabel Condon had journeyed a half-hundred miles from Los Angeles to look over the "magic isle." On her way to Studio Town Miss Condon stopped a month at San Francisco, being in the bay city at the time of the exhibitors' convention. The well-known film writer said she intended to remain in Southern California for some time, perhaps all winter. She'll miss the ice skating of which she is so fond.

The state of California has administered a rude shock to those who have fought so steadily against the growing use of the word "movie" as descriptive of the motion picture. The writer recalls the first time he heard the word, if for the sake of argument it will be admitted it is a word. It fell from the lips of a ten-year-old girl who said, in a putting-one-over tone to a companion of her own age: "I am going to the movies tonight." In the intervening five years we have seen and heard much of "movie." The purists may flay it, those with higher ideals of the motion picture may insist that at the least it is undignified and unworthy of the art it is intended to describe, but the word has grown with the business. And now comes the state of California—the "home" of the motion picture, as they like to describe it out there, and which naturally has every reason to cherish and protect it—and grants to the operators' union of San Francisco the sole right in the state to use "Movies' Ball" as applied to a dance, annual or otherwise.

Those who have to this particular subject given any thought undoubtedly will have observed that the newspapers —and among them the best in the land—have aided in giving currency to "movie," and among newspaper men none more so than the head writers. It is practically the only inclusively descriptive expression that has the merit of being contained in few letters; and there is nothing the head writer is compelled more assiduously to seek than words that are of few letters and also descriptive.

No journal can entirely suppress "movie." Toward its partial suppression vigilance has been displayed in this shop, but there are occasions—for instance, a regard for accuracy in quotation—when its use is morally compulsory. It may be of interest to record that one of the standard dictionaries months ago entered "movie" among its new words.

In spite of the action of the state of California and others the tip is out that here the lid is still on—tight.

Cohen Views British Market

Finds a Flourishing Demand for American Product—Ruffles to Represent Metro.

THE British market for American films has never been in such a flourishing condition, in spite of the war, according to Harry J. Cohen, who has just returned from England, whither he went to complete Metro's selling arrangements in the United Kingdom. Through Ruffles' Exclusive, Ltd., Mr. Cohen arranged for the handling of the entire Metro program in Great Britain, and Metro exchanges are already in full operation in every important film center in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Harry Cohen.

"The fact that Ruffles' Exclusives contracted for the entire list of Metro releases," said Mr. Cohen, "Besides being a distinct tribute to the quality of the productions, is also a pretty fair indication of conditions in the industry in Great Britain. As a matter of fact, if you didn't see a lot of khaki-clad soldiers around the streets, it would be difficult to believe that England was engaged in a battle for her existence. Business is much as usual and there is absolutely no war scare in London, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. In my opinion the British market for American films was never so flourishing. This is due partly to the fact that very few Continental films are being produced and partly to the warm fraternal feeling that exists between Great Britain and the United States. American films have a chance to get a foothold in Great Britain now, which nothing can ever break.

"While I was in London a rumor came into general circulation that the American film market was controlled by Germans, and had this opinion gained any ground it would have resulted in greatly decreasing the popularity of American pictures. In fact, there was talk of eliminating certain American manufacturers, because it was said they had sold English firms films of German origin. Fortunately, I was able to show conclusively how absolutely ridiculous was the idea that American manufacturers should buy foreign films for a foreign market, when their own productions were so well received.

"As a matter of fact American pictures are very popular with the British public, perhaps more so than British productions are here. This is due to the fact that there are so few British manufacturers, but those who do make films suitable for the American photoplayer find an immediate and welcome market.

"The posters used by the British picture houses were a pleasant surprise to me. While it is true that some time ago English posters were not up to the American standard, they are now as good or better, often showing much higher artistic class than the general run of American paper. In this connection, I might say that the directors of Ruffles' Exclusives, Ltd., were in turn agreeably surprised at the Metro posters, which were notably superior in workmanship to the paper usually sent over with features.

"The British exhibitor does more billboard advertising than his American cousin, although he divides it differently. For instance, an exhibitor will use fifty twenty-four sheets in a week, but twenty-five of them will advertise his program for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and twenty-five that of Thursday, Friday and Saturday, as against a change of bill one, two or three times weekly or daily here.

"The programs and prices are much the same on both sides of the water, most theaters showing from six to eight reels—a feature, a comedy and a scenic—for from threepence to a shilling. The seating facilities, however, are divided differently. What Americans regard as the best seats—those back of the first dozen rows in the orchestra—in England are the cheapest, while those nearest the screen are the most expensive.

"British motion picture men are quite as up-to-date as we are here. They understand and know feature pictures and are quick to see whether there is money in a given production or not. They are our equals also in recognizing the value of publicity. I was distinctly surprised at the efficiency of the publicity department of the Ruffles' Exclusives, Ltd., and the wide field they covered. George Spurin, head of this branch of the concern's activities, is said to be one of the highest paid publicity men in England, his salary in our money being $12,000 a year.

"Altogether my trip was a revelation to me, for I could hardly believe that Great Britain was engaged in the most terrible war in history, if it hadn't been for the numerous soldiers in the streets and the fact that the lights were kept down to a minimum at night. Outside of this, one would think that business was quite 'as usual,' as the Britons are so fond of averring."

DUSTIN FARNUM LEAVES FOR COAST.

Dustin Farnum, who is under a long-time contract to make pictures exclusively for Pallas Pictures, left Sunday noon for the Pallas Studio at Los Angeles, to be gone for several months. His first picture for Pallas will be Booth Tarkington's "Gentleman from Indiana," which Mr. Farnum hopes to make even more successful than "Captain Courtesy," which has won such universal commendation not only from exhibitors in the United States, but from foreign buyers who unanimously have agreed that this picture represents one of the greatest film triumphs.

Mr. Farnum's second picture will probably be "Davy Crockett." His third, according to his present plans, will be "The Call of the Cumberlands," a graphic, heart-gripping story from the pen of Charles Neville Buck, published serially in Munsey's Magazine and later issued in book form by W. J. Watt & Co., who report for it an extensive sale.

When Mr. Farnum left New York he carried with him several works by prominent authors, which he intends to review, with the idea of making the coming Pallas Pictures releases a fitting accompaniment of the pictures which are to be released the coming year upon the Paramount Program.

KNICKERBOCKER TITLE CHANGE.

Knickerbocker Star Features have changed the title of their September 15 release. Their announcement of Florence Rockwell's appearance in "Her Secret" came simultaneously with an advertisement of George Kleine's announcing another picture with the same title. The Kleine offering bearing the nearest release date and their posters already in print, Knickerbocker changed the title of their feature to "The Purple Night."

METRO OPENS NEW OFFICE.

Metro opened another office at 920 Walnut street, Des Moines, Ia. J. S. Skirboll, general manager for the Middle West for Metro, formally opened it for business on Thursday, August 26, with Cressnon E. Smith in charge as manager. The new office will carry the entire list of Metro feature releases and will supply the territory included in Iowa and Nebraska.

New Metro Studio

Through Alliance with the Federal Feature Films Corporation It Gains Large Structure in Pocono District.

THE Metro Pictures Corporation has secured exclusive control of the largest motion picture studio in the world through an affiliation entered into during the present week with the Federal Feature Films Corporation of New York. This adds another to the long list of big surprises to which the Metro has treated the motion picture industry.

Interior of World's Largest Studio, Showing Diffusing Curtains in Place. The Metro Can Operate 21 Stages in this Interior Simultaneously.

The new studio, within four hours of New York, is located at Rocky Glen, midway between Scranton and Wilkes-Barre, Pa., in the heart of the Pocono mountain district. The scenic advantages are unrivalled and include everything except an ocean.

The Federal Feature Films Corporation, by its contract with the Metro, affords the Metro organization additional facilities for tremendous production. The main studio building is 200 by 125 feet, with 25,000 square feet of floor space and 35,000 square feet of glass covering its great roof and sides. The construction is of tubular steel on concrete foundations, and the main structure has room for the simultaneous operation of twenty-one stages.

The Federal Feature Films Corporation acquired the property, consisting of fourteen acres and a frontage on a lake, from Arthur Frothingham, a constructing engineer, who built the studio with a direct plan that it would eventually be used for motion picture making. The park, consisting of fourteen acres, is in the center of a thousand-acre tract of gorgeous mountain scenery, with climatic conditions exceptionally advantageous for good photography.

Arthur James, who left the Mutual Film Corporation to take charge of the advertising, publicity and scenario departments of the Metro Pictures Corporation, is president of the Federal Feature Films Company. Merritt Crawford, formerly of the Motion Picture News and editor of Reel Life, and now with the Metro, is its secretary; and Henry James, who as business and advertising manager of Reel Life brought that publication to financial success and left it for the larger opportunities with the Metro, is treasurer of the Federal Feature Films Corporation.

The Federal has arranged to produce star feature pictures and has placed all of its facilities at the command of the Metro.

Selznick Reviews Year's Work

Points to a Number of Notable Productions That Have Been Successfully Exploited by the World Film.

EXACTLY a year ago (to be precise, it was on August 24, 1914), the World Film Corporation began the regular weekly releases of multiple-reel features. Mr. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, had definitely satisfied himself that there was a strong demand among exhibitors and the public for great Broadway successes with great Broadway actors and actresses, artists of national, if not worldwide, reputation, in film form. Shortly after the formation of the World Film Corporation he proceeded to organize his resources along such lines as would allow him to release each week a five-reel feature on a well-known, widely advertised stage success with, if possible, the original stars of the play in the photodrama. World Film releases of this nature properly began on September 21, 1914, when Robert Warwick was presented in the William A. Brady pictureplay, "The Dollar Mark." This photodrama of tense business life in New York, with romantic interludes at Cobalt, took the public by storm and definitely established that fine artist, Robert Warwick, in impregnable public esteem.

Brady's name and Brady's productions acted like magic when converted into photodramas by World Film. The success of "The Dollar Mark" was swiftly followed by that of Emma Dunn in the pathetic "Mother," Tom Wise in the breezy study of senatorial life, "A Gentleman from Mississippi" and Robert Warwick in "The Man of the Hour," a never-to-be-forgotten drama of mayor-baiting in once graft-ridden New York.

The next Brady pictureplay to be released by World Film was "As Ye Sow," in which clever and lovable Alice Brady made such a successful first appearance in pictures as the sorely tried heroine of this once popular stage drama. Robert Warwick next appeared in "The Man Who Found Himself" and then, after William Elliott in the moral warning, "Woman and Wine."

Holbrook Blinn and Alice Brady created a widespread sensation in "The Boss," Edward Sheldon's powerful indictment of provincial bossism.

Vivian Martin in "Little Miss Brown," Robert Warwick in "The Face in the Moonlight" and Martha Hedman in "The Cub" also perpetuated Brady successes in film media. George Nash in "The Cotton King," Jose Collins in "The Impostor" came next, and finally in "The Ivory Snuff Box" the fine Brady reputation for stage successes was repeated in the film to a most intensive extent by Holbrook Blinn, Alma Belwin and Norman Trevor. Thus as a Brady success began World Film's year; a Brady triumph fitly closes it.

Shubert features in film form have also made a prominent reputation on the World Film program. The delightfully piquant "Wishing Ring" brought Miss Vivian Martin to the fore as a motion picture star; and in "Lola," also a Shubert feature, the incomparable Clara Kimball Young made her first appearance as a World Film star. In "Wildfire," a Shubert feature, Lillian Russell herself made her screen debut. Lew Fields in "Old Dutch," one of the most refinedly mirthful comedies ever seen, was another triumph for World Film. It was a Shubert feature; so also was Clara Kimball Young in "Marrying Money."

Liebler features also had their turn in World Film's program. Robert Warwick electrified us by his acting in the late Paul Armstrong's "Alias Jimmy Valentine," and Clara Kimball Young appeared in "The Deep Purple," by the same author. Clara Kimball Young has probably made her greatest World Film success in "Hearts in Exile."

The Frohman production, "The Builder of Bridges," saw the screen through World Film. Similarly George Lederer made his way to filmdom with "Sunday"—all due to Selznick's acumen and enterprise. C. K. Harris in "When It Strikes Home," Nat Goodwin in "The Master Hand," Bert Levy, Julius Steger, Janet Beecher are other great names that have appeared on World Film's first year's program—which has been rich in money-making productions, many of them that give promise of being permanent and profitable items of that program.

ADLER GETS FEATURES FOR IOWA AND NEBRASKA.

Sam A. Adler, manager of the Exclusive Feature Film Company, of Omaha, Neb., was in New York last week "looking 'em over." Before returning home he contracted for Frohman's "Just Out of College," the Ivan Film Company's "Mother's Confession" and the Metropolis Film Company's female Chaplin series for Iowa and Nebraska.

Lydia Yeaman Titus With Morosco

Australian, of "Sally in Our Alley" Fame, to Appear in "Jane."

LYDIA YEAMANS TITUS, who was almost as famous for her mimicries as her musicianship, is one of the latest captures for motion pictures and is now appearing for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company in Charles Frohman's success, "Jane," in support of Charlotte Greenwood and Sydney Grant.

Lydia Yeamans Titus.

Mrs. Yeamans Titus became famous with "Sally in Our Alley," and although singers for over two hundred years have featured this classic of English ballads in their repertoires, it remained for this diminutive Australian songstress to come along and so outdo them with her own interpretation that she made the celebrated love song practically her private property. "Sally in Our Alley" is never mentioned but it suggests the name of Lydia Yeamans Titus.

The Australian actress took quite a chance when she first rendered the national favorite during a Christmas pantomime at the Avenue theater in London by changing a tempo in it which had been accepted since its writing. The change, however was so much for the better and was so justified by the enhanced effect the gifted little expressionist worked into the melody that no less a dignitary and musical pundit than Sime Reeves himself, the great tenor, commended her for taking the liberty.

Her baby songs, and imitations of Emma Eames, Adelina Patti and other famous stage folks, not to mention her London East End, Italian and French and "coon" types, comprise a gallery which has never been surpassed. In the Oliver Morosco production she contributes one of the most genuinely funny spinsters the screen has ever seen.

COMMODORE BENEDICT TO AID CHARITY.

Commodore E. C. Benedict, whose magnificent estate at Indian Harbor, Greenwich, Conn., has been made use of times innumerable as backgrounds for motion pictures without cost to the producers, now proposes in a letter to Edwin Thanhouser, of the Thanhouser Company, that the picture companies desiring to make further use of his grounds shall unite in contributing a fund for establishing beds in the new hospital the Commodore is building in Greenwich. He suggests that the fund be designated so that the public may know who the donors are. The contributions are to be voluntary, for the Commodore says that his place will be open to picture makers without charge, as in the past.

Mr. Thanhouser suggests to his confreres, their directors and acting staff, that Commodore Benedict himself be the treasurer of the fund, and that all contributions be forwarded to him at Indian Harbor, Greenwich, Conn. "There is no question," says Mr. Thanhouser, "but that the Commodore's kindness has enriched many a production in a manner that only a great outlay could equal. His generosity has won the admiration of all who have met him, and this request he makes for so worthy a cause will, I am sure, meet with hearty response."

Death of William H. West

Veteran Kalem Character Actor Expires Suddenly at His Home in Glendale, Near Los Angeles.

THE news of the death of William H. West, which came suddenly at Glendale, near Los Angeles, on Sunday, August 30, will be received with deep regret, by picturegoers as well as by the trade at large. Mr. West was one of the veteran members of the Kalem Company.

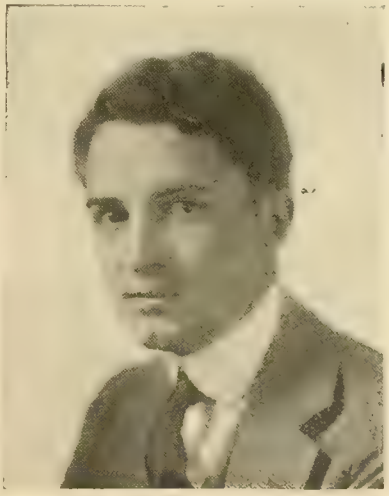
William Herman West was born in Newport, R. I., about fifty-five years ago. Following an appearance in "Pinafore," he was for ten years in opera. After five years in repertoire in Brady companies, he was featured for two years in "El Capitan." He played Foxy Quiller in "The Highwayman" and the sheriff in "Robin Hood." One of his most successful roles was as Sir Peter Teazle in "Lady Teazle." For four years he was at the Tivoli Opera House in San Francisco.

Mr. West went to Kalem nearly five years ago. His ability as an all-around actor early stamped him as one of the best on the screen. His characterizations of the high caste Chinaman or the American Indian were marked by keen understanding of national traits. His last screen work will be seen in the series entitled "The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel."

Mr. West was one of the foremost members of Glendale Lodge, B. P. O. E., retiring this summer from the chair of exalted ruler. He had seen the organization grow in membership to 500 in two and a half years from a beginning of 27. He was a gentleman as well as an actor of the old school—and a splendid type of each.

Bryant Washburn

BRYANT WASHBURN, Essanay actor, has reformed. He is no longer the bold bad man, the skulking weakling and general all-around evil character he was of yore. Instead he has blossomed out into a hero, a regular St. George, whose chief delight is to find the deadly dragons that infest society and put them to an untimely death.



Bryant Washburn.

For Mr. Washburn is no longer playing t-h-e villain parts in which he was famous. Mr. Washburn is one of the cleverest portrayers of character and one of the most deft in bringing out situations requiring subtle acting and Essanay, recognizing his ability, has placed him in lead parts and characterization work in which he has proved eminently successful and had been gaining in popularity daily.

Though Mr. Washburn now is being cast almost entirely for leads, he never hesitates to submerge himself in character work compelling complete disguise of his own personality. In the photoplay, "The Little Deceiver," he plays the part of an old man with such skill in acting and with such a perfect make-up that he could not be recognized.

This is one of the characteristics of the handsome new lead, that he is so devoted to the art of his work that he throws himself completely into the part he takes. In plays not requiring a special make-up, Mr. Washburn is one of the few actors who does not use grease paint or powder or even darken his eye-brows. Although but 25 years old, he has had a wide experience both in photoplays and on the speaking stage.

HARRY WEBSTER BACK ON BROADWAY.

After an absence of a number of years Harry McRae Webster is back on Broadway and is greeting old friends and making new ones. He began work recently at the Universal studio in New York as the new director for King Baggot and is now on his second production with the Universal star. He is more than pleased to be back in New York and expects to surpass all his previous efforts for the Universal.

"Heine and Louie" Comedies Going Well

WITH practically no advertising and no publicity the "Starlight" comedies. "Heine and Louie," have won their way with the exhibitors, and assumed an important position on the Pathe program. The idea of having two leading characters, both of them men, is certainly novel, and was the conception of Mr. Mittenthal of the Mittenthal Film Co., makers of the comedies. "Heine and Louie" are a Weberfieldian pair who do all manner of comical things at a seeming utter disregard of life and limb.

James Aubrey, who plays the part of "Heine," was born in England, and came from the London Music Hall to this country. He toured the United States playing "A Night in an English Music Hall," a popular vaudeville sketch. In this sketch he played all the principal vaudeville theaters in America. Mr. Aubrey comes of a well-known English pantomime family, which explains to some degree his adaptability to screen work.

Jas. Aubrey.

Walter Kendig.

It is interesting to note that when he first came to the Mittenthal Company for an engagement the director thought he wouldn't do, but hired him at Mr. Mittenthal's special request. After he had worked in one scene Mr. Mittenthal asked the director what he thought of the new player. The answer was one word, "immense!"

Walter Kendig, the "Louie" of the comedies, was born and brought up in Philadelphia. He put in three years in the Lubin Stock Company, and then came to New York where he was engaged to play the younger brother with William Farnham in "The Gilded Fool." Through his fine work in that production he was secured by Mr. Mittenthal to play with Aubrey in the "Starlight" comedies.

Both men can do anything with motorcycles, autos, horses, etc., and have won fame in various swimming contests. Both have received many offers to go with other companies, but are under contract with the Mittenthal Company.

Pathe Exchange managers report a good and increasing business on the "Heine and Louie" comedies, which, after all, is the best proof that they are good and meet with popular approval.

ESSANAY TO PROSECUTE DUPERS.

United States District Judge Page Morris ordered the seizure of unauthorized and fraudulent Essanay-Chaplin films at Duluth, Minn., and issued an injunction against the use of films said to violate the Essanay copyright. Several films also were seized in Chicago.

Owing to the popularity of the Charles Chaplin films there have been several cases in which fake productions have been issued. In other cases films have been rented from the General Film Company, which distributes the Chaplin films for Essanay, and the films copied and these copies sold or rented out as the original Chaplin productions.

The Essanay company charges that the copying of these films is in violation of its copyright and that it will prosecute every case brought to its notice. This action was decided upon both to protect its own rights and to insure the public of seeing a genuine Chaplin film when advertised as an Essanay-Chaplin comedy.

Many complaints have been received by Essanay that films advertised as Chaplin's were spurious. Essanay announces that in order to protect the public it will not cease in its efforts to prosecute these film pirates until all have been driven out of the country.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Mary Pickford at the Strand.

MARY PICKFORD is appearing at the Strand theater, New York, this week in a photodramatization of Frances Hodgson Burnett's famous drama, "Esmeralda," produced by the Famous Players Film Company. Mrs. Burnett, it will be remembered, is also the author of two other unusual Famous Players successes, "The Dawn of a Tomorrow" and "The Pretty Sister of Jose," in the former of which "Little Mary" scored one of her greatest screen triumphs since "Tess of the Storm Country." In "Esmeralda" the authoress has cleverly interwoven real pathos, simple and beautiful sentiment and a quaint originality and humor that will reach all hearts. The story is so generally well known that it is unnecessary to more than briefly indicate its motif. This is based upon the separation of the simple little Esmeralda and her sweetheart by the unexpected finding of a fortune in ore on her father's farm, and the suddenly developed ambitions of her mother, who becomes society-smitten when she learns of her wealth.

Capably directed by James Kirkwood and ably supported by Fuller Mellish, Ida Waterman, Arthur Hoops and other screen favorites, Mary Pickford succeeds in making "Esmeralda" a character that will long linger in the memory.

The Topical Review, scientific and travel subjects, a new comedy and well selected musical numbers are also on the program.

John Barrymore at the Broadway.

John Barrymore, a favorite with all lovers of clean and wholesome film fun, is leading the program at the Broadway theater, this week, in another success produced by the Famous Players Film Company, a picturization of George C. Shedd's popular story, "The Incorrigible Dukane." The story is a unique combination of drama, comedy and romance, and Mr. Barrymore gives a delightful performance of its happy-go-lucky hero. South American travel pictures, Pathe daily news, cartoons and short comedies complete the bill.

Richard Buhler

ALTHOUGH still a young man, Richard Buhler, the new Lubin leading man, has had a varied and valuable experience since adopting the stage as a profession. Mr. Buhler's advent into the dramatic profession was not due to an unlooked-for twist in the whirligig of fate. On the contrary, he decided secretly to become an actor, or at least make the attempt, before he had finished his course at high school in Washington, D. C. His father was a sculptor of distinction and his grandfather a physician of reputation. As a boy, Buhler displayed considerable talent in modeling, but when he was called upon to choose between sculpture or medicine for a career, he selected the latter, although still inwardly resolving that some day he would be an actor. As a preliminary move, before being sent to a medical college, he was placed at work in a drug store on Pennsylvania avenue and was assigned to the soda fountain. It was here that he was thrown in daily contact with prominent senators, representatives and diplomats, as well as leading actors who happened to be playing in Washington from time to time.

Richard Buhler.

He studied Shakespeare and all literature pertaining to the stage and joined the Washington Dramatic Institute and Baker Dramatic Club. At length he was engaged to play a small juvenile part and "hustle the props" with Cora Tanner's "Alone in London" company, one of the leading traveling organizations of sixteen years ago. Now Mr. Buhler is enacting the leading male role in Louis Reeves Harrison's war play, "The Rights of Man," being filmed at the Lubin studios.

Spokes from the Hub

Vanity Fair Scenes Staged in Historic Louisburg Square.

By Marion Howard.

ON BEACON HILL is an exclusive place called Louisburg Square, where the quality still reside and which has not degenerated into lodging houses as elsewhere in the neighborhood. It is distinctly English in its appearance, recalling bits of London. For this reason Mrs. Fiske and other film players came here to stage a scene in Vanity Fair, taking that historic Square. The "Hub" is immensely flattered thereby, and we make no charge for this "atmosphere." We will later see Becky Sharp descending those queer old steps and various other characters of Thackeray walking about as he himself did on his visit here. Mrs. Fiske was delighted with the idea and an ocean voyage is avoided. It seems that the dramatization is by a Harvard man and a Tech.

Speaking of Tech reminds us that the forthcoming treat, "The House of a Thousand Candles," has for its hero a Tech graduate. It is a fat part, and I wonder where they unearth all those candle sticks.

The pet bad woman in the films round here is Cleo Ridgley, whom we have seen in "The Fighting Hope," "The Puppet Crown" and "The Secret Orchard" to excellent advantage. "By Jove," said a man back of me, "she is a mixture of mother love, and devil," referring to her in "The Secret Orchard," when she discloses a double nature. By the way, why "orchard," Mister Author? The secret meetings were held back of a huge rock by the sea with not so much as a tree in sight. There was a lot of guessing all around me until finally one said, "Well, they were tasting the forbidden fruit all right, and the apple was passed evidently." Carlyle Blackwell, the manly lover, is getting to be a rival of Tom Forman and a few others, and makes a fine opposite to Blanche Sweet. We were glad to again see Edward Mackaye, a Boston favorite, and Theodore Roberts, one of the best old-timers, in the films today; always reliable. Well, well, so Pennsylvania put a ban on this play, and it "got by" in this village, despite our City Hall censorship!

What a cast in "Sold"—another unsuitable name for such a film! Pauline Frederick, born right here, covered herself with glory and the settings were remarkably fine, eliciting much admiration, especially in the minds of the artists, not all of whom boast of such studios. Compared with Edith Storey's posing in "The Island of Regeneration, Miss Frederick's semi-nude one might have been done for a Sunday school class, much as the heroine deplored such a display. I see that St. Louis made a row over the swimming stunt of Miss Storey, as our Mayor would have done had he been at home, but I hope the film folks win out, as it is as fine a bit of work as the producers have honored us with thus far. To go back to "Sold." We had our first glimpse of Edgar Davenport in a brief part as a lawyer, and in the make-up the resemblance to his father, the late E. L. Davenport, was startling. His brother, Harry, the comedian of the family, is still making us laugh over his Jarr family bits, in addition to interesting all in his clever work like that in "The Short Circuit," with the wonderful blind boy, whose versatility is shown in the Jarr series. May Davenport (Mrs. William Seymour), enjoys the films. The Seymours are at their Duxbury summer home and have a merry family.

There is a double bill at the Park this week featuring two local favorites, Fanny Ward and Elsie Janis, who are members of the Professional Women's Club; so is May Robson, whose "A Night Out" has been released much to the delight of all who saw the play. I wonder if the fire-escape scene described so vividly by Miss Robson will be shown. It ought to be quite a feature. You recall that she had been to town with her sporty nephew just to see a bit of their life and that the place where they took her was raided—hence the escape by the outside staircase and the loss of her front hair. Aunty was quite game and I thought at the time what a dandy film that would make.

There is great rejoicing over the purchase of the rights to "The Birth of a Nation," now closing its remarkable run at the Tremont theater. A syndicate representing Boston and two smaller cities secured it for the tidy sum of $52,000, so that all New England will have an opportunity to witness the Griffith gem.

A party of us went to see "The Sins of the Mothers" at the Modern and I tell you it was pretty gruesome, but had its deep lesson for bridge fiends. It was refreshing to see Anita Stewart out of the diaphanous gown of "The Goddess" and in modern rig amid sumptuous surroundings. A gushing young thing back of me said, "I could just love Earle Williams; isn't he grand?"

* * *

I stepped into the Exeter Street theater to note progress made in the interior and found the decorators in control. There is an improvement in the balcony now enlarged, with four large boxes, the seats in which are to be 50 cents. Mrs. Marcellus Ayer, the plucky manager, has her program all made up for the opening night, September 13, and tells me that the boxes are already spoken for.

* * *

The other day I put the question to a number of theatergoers as to long runs, and all agreed that the time is coming for a continuance of the better class of films, the elimination of horse play at first-class houses and increased admission price. "The public is fast becoming educated," said a State House official; "is getting critical over slap-stick antics which amuse only the ignorant, hysterical and ill-bred, and will demand the elimination of such inflictions upon ladies and gentlemen." "Them's my sentiments, tew!"

* * *

Another flagrant violation of flag etiquette in a short film seen at the Park the other night, the title of which has gone from me, but it was a celebration of a "Pioneers Day" somewhere in the West and the American flag was hung repeatedly on projecting poles with the Union next to the building. How anyone can put out a flag that way is beyond me and it is not good for the eyes of young folks to see it so. Directors ought to know better. They should have heard some of the comments made in that audience, for over here we are keen on "Old Glory," how to hang it, etc. Yes, I mean to be critical, belonging as I do to several flag organizations. Why not? Unless attention is called through some such publication as this the violation will go on. All up for the flag!

"Affinities" ought to please the quality, for we hear that of the scenes many of them were made in and about the homes of wealthy society residents of Chattanooga and in one (posed by the families) more than $100,000,000 was represented. Mary Roberts Rinehart, author of "Seven Days," is responsible for the play.

* * *

Some one at my side asks, "What is a photoplay, anyhow?" Well, according to the lamented George Fitch, it is "one of those silences that is golden." Commend me to his latest essay on "Photo Plays," for it is richly humorous. One sentence reads thus: "It costs $2 and carriage fares to see a famous play with words and 10 cents to see the same play (plus action) with words omitted. This is why millions of people are flocking to the moving picture palaces, while the treasurer of the legitimate theatre has so little to do that he forgets to be cold and alone when the customer comes in."

* * *

"Sealed Valley" drew immense audiences at the big Boston theatre which has had to open its second balcony owing to increased demand for seats. Manager Ferguson is wearing a broad smile these days. This week we are enjoying Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow playing here for the first time since the former left the Essanay for the Metro. There was an unusually fine bill at this theatre last Sunday evening, a feature being the Fadette orchestra of white gowned young women—each one a soloist.

Reviews of Current Productions

"The Woman Next Door"

Owen Davis' Popular Drama Filmed by George Kleine with Uniform Excellence—Miss Fenwick Makes Hit of Her Photodramatic Career.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

AFTER careful viewing, on two occasions, of George Kleine's photodramatic production of "The Woman Next Door," the predominant impression was that the story is well connected and clearly told. One never loses the thread for an instant, so that attention can be thoroughly centered on the other important features of the production. This, of course, is attributable to the talented adaptation of the drama to photoplay purposes, and to the cameo precision of the subtitles, letters, etc.

Scene from "The Woman Next Door" (Kleine).

When Jenny Gay is telling Tom Grayson her story of the wrongs inflicted by the villain, Jack Lake, the intelligent spectator cannot fail to observe, and to appreciate, the deft manner in which concurrent incidents of the photoplay are introduced. Heretofore, so far as my observation is concerned, it has been the custom to have the pictures tell such a story continuously; but, in this instance, time is considered an important factor, and so the other incident, which takes place contemporaneously, is introduced at the proper moment. These breaks occur without impairing the continuity of Jenny's story, by the use of carefully worded subtitles, and they contribute largely to the pleasure of the spectator, because they furnish, at the proper time, essential links of the main story.

The only exceptions—and they are of minor importance—taken by me to this otherwise faultlessly produced photodrama are the characterizations of the goody-goody guardians of respectability, and the overtime permitted Jack Lake, the villain, in the typewriting scene. When shall we get away from that ultra air of sanctimoniousness, so generally affected by actors when they impersonate people of this particular class? The man in this self-constituted party of three, particularly, is a caricature of the part assigned him. It is the old, worn-out, stilled stage creation that always misses its point, and makes one feel sorry for the inanity of the depredator.

The customary good taste and artistic discernment revealed in the George Kleine productions, in the matter of settings, are observable throughout. By the use of the Eltinge theater in the production the atmosphere of realism is attained. The interiors of the Whittier home, of Jenny Gay's dressing room at the theater and of her apartments, and of the men's club, etc., are all in harmony with the demands.

I have never before seen Miss Irene Fenwick in better form, in moving pictures, than in "The Woman Next Door." Her peculiar type of beauty, it appears to me, is more pronounced in these pictures than in any others in which she has appeared. Her acting in the part of Jenny Gay goes beyond the bounds of impersonation—she seems to live the life of that sorely tried little woman. In the room, in the Kirwood Hotel, where Jenny is discovered with the villain, Lake, her face and attitude show mental and physical collapse, a stunned, hopeless condition as if the end of the world had come to her. The brave fighting spirit of a helpless, good woman at bay is shown in the Whittier supper scene and in the expose at the Grayson home. In lighter moods, as the actress in her dressing room at the theater and in Jenny's association with Cecelia, and in the tender scenes with Tom Grayson, Miss Fenwick is an adorable creature. In the final scene, where Tom Grayson places the engagement ring on Jenny's finger, Miss Fenwick and Mr. Taggart furnish the spectator with a chaste and sweet method of plighting troths. The well-worn osculatory practice is nicely dispensed with.

Ben L. Taggart is a handsome and manly lover in the character of Tom Grayson. He and Lawson Butt, who plays the part of Jack Lake, the villain of the photoplay, can take credit for much of the strength of the production. That is a lively and exciting mill in which Tom Grayson and Lake match their strength and fistic ability.

Pretty Miss Della Connor is delightfully kittenish in the role of Cecilia Grayson, and Judge and Mrs. Grayson are worthily impersonated by Albert Andruss and Miss Camille Dalberg. John Nicholson gives a fine character sketch of a chief of Mexican rural police.

"The Majesty of the Law"

Bosworth, Inc., Produce a Five-reel Drama of the South, with George Fawcett at the Head of the Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A STOLEN necklace and a falsely accused hero are introduced to the audience in the early stages of this five-reel drama. The real culprit is the brother of the hero's sweetheart, and, to save the lady's sisterly feelings, young Kent, the son of a prominent judge, makes no effort to clear himself. Repudiated by his father, the young man goes to a distant city, obtains a position of trust in a bank and is again falsely accused of theft, the result of attempting to help the bank president's son. He again sacrifices himself for another. This leads up to the situation where his father presides at his trial. The boy is found guilty, and Judge Kent, like the ancient Roman, Brutus, gives his son the full penalty of the law. At this juncture, fate stops frowning on the young man and the truth becomes known.

It is quite evident, from the above synopsis, that the real interest of the photoplay is around young Kent, his father, the Judge, being hardly a good second. The material used in the story is of fair quality, although selected from well-seasoned stock, but no great amount of skill is displayed in constructing it into a photoplay. Dramaturgic rules do not admit, in one drama, of two accusations of theft against the hero. Let fate strike him with all the relentless force she pleases, but never twice in the same place—unless she is in a comedy mood, then the more repeats the better.

George Fawcett, who made his screen debut in this picture, has little difficulty in giving full value to the situations that fall to Judge Kent. Contrary to all tradition, he discards the time-honored moustache and goatee, and plays the part with a smooth face. William Desmond is manly and earnest as young Kent. Charles Ruggles, John Oaker, Myrtle Stedman and Jane Wolfe deserve commendation for their work.

Good photography and liberally mounted stage sets are features of the production.

"Black Eyes"

Bright One-reel Edison Comedy by Lee Arthur, Will Louis Director.

we are creatures of impulse and sometimes forget both our good resolutions and our sacred word of honor. We yield to temptation, are overcome with regret, deceive our friends, swear "never again," and yet we stumble into the same old pitfall and do not get control of ourselves until we reach an age when it is doubtful whether we resist temptation or simply do not have it thrown so often in our way. Such is the theme of "Black Eyes."

Hubby falls for a prize fight after promising to take his wife to the theater, while she seeks recompense in the doubtful company of those who gamble at bridge whist. Incrimination and recrimination when both reach home in the wee small hours, to be followed by reconciliation and promise of reformation. These diverse "ations" are repeated later on, when hubby attends a gay party on the anniversary of his wedding. Wifey reverts to bridge. Quarrels ensue in both places; hubby gets a black eye and goes to Professor Scarab to have it restored to its natural color. Wifey gets a black eye and flies to the same resort. This is a "Frenchy" situation, but it is so well handled and so humorous in results that it wins. The story is highly amusing without resort to slapstick.

"The Call of the Dance"

In Kalem's Four-part Picture Yancsi Dolly Shows That She Is an Actress as Well as a Dancer.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

TO THOSE who think of Yancsi Dolly merely as a dancer in Broadway musical comedies, this picture will be something of a surprise. There are scenes in which she dances with all the grace and charm that gave her an enviable reputation on the stage; then there are others in which she acts an appealing character with the sympathy and expression of a player trained in the ways of the screen. She is natural, pleasing in appearance and altogether just the actress to play the role Natalie, a girl of the East Side tenements whose career is eventful before she rises to the heights of musical comedy. This is Miss Dolly's first picture, but no one would ever guess it from the manner in which she interprets an interesting character.

Among productions made for Kalem's "Broadway Favorites" releases, "The Call of the Dance" need give precedence to none in point of popular qualities and artistic presentation. It is a story of slum life and theatrical life combined, strong in characterization and reasonable in the sequence of dramatic happenings as Natalie is drawn from the darkness of the underworld into the glitter of Broadway. Director George L. Sargent's scenes in the tenement, where the girl is at the mercy of a drunken father, abound in atmosphere. The characters, too, are sharply outlined, with George E. Romain playing the sodden father and Frank Leonard cast as the aged musician, who seeks forgetfulness in the music of his violin.

It is in these uninspiring surroundings that Natalie first reveals an inborn passion for music and dancing. Without training, she instinctively finds steps to harmonize with the tunes of her next-door neighbor. Then, perfectly innocent, she accompanies a friend to a dance hall of the lowest order and is trapped by agents of what a sub-title terms the "Vice Trust." How the assistant district attorney releases her from the room in which she is held prisoner and begins a friendship destined to stand many tests, makes sound photoplay drama, replete with action. The picture is delightfully free from padding and there is plenty of variety as Natalie's romantic life is depicted. There is a welcome contrast in settings, some of which, notably in the final reel where Dolly appears as a musical comedy queen in all her glory, carry the spirit of the Gay White Way.

mon, Orlando Daly and Rollo Lloyd are among those who assist the young star in placing "The Call of the Dance" among the pictures that can be highly recommended.

"A Little Brother of the Rich"

Five-Reel Broadway Universal Feature Based on Well Known Novel by Joseph Medill Patterson.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE novel by Joseph Medill Patterson yielded rich fruit for the scenario writer in the matter of picking stirring scenes of metropolitan life. Not in the entire five reels of this production is there any break in the interesting action, although it is well into the third reel before anything of an intensely dramatic nature transpires. When this comes it is soul-stirring and convincing.

The cast employed in this production is headed by Hobart Bosworth, Jane Novak and Hobart Henley. The three principals do excellent work; Mr. Bosworth gives a fine study of the actor who carries both himself and the girl to success; Jane Novak is attractive and pleasing throughout, and Mr. Henley is at his best in picturing the little brother who tried to play the rich man's game and fell in the struggle. Others in the well-balanced cast are Maude George, Albert MacQuarrie, Carl von Schiller, Edmond Brown and Walter Belasco. The story begins with several separate threads of interest, including Henry Leamington's struggles to overcome the liquor habit, which threatens to undo his stage career, the love of Paul and Sylvia, and the promised effort of Carl von Schiller to make Paul acquainted with an adventuress named Muriel. Paul and Sylvia are seen in a college production of Romeo and Juliet, where the girl gets her first liking for the stage.

With the financial failure of Sylvia's father, the girl goes into the business world. She meets Henry Leamington a second time and he saves her from insult at the hands of a theatrical manager. He learns of her desire to go on the stage and offers to instruct her. This tutelage proves the means of regenerating Leamington himself, who abstains from drink through love of the girl.

Paul and Muriel are discovered by the latter's husband in a compromising situation. Muriel is divorced and later Paul marries her. He then learns of Sylvia's success and his old love for her returns. Muriel is killed in an auto wreck—a very realistically pictured scene. Paul sues for Sylvia's love and Leamington, thinking he is about to lose her again, takes to drink. But Sylvia is now really in love with the great actor and the closing scenes of the story, in which they together achieve a Broadway success, make a powerful climax.

"The Heart of Jennifer"

Hazel Dawn Is Starred in a Five-part Famous Players Subject That Is Well Made and Has Strong Situations.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE performance of Hazel Dawn in "The Heart of Jennifer," released in five parts by the Famous Players on Aug. 30, is just what might be expected from this good player. There is one phase of Miss Dawn's work, however, that stands out. It is the interpretation of a woman who may be described as a thoroughbred—a woman of breeding—who understands men and also how to handle them. If she is embraced by a man repellant to her she throws no fit. She easily and with perfect poise pushes him from her; the face reveals no measure of the inward tumult. The same dignity characterizes the work of Miss Dawn in the sterner moments of real tragedy. If there be restraint in the situations of seriousness there is a corresponding wholesomeness and spontaneity in the lighter moods.

James Kirkwood directs the production and also plays the role of Murray, the lumberman who marries Jennifer only to be misled by Weldon, a disappointed rival, following the ceremony. Mr. Kirkwood is strong as the brusque small-community business man unversed in the ways of the ultra-citified. Irene Howley, in the role of Agnes, the sister of Murray, displays real skill in the treatment of situations of power. Jennifer's tragedy is of the soul; Agnes' is that and of blood as well. Miss Howley's work adds markedly to the force of the story. The veteran Russell Bassett as the father of Jennifer contributes his full measure, too. Harry Brown has the heavy part, that of Weldon, who when he fails to win Jennifer not only separates bride and bridegroom but adds to his misdeed the betrayal of Agnes—and meets his death at her hand.

The story is one of steady interest, with an increasing tensity in the latter half. Added to the theme and the work of the players are the backgrounds. Much of the latter is of a rolling country, picturesque indeed, with stream and wood. The camera work, too, is notable.

THE entry of the brute man on the scene has added color to the Pathe-Balboa serial. The type is a good one and is being exceptionally well impersonated by William Conklin. In fact "Neal of the Navy" abounds with good types. Joe Welch, the foster brother of Annette Illington, is another fine sample, impersonating a character in which cunning and cowardice are the dominant factors.

Annette Lillian Lorraine has now reached her eighteenth birthday and has been made acquainted with her origin and future prospects by Mrs. Hardin, her foster mother, and is placed in possession of "The Yellow Packet" from which Episode 2 gets its name.

William Courtleigh, Jr., as Neal Hardin has an unpleasant experience when Joe Welch in attempted rivalry of him by foul means is the cause of his examination paper being thrown out at the naval examination at Annapolis. He wins the approval of the spectator, however, by pursuing his ambition in the face of discouragement.

Episode 3, "The Failure," presents the first attempt by Hernandez and Ponto to gain possession of the yellow packet and the map of Lost Isle, where a rich mineral deposit is supposed to exist.

Joe Welch, in league with them, in a clumsy effort to steal the packet sets fire to the house, when we are treated to a fire scene of considerable spectacular effect. Annette returning to the house to rescue the packet has fallen unconscious amid the smoke and debris, when she is rescued by the brute man and carried to Mrs. Hardin in the grounds of the house, in spite of the efforts of Hernandez and Ponto to prevent his doing so.

The interest of the new serial carries well, and there is plenty of opportunity to work out the plot of the story to a successful climax.

"The Phantom Happiness"

A Three-Reel Lubin Release, Written by Shannon Fife and Produced by George W. Terwilliger.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE story which Shannon Fife tells in this three-reel drama focuses rather a mild light on the "eternal triangle." A temperamental young novelist, who is able to support a wife and live in a seaside cottage surrounded by a beautiful rose garden, works away, happy and contented, until his wife is left a fortune—and the other woman appears on the scene. He finds that luxury and society distract his thoughts, so he betakes himself to the home of his new friend, filled with the highly moral thought that here he will have the quiet and inspiration he craves. The to-be-expected happens; propinquity baits the trap for them and the novelist soon finds the other woman in his arms. After a brief but fervid romance, he discovers that their happiness is not the real article, and goes back to his wife, while his affinity becomes the head of a children's hospital, supported by money furnished by the novelist's wife.

Mr. Fife has displayed his usual good taste in setting forth the foregoing incidents, but has failed to sound any strong ethical or dramatic note during the progress of his play. Moral stamina is a lacking ingredient in all three of his characters, and one is forced to harbor a suspicion that the works of his hero are made up of two-thirds sophistry and one-third sentimentality. Viewed solely as an entertainment, this photoplay will appeal to the class of spectators who find enjoyment in the writings of the Robert W. Chambers school, where well mannered, physically immaculate persons merely toy with the great passions of life.

The outdoor locations have been chosen with a keen eye to artistic effect, and the acting of Earl Metcalfe, Ormi Hawley, Rosetta Brice and William H. Turner meet every histrionic demand.

"Helene of the North"

In Which Marguerite Clark, in Strongly Dramatic Famous Players Subject, Does What Is Said to Be Her Best Yet—Dawley Directs.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

COMING out of the Broadway theater on Saturday afternoon, where for a week "Helene of the North" had been showing, we asked Manager Langsfeld what he had heard during the previous seven days about his feature. "They're all saying it is the best thing Marguerite Clark has done, that it's a fine picture," replied the unemotional manager in orthodox cold-blooded fashion. "We've had them standing in line waiting to get in most of the time, too."

There you have the voice of the people. If anything remains to be said it is chiefly that this Famous Players five-part subject was produced by J. Searle Dawley, that there is a story that holds tight, that there is atmosphere, and that there are good players. The tale has to do with the country that falls under the jurisdiction of the Northwest Mounted Police; and the director for his backgrounds has gone to a country that well may be typical of the north and the northwest. Waterfalls of size are frequently in evidence; there are buildings of stone, too. In the finished whole, however, the scenery is relegated to a position of comparative unimportance—it supplements, it complements, but it never dominates. The play and the players are always foremost.

The opening scenes are of a gathering known as a telltale party—where while on the open fire a few sticks are consumed one of those present tells a story. It is Marguerite Clark who as Helene Dearing relates the initial tale. It is in this anecdotal form that "Helene of the North" is unfolded to us; and if at times in the course of its telling there is the inevitable reversion in thought to the fireside party and perhaps the accompanying regret that the action is not straightforward there is a compensating kick to the denouement, and we feel the director has gained his point.

In her plain garb of the girl of the north Marguerite Clark is more charming than in her party dress. She does more than interest right at the beginning; she fascinates and grips —and this is true whether the situation be one of coquetry or of stern drama. Frank Losee gives a sterling performance as John Dearing, the well-born Englishman with a crooked streak. Brigham Royce, as Wild Buffalo, the Indian caught with the wet goods, gives an interpretation of the red man that will stand as a model. Conway Tearle as Ralph Conner, the N. W. M. P. private, and also the Lord Traverse for whose arrival the party awaits, will be liked. So, too, will be Dave Wall as the white-haired curé, the friend of Helene, and who at the muzzle of a pistol in the hand of Pierre outwits that hard character and marries Helene to Ralph and not to Pierre (Latin for once proved to be a mighty live and not a dead language); Elliott Dexter as Pierre and Robert Rogers as Captain Westforth.

"Helene of the North" abounds in strong, thrilling situations. It will rank among its maker's best.

"The Impostor"

Jose Collins Featured in Five-part World Film Picturization of Douglas Murray Play.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ALTHOUGH "The Impostor" as a stage play may be deemed a success, it has not lent itself to the screen with the same appeal which it may have had for the patron of the spoken drama. The screen version of the melodrama is not convincing because many of its situations are approached artificially; and the opportunities given to the star, Josie Collins, as the "Tearer," an outcast of society, and afterward Miss Gibson, a nurse, associate of the impostor, are too limited.

Alec Francis has the title role, impersonating the character of Sir Anthony Gregson, a grouchy baronet, and that of his twin brother, Blink. These two roles are nicely outlined and differentiated by Mr. Francis. The picture contains many interesting types, and it might be suggested that in the screen version some of the play's situations might have been modified into more realistic shape.

The picture's weakest situation occurs at the death of Sir Anthony in the cabin of Blink. There is no manifest reason why Blink or the "Tearer" should reflect even momentarily the terror of guilt, when the man died a natural death; yet this effect precedes what is in many respects an admirable determination on the part of Blink to impersonate his brother and to right the wrongs committed by him.

The production as it stands has good points, especially in the earlier stages where various characteristic scenes between the baronet and the working men occur; and the impression as received by the reviewer is that had the adaptation of the play been more carefully arranged the faultiness of the picture version would be in a large measure alleviated.

"A Yankee From the West"

Four-Reel Majestic Adaptation from Opie Read, by Mary H. O'Connor, Directed by George Siegmann.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

WITH an underlying theme which never grows tiresome, that of a thoughtless man's redemption through the influence of a pure-minded woman, "A Yankee from the West" depends largely upon theme and the acting of admirable types for sustained interest. Wallace Reid, Signe Auen and Tom Wilson give vitality to their roles every moment they are in evidence on the screen, and they are materially assisted by those who play in minor parts, indicating a wisdom of choice on the part of Mr. Siegmann, but the story's construction adheres so closely to that of the original that it drags at times in spite of its vigorous elements. It has also the appearance of being stretched from smaller dimensions. It may be that the story is a difficult one to tell, because of its many lapses of time, but there is an art in covering these which the scenario writer should study in future efforts.

Young Milford, college boy sent West in search of his life work, loses a favorable start through careless methods of living and is led to steal from his superior officer by a rival for the affections of a pretty young girl newly arrived from Sweden. Her native purity defends her from the rival, but she is not strong enough to redeem young Milford, whom she loves. Her faith in him, however, shames him into a sturdy self-redemption that enables him to beat his pugilistic rival in a lively fight and restore the stolen funds. Realizing that he must also pay a penalty exacted by the law, he marries the young girl, who has improved herself through love for him, and manfully faces punishment. His courage spares them both humiliation and starts them on a happy career together.

Reincarnation.

Two-Reel Thanhouser of Splendid Theme and Spiritual Treatment.

COURTS of law are not among God's creations. In no sense are they derived from nature, but have been devised by men of strength and position to regulate the weaker members of society and have gradually come to be regarded as a menace, quite as much as a protection, to those who seek justice. Law being in many cases merely a substitution of cunning for brute force has brought into existence highly trained men of cunning, known as lawyers, whose principal vocation is that of advising how the unlawful may be achieved without violating the letter of the law. A man need not revenge himself by direct injury of his rival. He may achieve the torture and humiliation of his rival by what is vulgarly known as a "frame-up." "Reincarnation" is the story of a "frame-up" that might easily have claimed an innocent victim but for a vision which came to the judge on the eve of rendering a decision.

Scene from "Reincarnation" (Thanhouser).

The strong theme admits of a thousand variations in its development—the one chosen in "Reincarnation" is almost purely spiritual. Such a development, impossible on the stage, not plausible in print, is admirably suited to visualization on the screen. The judge is a dreamer, a man of active imagination, and his mind is led away from the cold facts of evidence into the realms of speculation in a very pretty way. It transpires on the morrow, when there is to be summing up, that the suggestion of his dream, mystically incorporated with common-sense, leads him to the truth and to justice.

The work room of a well known Los Angeles factory, in which several hundred girls are employed, was secured for the staging of several of the scenes in "The Noon Hour," a Reliance comedy drama of exceptional human interest. "Billie West" is the featured player. Florence Elmor, Mac Diarmid, Cora Drew and G. M. Blue are other members of the cast.

"And by These Deeds—"

Biograph Dramatic Two-Reel Roy Norton Children's Story Contains an Abundance of Heart Interest.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Biograph Company will release on Sept. 21 a two-part story in which two of the three principals are little girls, very little girls, but one of them at least displays a talent which some of her older sisters well may envy. "And by These Deeds—" is an adaptation of the story by Roy Norton. Wray Physioc, who produced it, shows a skill in the mastery of little ones that is marked; and in those little ones he had singularly good material with which to work.

"And by These Deeds—" is a story of a burglar and a poor girl and a rich girl. Of heart interest there is an abundance. The backgrounds or the great majority of them are of squalor and of the dire poverty from which it springs. Ivan Christy is the burglar who resumes his trade when he learns that through the loss of deposited money he cannot otherwise make good a promise to the poor girl to buy her a present. Burglar he may be, but his tenderness toward children compels sympathy from the first. Laura Lavarnie is the Widow Callahan, the mother of the poor girl. She gives a fine portrayal of the woman fighting for the existence of her offspring.

Katherine Lee is the poor girl, the character that at times dominates the story. She captivates as well as holds. Somehow she always does the right thing, the natural thing, never those things which one in fear expects when a child has the center of the stage. She smiles and laughs—and she cries; and surely there will be many who on these occasions will be deeply moved. Zoe Bech is the little rich girl, and she contributes her full share to the success of the picture.

The second half of this story is filled with situations that stir the heart. There are others, too, that make for mirth, as, for instance, the act of the little rich girl jumping out of bed and upbraiding the burglar for taking her toys. Her insistence on accompanying him that she may see the poor girl who has no toys is a perfectly natural sequence of the story her strange visitor has told her. The ensuing scenes, the children with their remarkable playthings; the distress of the father and mother of the rich girl when they discover their loss; the friendship of the two children; the arrest for kidnapping that follows the attempt of Slick Bill to return the rich girl to her home the morning following; the grief of the two children over the action of the police, and the happy termination in court—all these constitute real drama; it is life and it is art.

Grace D'Armond in Selig Comedy.

"The Leaving of Lawrence," a Selig comedy in one reel, released Aug 31, is a comedy carrying unusual action and plot. It is also noteworthy because Miss Grace D'Armond, the charming young actress who has appeared almost exclusively in the support of Tyrone Power, Harry Mestayer, and Otis Harlan in Selig Red Seal Plays, takes the leading feminine role. She is supported by Mr. John Charles, the Broadway actor, who has scored such successes as "Captain Bright" in Selig's "A Texas Steer," "Dr. Pool," in Selig's "A Millionaire Baby," etc. The comedy was written and directed by Giles R. Warren.

CORCORAN SECURES BIG ORDER.

A. J. Corcoran has received a very large order from the Universal for their plant at Leonia, N. J., consisting of 100 Corcoran developing tanks and 50 special tanks. The order is being rushed through with Corcoran rapidity so that the Universal will not be delayed in getting out its several large features. Beside this order, Corcoran has received several smaller ones for western companies and the plant in Jersey City has been the scene of some activity for some time and will continue so for the rest of this year.

"THE JUNGLE LOVERS" (Selig).

"The Jungle Lovers," a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, released in regular service, Thursday, Sept. 16, is one of James Oliver Curwood's unusual plots, produced by Lloyd B. Carleton. Many opportunities are afforded Bessie Eyton, who assumes the leading feminine role, to convincingly present her talents as one of the world's most captivating moving picture stars. She associates with and makes pets of many wild animals, including herds of elephants, leopards, lions, etc.

Fifteen years later Naida, a beautiful girl, has the wild beasts of the jungle as her pets. Jan is in love with Naida. Starling, an ivory trader, arrives in that locality and covets Naida. Refused her hand by Van Cleeve, Starling vows he will take her by force. He endeavors to do so, but is thrown from a cliff by a native chief after an exciting combat with clubbed rifles. Jan, who has been tied to a tree, is attacked by a ferocious leopard, but his life is saved by Naida. Later, Naida and Jan observe their wedding day in the presence of Van Cleeve and the natives. Supporting Miss Eyton in this exciting Selig three-reel Diamond Special are such artists as Edward J. Peil, Edwin Wallock and others.

CHARLOTTE WALKER IN "OUT OF DARKNESS."

Charlotte Walker, the celebrated theatrical star, will make her second appearance in a Paramount picture, before the photodramatic audiences in the thrilling drama of lost identity, "Out of Darkness," by Hector Turnbull, on Sept. 9.

Produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, in this play Miss Walker is said to equal the success she made in the Lasky production of "Kindling."

In "Out of Darkness," Miss Walker is seen as Helen Scott, wealthy young heiress and owner of the famous Scott Canneries. Helen, however, is so interested in society that she leaves the handling of the business affairs of the canneries' various branches to her hard-fisted uncle.

In the cast, supporting Miss Walker, are such well known artists as Thomas Meighan, remembered for his splendid work in "Kindling" and "The Fighting Hope," clever Marjorie Daw; Hal Clements, Tom Forman, Mrs. Loyola O'Connor and other members of the Lasky all-star stock company.

"MAN'S LAW" BY COLIN CAMPBELL.

On Monday, Sept. 13, Mr. Colin Campbell, the world-famous director and author, will present as a Selig special in two reels, released in regular service, a motion picture de luxe entitled "Man's Law." Mr. Campbell not only produced the drama but originated the plot. He produced such noteworthy Selig productions as "The Spoilers," "The Carpet From Bagdad," "Sands of Time," etc., and his latest production is both beautiful and appealing.

GAUMONT TO PRODUCE A SPLIT REEL.

Gaumont Company's cameramen throughout the United States are busy photographing the beauty spots and interesting parts of the country for their travel series to be known as "Seeing America First." This interesting and instructive series will be released as a split reel, the other subject to be the famous newspaper comic cartoon series entitled "Keeping Up With the Joneses" by the well known cartoonist, Arthur R. Momand, who signs his sketches under the name of "Pop." He originated a series dealing with the human side of life, which he named, "Keeping Up With the Joneses." This series is now running in the New York Globe and more than 150 of the best known dailies in the United States and Canada.

These cartoons will be animated for screen production by Harry Palmer, who originated "The Babbling Bess Series" for the New York World and many other famous comic cartoons for papers throughout the United States.

This split reel series will be released every week on the Mutual Regular Program, beginning Monday, Sept. 13, and thereafter on every Tuesday.

MARY PICKFORD IN ADAPTATION OF "ESMERALDA."

The Famous Players Film Co.'s early September contributions to the Paramount Program consist of two of its most prominent stars in unusually strong and typical characterizations—Mary Pickford in a faithful photo production of the great American stage success, "Esmeralda," by Frances Hodgson Burnett, released Sept. 6, and John Barrymore, the king of screen comedy, in an elaborate picturization of George C. Shedd's melodramatic comedy, "The Incorrigible Dukane," released Sept. 2. As a photoplay, "Esmeralda" is a faithful presentation of the beautiful and noble sentiments of the beloved play in which Miss Pickford delineates the title character with all the sweetness and naturalness that is illustriously hers. Whether in "Esmeralda's" quiet little home on the farm, or in the whirl of society life in the great metropolis, Mary Pickford is so much the mistress of every situation with which this appealing drama confronts her, that this impersonation will probably be recorded as one of her greatest character creations.

"The Incorrigible Dukane," a unique combination of drama, comedy and romance, by Geo. C. Shedd, provides John Barrymore, the popular stage and film favorite, with one of the most unusual characterizations he has yet impersonated on the screen.

The comedy of the subject is derived from a series of ludicrous misfortunes of which the young and incorrigible Dukane is the constant victim; the drama emanates from the thrilling manner in which the young ne'er-do-well redeems himself, and saves the fortune and honor of his father; and the romance develops—in the usual manner of youth. These varying elements of photoplay composition effectively prove the versatility of John Barrymore, inimitable in his comedy scenes, impressive in the dramatic situation in which he finds himself, and truly lovable as a lover.

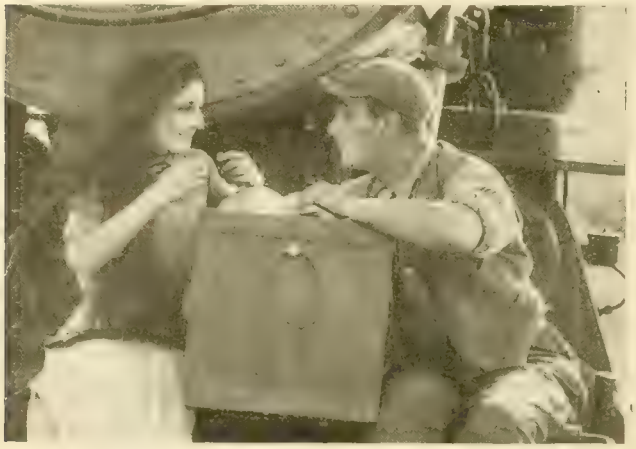
"THE GIRL AND HER TRUST" (Biograph).

Always on the alert for something out of the ordinary, the director of this one-reel Biograph reissue succeeded in crowding enough thrills and surprises to satisfy the most thirsty desire for suspense.

Left alone at the station in charge of a shipment of gold, the telegraph is attacked by two tramps who arrived on the same train with the treasure chest. She telegraphs for help, but the tramps cut the wire before her message is completed.



Scene from "The Girl and Her Trust" (Biograph).

Enough of it is received at the other end, however, to start a posse on a special engine. The tramps, failing to open the express box, decide to take it away and open it at their leisure. As they place it on a handcar the girl, true to her trust, comes out and clings to the car. They make off with the hand-car, but are overcome by the pursuing posse and, after a running fight, are captured.

The entire picture is punctuated throughout with thrills and surprises which hold the suspense until the last foot is seen.

The cast includes Dorothy Bernard, Wilfred Lucas, Charles H. Mailes, Alfred Paget, Charles H. West, Robert Harron, W. C. Robinson and is directed by D. W. Griffith. It is released Friday, Sept. 17, in the regular service.

"THE STRONGER MAN" (Reliance).

"The Stronger Man," Reliance feature, is a forceful drama of domestic relation. A husband proves himself the stronger man when the unity of his family is threatened. This drama of absorbing situation is acted before the camera by an exceptional cast, including Irene Hunt, one of the leading actresses at the Reliance studios, A. D. Sears, Francis J. McDonald and Jack Brammell.

All the world is interested in marriage and any variation of its normal conditions. "The Stronger Man" is hence interesting from its very beginning. Cecil Graham, the central feminine figure, played by Irene Hunt, learns that her husband's attentions have strayed from their lawful object. She and he agree upon a divorce. Cecil is distressed over this outcome of her romance. To distract her mind she goes to a house party. There she meets James Long (played by Jack Brammell). In her misery she allows Long to pay her attentions. Long becoming ardent, Cecil soon discourages him.

In an effort to find further mental and emotional relief Cecil Graham goes to the West. Her first husband had been an Easterner. On the train she meets a sturdy Western young man who is in decided contrast to him. She feels that at last she has met a real man. After a romantic courtship they are married.

Long follows Cecil westward and succeeds in finding her. He makes a blackmailing effort. Though Cecil is not willing to go to her husband with the affair, the husband finds it out. He proves himself the stronger man through complete trust in his wife and his handling of Long. He effectually disposes of the latter.

"THE JINX ON JENKS" (Komic).

Jenks and his friend Max had a decidedly uncomfortable time in "The Jinx on Jenks," the latest Komic comedy to be produced under the direction of Edward "Komic" Dillon.

Jenks and his friend Max had observed with proper ceremonies their meeting as good fellows. The result was that they became filled with good cheer. Max goes home to his hotel, where he has a mild flirtation with a young woman. His wife catches him and threatens him.

Meanwhile, Jenks is meeting with a jinx. He breaks a window and a detective follows him to his office. He is obliged to sleep for the night in his office. He finds the detective waiting for him in the hall when he tries to get out in the morning.

Luckily there is a telephone. Jenks 'phones Max to bring a disguise. Max gets a woman's dress and borrows a wig from an actress. He manages to smuggle them into Jenks' office. Jenks believes he has put the jinx to flight when he escapes from his office disguised as a woman. He and Max go to Max's room in the hotel. when Mrs. Max forces her way into the room. She chastises Max with a cane before he is able to explain.

Max is played by Max Davidson; Jenks by Frank Darien, while Pearl Elmore and Ann Slater are other principals.

PATHE'S "SEEING AMERICA" SERIES.

Pathe is to cover the United States from coast to coast for a series to be called "Seeing America First." Miss Helen Greene, a young lady who has figured in the society columns of the Metropolitan newspapers, has been engaged as "Polly Pathe," and she will be chaperoned on her long tour by Frances Fisher Byers, a newspaper woman of long experience, who will attend to local publicity while on the tour.

All places of real historic and scenic interest in each state in the union will be visited by these ladies, together with a Pathe cameraman, who will film the best of everything. It is estimated that the itinerary will cover some 40,000 miles and methods of transportation will include railroad trains, trolley cars, automobiles, muleback, carriages, sailing vessels and steamboats. The trip will require some six to eight months for completion.

"A SULTANA OF THE DESERT" (Selig).

"A Sultana of the Desert," a Selig Special in two thrilling reels, will be released in regular service on Monday, Oct. 4. This Selig Special was written by and features Kathlyn Williams. Miss Williams achieves even a greater artistic triumph, if that were possible, than in her recent Selig Diamond Special triumph, "The Strange Case of Talmai Lind." Again, the charming Kathlyn is seen in association with wild beasts of the Selig Jungle Zoo. The Selig Company promises another out-of-the-ordinary story, realistic action, and an all-star supporting company of players. The picturepiay public and the exhibitors will welcome the charming Kathlyn's return to Jungle-Zoo Wild Animal dramas.

BLANCHE SWEET IN "CASE OF BECKY" (Lasky).

Blanche Sweet, the idol of motion picture theatergoers, is to appear in a dual role in her next Paramount production, in the Lasky release of Sept. 13, of the famous Edward Locke drama, "The Case of Becky," one of David Belasco's greatest dramatic productions.

In this photodrama, Blanche Sweet is a feminine Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde. As the sweet pretty girl, Dorothy, she is loved by every one and makes many friends, but when her other self appears, as Becky, she is a mean, disagreeable creature.

Supporting Miss Sweet are the well-known stars, Carlyle Blackwell, Theodore Roberts and James Neill.

The play is produced in the established Lasky-Belasco manner and is one of the most unusual photodramas ever seen on the screen.

BLINN IN "THE IVORY SNUFF BOX."

"The Ivory Snuff Box," the mystery film, written by Frederic Arnold Kummer, produced by World Film with Holbrook Blinn as its star, supported by a company which includes Alma Belwin, has been finished at the World's Fort Lee studios. Maurice Tourneur was its director. "The Ivory Snuff Box" is the first of Mr. Kummer's writings to be picturized by the World, but it will not be the last.

"FOR LOVE OF MARY ELLEN" (Majestic).

The bad little boys who send priggish little boys to sea in fast motorboats are very far from the present acting endeavors of Georgie Stone, leading man of the Kid Comedy Company.

In "For Love of Mary Ellen" six-year-old Georgie is presented as a rich little boy with humanitarian tendencies. As George Carter in the photoplay he quite disdains the sons and daughters of wealthy men with whom his mother would prefer to have him play. He forces an instant and lasting friendship with little Mary Ellen Rafferty, daughter of a widow who has a newsstand and tobacco shop on a street corner.

Carmen De Rue, "leading woman" of the Majestic child players, plays little Mary Ellen Rafferty. Violet Radcliffe, who is nine years old and who usually plays the villains, is the rich little girl. The adult parts are taken by Adoni Fovieri, Elsie De Wolf, James Cosgrave, Charles Gorman and Jack Hull.

"For Love of Mary Ellen" is founded upon a story by Eleanor Hoyt Brainard.

WIL REX FILMS STIRRING LIGHT.

One of the most red-blooded film scenes ever taken is to be seen in "A Woman's Past," which has just been produced by Wil Rex. The participants were Rex, who played the heavy, Dick Cowan, the sheriff and one of the best known rough riders in the country, and Al Ray, juvenile. No rehearsals were attempted. It was just a case of starting the camera and filming everything that happened. The set was the interior of a mountain home, and every prop in the room was smashed to bits. Onlookers say that the fight reminded them of conflict engaged in by William Farnum and Tom Santchi in "The Spoilers." Rex was bleeding and battered, and could scarcely stand after the bloody fray, and Ray and Cowan were scarcely better off. In fact both these actors remained in their apartments for two days after the fight. Cowan suffered most, as his face was badly cut by a bottle which fell from a side-board. Both he and Rex were on the floor, and Rex's hands were badly gashed by the broken glass. It certainly was not a pink-tea affair. Miss Margaret Harmon, leading woman with the Federal Film Company, which stands sponsor for "A Woman's Past," was near a nervous breakdown at the end of the scene as she was in the set at the time and was kept busy dodging chairs, bottles, pistol shots, etc. At the close Director Rex gave his company a three days' rest, so that they could recuperate. "A Woman's Past" will be released on the Associated Program some time in September.

"THE RED VIRGIN" (Lubin).

"The Red Virgin," a new Lubin drama in three acts, tells the story of the revenge of a woman whose mother has been wronged. It is a terrific story abounding in thrills and exciting incidents as well as scenic sensationalism.

In the cast are Helen Eddy, who plays the dual role of Rose, a sweet country girl, and Fay, her daughter, known as the Red Virgin; L. C. Shumway, Robert Gray, Melvin Mayo, George Routh and others.

FIRST PULLMAN IN KLEINE'S PICTURE.

For the first time in the history of picture making the interior of a Pullman Car was photographed last week. George Kleine succeeded in breaking the iron-clad rule of the Pullman Company during the making of some scenes for "Hello Bill," his great five-part comedy featuring Bickel and Watson. The Pullman interiors of the past have invariably been studio built, owing to the opposition of the Pullman Company to the use of their cars for such purposes. The car was placed at the disposal of the producer for an entire day and permission was extended at the same time to string a line of Allison-Hathaway portable lights through the top of the Pullman. Scenes were made in the Lehigh Valley yards and in transit to Communipaw, N. J.

"Hello Bill" seems to be the original smasher of precedents. Many new and expensive innovations in comedy productions will distinguish the feature. Aside from an all-star cast and a series of novel and very beautiful interiors, the speedometers of the Kleine automobiles have registered more than two thousand miles traveled to date in and about New York in the filming of exteriors. Rye, N. Y., has been visited on twelve different occasions, with numerous other visits to Port Chester, East Chester, Mount Vernon, Baldwin, Governors Island and Dunwoodie.

E. J. Le Saint and his wife, Stella Rozeto, have joined the Universal forces. Mr. Le Saint is directing Frank Keenan in "The Long Chance," from the novel by Peter B. Kyne of the Denver Post.

JACK HENDERSON IN KALEM FEATURE.

Kind fate in the form of a chum who was on the stage side-tracked Jack Henderson's ambition to become a lawyer and caused him to turn to the stage for his livelihood. Not that Mr. Henderson regrets ever having given up studying briefs for manuscripts. Indeed no! It is his opinion that while he might have been a good lawyer, he is fairly certain that he has made a better actor.

Mr. Henderson, who recently deserted the stage long enough to enact the title role of Kalem's three-act "Broadway Favorites" production, "The Manservant," has had a rather remarkable record of successful appearances upon the stage. One of his friends, in discussing the player, stated that Mr. Henderson has never been without an engagement for as much as a day. He has invariably stepped from one production right into another.

It was while he was studying law that the Kalem star was induced to play a bit in "Miranda of the Balcony," in which Mrs. Fiske was being featured. He did it for the sake of getting some pocket money, but the work appealed to the young man to such an extent that when Mrs. Fiske appeared in "Divorcons" and "Tess of the D'Urbevilles" he was in the regular cast. After that it was just one play after another.

Mr. Henderson appears as a millionaire sociologist in "The Manservant." Anxious to get first-hand information concerning the servant problem, he obtains a position as a valet. A remarkable series of complications result. "The Manservant" will be released in regular service Monday, Sept. 13.

"GUARDING OLD GLORY" PLACED IN THE SOUTH.

J. B. Allen, vice-president of the Southern Film Corporation of Jacksonville, Fla., made a hurried trip from Jacksonville and closed with W. H. Rudolph for F. O. Nielsen's Peace and Preparedness picture, "Guarding Old Glory," for North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky and Tennessee. The picture will receive its premier in the South in Jacksonville, Fla., on Labor Day under the auspices of the leading newspapers and prominent citizens of the town and the Navy League, after which it will be seen in the large cities of the South under the same conditions.

The Southern Film Corporation is also handling "The German Side of the War" and "Little Sunset." Mr. Allen reports that he opened "The German Side of the War" pictures at the Victoria theater in Charleston, S. C., last week and played in one day to more than 4,000 people.

Mr. Allen is spending his vacation in New York combining business with pleasure and will return to Jacksonville within the next ten days.

HANDSOME LOBBY PORTRAITS.

Hamburg, Engstrom & Co., located at 308 Mallers Bldg., Chicago, have undoubtedly in their employ some of the greatest artists in water and oil in the country. The oil paintings on exhibition at their studio of the various motion picture stars for lobby display purposes is something that before long every exhibitor who takes any pride in his lobby will purchase from this enterprising new firm.

An oil painting in their outer display room of Edna Mayo is without a doubt one of the most beautiful paintings of any motion picture star seen anywhere in this country. They are now making goods for Famous Players, V-L-S-E, Universal, Metro, Celebrated Players and D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation," to say nothing of the lobbys of the new Ascher and Gumbini houses and over one hundred and fifty individual theater owners from coast to coast whom they have furnished with displays.

FAMOUS MODISTE SHOP IN KLEINE SUBJECT.

Ferle Heller's internationally known modiste shop in Fifth avenue was last week used for a series of unique scenes in a forthcoming Kleine-Grandin subject entitled "The Fashion Shop." All of Madame's pretty manikins and many of her most beautiful sample gowns acted as a fitting background for the work of dainty Ethel Grandin.

Madame gave more than her consent. She personally assisted in the selection of gowns and permitted electricians to string a row of Allison-Hathaway lamps throughout the establishment.

"The Fashion Shop" will be released by George Kleine through the General Film Company in October.

MAMMOTH SCENE IN EDISON'S "VANITY FAIR."

"Vanity Fair," the great Edison masterpiece starring Mrs. Fiske, which was recently completed at the Bronx studios of the Edison Company, contains an elaborate ballroom scene which for size and magnificence is said to be unrivaled. The Edison Company made immense preparations for this big scene, renting innumerable furniture "props" and costumes of the period. The description of Lady Richardson's ball in "Vanity Fair" is frequently referred to as one of the greatest bits of prose in the English language. To visualize this beautiful scene as Thackeray would have wished to see it, was the ambition of every one interested in its staging from director to "props." The entire Edison studio was used.

KING BAGGOT IN "THE SUBURBAN."

"The Suburban," one of the most noted stage successes of the last decade, has been filmed by the Universal with King Baggot in the leading role and will be released in four reels under the Imp brand on Sept. 17.

Real scenes from New York race tracks with Universal actors in the foreground and adventure aboard a steam yacht, a three-masted schooner, a steam launch and an island used as a smuggler's retreat are featured in the play. Besides Mr. Baggot, an all-star cast consisting of Brinsley Shaw, Frank Smith, Ned Reardon and Ira Sheppard, enact the leading roles. George A. Lessey, who handled the production of "The Suburban" on the legitimate stage, also directed the big racing drama for the Universal.

For one scene lasting only sixty seconds, King Baggot, Mr. Lessey and a camerman with the necessary paraphernalia journeyed fifty miles to Lake Mahopac, where a certain spot ideally suitable for the scene was located. The entire Baggot company later spent a week in Canada filming scenes in the wilds. Later they engaged a three-masted schooner on Long Island Sound.

Another feature of the drama is a magnificent ball-room scene in which two hundred players appear. A balcony leading from the ballroom is lit up by flashes from a lighthouse dimly seen in the distance. The resulting scene is remarkable for its photographic beauty.

"The Suburban" was first played on Broadway more than a dozen years ago and made its author, C. T. Dazie, a handsome fortune. In the stage production a horse race in the third act was the big feature and always created a sensation. After many seasons on Broadway, the original company toured the United States and Canada, playing to crowded houses everywhere.

"The Suburban," as a film play, far surpasses in realism the legitimate stage version and conclusively demonstrates that great scenic spectacles are more realistic in moving pictures than on the speaking stage. The race scenes in the film version are particularly true to life, having been taken during the racing season on tracks near New York. In all, two hundred scenes were taken in fifty different locations and about two hundred people were put on the Universal's payroll during the production of the play.

"THE RAJAH'S SACRIFICE" (Centaur).

After many months of preparation and after a great expenditure of money David Horsley has accomplished his purpose of presenting animal pictures in an advanced form, for on Sept. 16 he will release, under the brand name of Centaur Sensational Features, the first of his animal productions featuring the incomparable Bostock menagerie which, in the opinion of critics who have seen it, is pronounced the highest type of animal picture ever offered.

The initial release is a drama in two reels called "The Rajah's Sacrifice" with the scenes laid in far away India. The story concerns the love of the Rajah and of a high priest for Helen, an English girl, who has been kidnapped by the high priest and made his prisoner.

Scene from "The Rajah's Sacrifice" (Centaur).

While the entire two reels are crowded with thrilling scenes through the use of the Bostock animals perhaps more suspense is created by the scene in which the Rajah enters the lion's den and sacrifices his life to the beasts for the girl's safety than in any other picture. The lions leap upon the Rajah from all parts of the den and the effect that such a scene carries can readily be imagined.

The cast, besides the Bostock animals, includes a large company of people, including Capt. Jack Bonavita, who plays the part of the Rajah, and to whom a great deal of credit for the success of the animal picture is due. Captain Bonavita, with his associates has been rehearsing the Bostock animals for ten months and those thrilling scenes which the animals enact are the result of his work.

A Centaur Sensational Feature in two reels will be released every Thursday on the Mutual program.

PRESIDENT TO SEE "GUARDING OLD GLORY."

"Guarding Old Glory," F. O. Nielsen's patriotic picture, is to be shown to President Wilson probably in the next few days, W. H. Rudolph, Mr. Nielsen's Eastern representative, having received word from Secretary Tumulty to that effect. The President is the only official of importance who has not had the pleasure of seeing this wonderful patriotic picture, for at the time it was shown in Washington to Secretary of War Garrison and Secretary of the Navy Daniels and other prominent personages, the President was at his summer home in New Hampshire.

A request has also been made by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Navy League, which by the way already numbers 15,000, to have the picture shown to them at their forthcoming meeting in Washington.

Mr. Rudolph reports that he expects to close out the entire Eastern and Southern territory within the next week. In fact, "Guarding Old Glory" seems to be the psychological picture of the day.

KLEINE'S "THE GREEN CLOAK" FINISHED.

Finishing touches were added last week to George Kleine's "The Green Cloak," featuring Irene Fenwick. Not since "Vendetta" has George Kleine presented a drama so essentially dramatic in story and treatment. From the sensational opening scene showing nothing but a thin, white nervous hand reach into a pocket to the splendid finale, the audience is kept in expectancy. Like "The Woman Next Door," the film story commences about midway of the narrative and not until the last reel are the events transpiring prior to the beginning of the film story revealed.

"The Green Cloak" is founded on Owen Davis' stage play of that name and has given Miss Fenwick a rare opportunity to display her talents in a role which verges on the tragic.

"The Green Cloak" will be released through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service Nov. 3.

An Incentive to Bible Study

World Film's "Fifth Commandment" Is an Object Lesson to Children.

"Honor thy father and thy mother" is the fifth commandment observed by, or taught to, a large majority of the people of this country, and an enterprising exhibitor of Leadville, Col., who shows World Film features has adroitly taken advantage of the fact. He advertises that the first twenty-five boys or girls who neatly and correctly write out the fifth commandment, stating exactly where, in the Bible, it can be found would be given a free ticket to see the picture on the presentation of their answers at the Elks Opera House, Leadville.

Irrespective of the religious significance of this commandment, it of course has its social importance in inculcating obedience in the family circle. The Leadville experiment was a great success, and was probably repeated, as it deserved to be.

And it merits imitation by other exhibitors.

"The Fifth Commandment" is not the only World Film feature which teaches a salutary moral lesson. All of them without exception aggrandize virtue and punish vice.

EDGAR JONES PRODUCES METRO SUBJECT.

Edgar Jones, who directed the coming five-reel Rolfe-Metro feature, "An Enemy to Society," regards this motion pcture as his greatest dramatic achievement. "An Enemy to Society" tops a long dramatic record for Mr. Jones, though but a little more than thirty years old, played important roles on the speaking stage for fifteen years and has been in motion pictures for three years and a half, during all of which time, except the first six months, he has been directing notable productions.

Edgar Jones was but a lad when he left his home in Steubenville, O., to go on the stage. During his fifteen years before the footlights he appeared with Kyrle Bellew in "A Gentleman of France;" he played Stephen Ghent in "The Great Divide," following Henry Miller in the role; he created the part of Marius in "The Holy City" and supported Viola Allen in "The Herfords." These roles are only a few of the high spots.

Three years and a half ago Mr. Jones left "The Herfords" to join the Lubin forces as leading man. After six months he was made a producer and for three years directed motion pictures and played his own leading roles. While with the Lubin forces Mr. Jones made many highly exploited pictures. A few of them are: "From Out the Flood," "The Girl at the Locks," "The Struggle Everlasting" and "Jackson's Way," a picture which contained the first night battle scenes ever made. In "Jackson's Way" two armies battled at three in the morning in several feet of snow.

Mr. Jones recently joined the Rolfe-Metro producing forces, where his first work is an adaptation of "An Enemy to Society" from the book of the same name by George Bronson Howard. Lois Meredith, Hamilton Revelle, H. Cooper Cliff and Henry Bergman are the stars in the picture.

"DARLING DANDY" (Essanay).

This is one of the prettiest love romances ever screened, featuring Ruth Stonehouse and John Lorenz. Miss Stonehouse takes the part of an orphan, who has grown up, neglected, in a small country town. She is crude and rough but has an unutterable tenderness for babies. As she grows to young womanhood, the minister sees this mother instinct and the womanly sweetness beneath her rough exterior and falls in love with her. She, however, falls in love with a civil engineer working temporarily in the vicinity. He makes love to her and finally leaves her suddenly. The engineer has had another love affair in the city and tries to desert the girl after she has given birth to a child. She upbraids him and he takes the child and leaves it at the minister's house, but the orphan girl carries it to her hut. The mother forces the engineer to take her to the child, which she wishes to regain for the purpose of revenge only, having no mother love for it. They are frightened away by a storm and leave the baby with the orphan girl. She learns finally of the fine character of the minister and her heart tells her he is the man she loves. This three-act photoplay will be released Sept. 27.

YANCSI DOLLY IN KALEM SUBJECT.

Miss Yancsi Dolly, the famous danseuse who is being featured in "The Call of the Dance," a four-act "Broadway Favorites" production. This drama marks Miss Dolly's first appearance in motion pictures—although a casual observer watching her at work in the various scenes would never suspect this fact. Miss Dolly is spending all her spare time in studying the technical side of the work. In fact, the director in charge of the production frankly admits that some of the most artistic effects used in the drama are the results of suggestions advanced by the star.

Yancsi Dolly Making Up for Her Role in "The Call of the Dance," a Five-Act "Broadway Favorites" Feature.

"Do you know," Miss Dolly earnestly continued, "that 'The Call of the Dance' has enabled me to gratify a desire that has been part of me for years and years. You see, I have always wanted to do dramatic work, but my dancing proved so popular that I have never appeared in anything save operettas and musical comedies."

"Of course," she concluded, "I don't know whether I have made good or not, although the producing director assures me that I am doing splendidly. I do know that I am putting more fire and vim into my dancing in this production than I have ever put into it on the stage. At any rate, I am looking forward to the release of 'The Call of the Dance' on Sept. 20—I want to know what the public thinks of me as a motion picture actress!"

SELIG'S "THE CHRONICLES OF BLOOM CENTER."

"The Chronicles of Bloom Center," the rural comedy series to be released in the near future by the Selig Polyscope Company, will each consist of a two-reel production. "Bloom Center," the rube town erected at the Selig Zoo, Los Angeles, Cal., especially for this series remains one of the attractions of the wonderland. The entire village will be burned to the ground to carry out the action called for in the series.

One of the most entertaining of the "chronicles" will be the Bloom Center County Fair, which has been reproduced true to life of the rural agricultural exhibitions. There are the "first" and "second" premiums, the "vegetable hall," the rural "art hall," etc. There is the ever present side-shows, striking machines, etc.

And the real old fashioned country circus has not been forgotten. There have been circuses presented in motion pictures before, but the old-time wagon show seemingly has been forgotten. The old-time circus wagon show will be presented after the fashion of the days of the "real sport."

The Selig Company has spared no expense in making "The Chronicles of Bloom Center" a true comedy series devoid of slap-stick and vulgarity. It is certain to possess a universal appeal, for who amongst us has forgotten "the old swimmin' hole," the "church sociables," the volunteer fire department and all the rest of the prime essentials which made the days of our youth never-to-be-forgotten days?

The Selig Company promises an abundance of unusual exploitation to accompany "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," which is confidently expected to inaugurate a new era in screen comedy.

"BROKEN COIN" SERIES EXTENDED.

Owing to the pronounced success of "The Broken Coin" serial in theaters throughout the country, the Universal Film Mfg. Co. has decided to add five more installments to the fifteen-episode serial. Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, principals in the serial, are now at work on the fifteenth episode of the serial and will soon commence with the additional episodes which are being written by Emerson Hough to conform with the preceding installments.

V-L-S-E TRADE MARK.

The trade mark selected to brand V-L-S-E productions finally decided upon by the Big Four is like the policies and features of the four affiliated companies—decidedly distinctive.

The new trade mark which will soon be seen on the screens of the entire nation, and later when the European differences have been settled, on the screens of the entire world, consists of a number of intricate parts representing the separate individualities, aims and ambitions of the four companies, yet all welded into a concrete unit, forming a perfect circle representing the V-L-S-E as a whole.

In its entirety, the new trade mark is simplicity itself, yet by the unique arrangement of alternate white and black quarter circles, it is a trade mark that at once indelibly impresses itself on the mind and for that reason it will quickly familiarize itself, and in a short space of time will be recognized as the mark that brands the big picture play productions by the Big Four.

The new trade mark was designed and drawn by Charles J. Giegerich, publicity director of the V-L-S-E.

LAPIN'S PIANO ATTACHMENT MUSICAL BELLS.

The bells are played simultaneously with the fingering of the piano keys without changing the regular playing position at the piano in any way, while an electric switch combined with the soft pedal of piano enables the performer to continue or eliminate the playing of bells at will.

The bells range from treble C to C two octaves chromatic international pitch, cast from pure bell metal. Each bell is provided with resonator and improved vibrating mechanism, highly polished, triple plated and mounted in oak base.

The tonal quality is loud, sweet and clear. The power is derived from dry-cell batteries incased in lower panel of piano and invisible, and the up-keep of same is next to nothing.

The bells are also adapted for cabaret, dance halls, restaurants, cafes, amusement parks, skating rinks, concert halls.

ALL STAR CAST FOR KLEINE'S "THE SENTIMENTAL LADY."

George Kleine's film version of Owen Davis' "The Sentimental Lady," featuring Irene Fenwick, now in course of work, will contain as usual a supporting cast of finished artists. Richie Ling, Ben. L. Taggart, Jack Devereaux, John Davidson, Frank Belcher, Thomas McGrath, Lila Barclay, Anna Reader and Della Connor are names long familiar to theatergoers. The company is now engaged at Lake Saranac, where the first scenes of "The Sentimental Lady" are being made.

"WHERE THE ROAD DIVIDED" (Lubin).

"Where the Road Divided," a new Lubin drama in two acts, is the story of a mountain girl who is tempted to take the wrong road, but who, through love, reclaims herself and goes in the path which leads to happiness.

The play is an unusual one, and is splendidly acted by Louise Huff, Edgar Jones, Earl Metcalfe and George Gowan.

CLARA IS A "CRACK SHOT."

Clara Kimball Young is an artist of versatility, as well as taste and histrionic skill. As a connoisseur of women's clothes and how they should be worn, Miss Young could, if she chose, make a striking success on Fifth avenue. Then, as a woman director of motion pictures, she could easily obtain eminence. One of her greatest and least suspected accomplishments recently came to light during the stay of Miss Young and the company in North Carolina for the making of World Film's "The Heart of the Blue Ridge," in which she is the star. Rain drove the company to indoor recreation. Armed with a Winchester repeater Miss Young shot pennies at thirty paces as souvenirs for the company. She rarely misses, in out of doors shooting—one day she killed two huge snakes, a black one and a rattlesnake. She'll hit a dime at a distance of a hundred feet. Locally, Miss Young is regarded as the peer; if not the superior of the mountaineers, whose business in life is mainly shooting. One may also conjecture Miss Young at the head of a company of markswomen in the event of hostilities with a foreign power.

PATHE'S "VIA WIRELESS."

The second of Pathe's Gold Rooster plays, "Via Wireless," adapted from the well known play of the same name by Paul Armstrong and Winchell Smith, is what might be truly called a "massive" production. Scenes in foundries showing the casting of a gun, the bursting of a huge coast defence gun while being tested, the sinking of a yacht at sea by contact with a floating mine, scenes on the deck of a U. S. battleship follow one another in rapid succession. Producer George Fitzmaurice certainly had no easy task in making this play, and the finished product bears witness to his skill.

Bruce McRae, one of the best known of Broadway's favorites, is the leading man and plays opposite the charming Gail Kane, who never appeared to better advantage than in this picture. Brandon Hurst is a very effective villain, and Paul McAllister does some excellent work in the part of "Marsh," the inventor of a new gun. The cast is well filled out by Harry Weaver as Durant, the iron master.

Briefly the plot of the play is as follows: Marsh, who is employed in a big iron foundry, invents a new gun. Pinkney (played by Brandon Hurst), who is manager for Durant, the owner of the plant, seęs Marsh's drawings and persuades him to let him handle them for him. Later he goes to Marsh and tells him the government has accepted the gun and will pay to the inventor a royalty of $1,200 a gun. As a matter of fact Pinkney is receiving $15,000 royalty per gun, out of which he is paying the inventor the $1,200.

Lieut. Sommers of the U. S. Navy (played by Bruce McRae) has also invented a gun, the drawings for which he brings to Durant that a gun may be made from them. Sommers meets Frances, daughter of the ironmaster, and a mutual love results in their engagement.

Pinkney, who desires to marry the girl himself, plots to ruin the lieutenant's gun and by tampering with the process of manufacture weakens it so that it explodes in testing. He also persuades Frances that her lover slandered her and her father. In consequence she refuses to receive Sommers and breaks off all relations with him.

To get away from the scenes of her unhappiness she goes on a long cruise in her father's yacht, and reaches the war zone, where the vessel strikes a hidden mine and goes down. The explosion locks Frances in the wireless room, where she has been practicing wireless telegraphy which Sommers had taught her. A series of intensely dramatic scenes follow in which Sommers with a boat's crew from his ship rescues the girl just as the yacht goes down. Of course everything comes out happily in the end.

Rarely does a picture have so much action, so much stirring incident without becoming mere melodrama. In these first Gold Rooster plays, Pathe is setting a very high standard of quality.

"THE PURPLE NIGHT" (Knickerbocker).

Abundant in big scenes, heart interest and pathos, the Knickerbocker Star Feature, "The Purple Night," is ready for release on Sept. 15.

Florence Rockwell makes her advent into the field of moving pictures in this offering in the role of Carol, an attractive young artist, who yearns to get away from a humdrum existence and a life of convention. Her wish is gratified when, by chance, she meets Billy Clark, a gangster, who shows her life in the underworld. He fascinates her. She breaks with her fiance and, in company with Clark, becomes a habitue of the slums.

Scene from "The Purple Night" (Knickerbocker).

In a holdup which is planned at her instance the father of Warren Powers, an inventor, is the victim. He and Clark both meet their deaths in a fight which ensues. Carol escapes, discarding her bowery disguise, which is held by the police as a clue.

Later she falls in love with the inventor. He has vowed vengeance on the woman who witnessed his father's death. Carol's dilemma is solved by a fight with a Jap whom she catches stealing some secret explosive plans belonging to Powers. She kills the Jap, but is also fatally wounded. She dies in her lover's arms, her secret kept.

Miss Rockwell is supported by Noah Berry, of "Ben Hur" fame, as the gangster, Lionel Adams as the inventor, Richard Carlyle as her fiance.

GROSSMAN WITH CHARTER FEATURES.

With the appointment of Harry Grossman as sales manager of the Charter Features Corporation, the success of the Chapin Cycle of Lincoln Plays is even more assured. Grossman's long and successful experience in the sales department of some of the more important companies makes him a most valuable asset to the Charter Features Corporation.

This is the way Grossman tells how he came to join the Cycle: "I had been reading about the Lincoln Cycle in the Motion Picture World and I made inquiries on behalf of Metro. So enthused did I become in the magnitude of the proposition and the universality of the appeal that it holds for all America, that I found myself unconsciously wishing that I might be of help in showing the exhibitor what it would mean to him.

"But I thought that possibly my own imagination and my own love of Lincoln and my own personal view on the subject was running away with me—for by this time I really was seriously wondering how I could get together with Charter Features.

"So I carried on an investigation for myself among the big men of this and neighboring cities. I was amazed to find how the Cycle had reached in every part of the country, for every exhibitor and every exchange man knew it well. I was amazed to find how enthusiastically exhibitors talked of the Cycle. And how many of the exchanges were eagerly trying to win the Chapin Cycle for their program. From what I have learned if there is anything during this coming year that is going to bring money into the box office, it is this Cycle.

"And there are very good reasons for it when you come to analyze the situation. This is just what the exhibitor is looking for—something big and different. Cycle plays are the very latest achievement. Because Chapin is in this is a reason that no exhibitor can overlook. Because of the big publicity and promotion methods that the Charter Features is carrying on no exhibitor can overlook."

Starting his career with a life on the ocean waves, Grossman served for several years as chief yeoman in the U. S. Navy and while there his jovial disposition won for him the nick-name of "Smiling Harry." "It's a habit of mine, this smile," said Grossman suiting the action to the word, and before you know it you catch yourself smiling, too. Only now his smile is one of absolute faith and assurance for the success of Charter Features.

BRILLIANT CAST ON "SCHOOL BELLS."

Robert Fischer, the well known actor who has created a sensation the last two weeks in his role of the Belgian innkeeper in Roi Cooper Magrue's war play, "Under Fire," at the Hudson theater, New York City, is one of the members of the all-star cast of "School Bells," the five-reel feature picture written by Charles K. Harris, which has just been completed by Perry N. Verkroff, and will be released through the World Film Corporation. Mr. Fischer plays the role of "Adolph Rapp," a German chemist.

The leading role in "School Bells" is played by Arthur Donaldson, who will be remembered for his excellent work in "The Prince of Pilsen." He, too, plays the role of "Fritz Wagner," a German chemist, from whom Rapp steals his formula for a new and wonderful perfume. Beulah Poynter, who plays the role of "Mrs. Wagner," is a well known stock actress and has played in most of the principal cities of the country.

Among the children who are appearng in the picture, three are very unusual stage children. Frank Longacre, who plays "Hans Wagner," and Ethelmary Oakland, who plays "Amy Rapp," both have had a career on the stage, while Nicholas Long, Jr., who plays a minor child's role, is at present attracting considerable sensation on the vaudeville stage in a sketch, in which he plays the part of a little girl.

"School Bells" is at present being assembled and cut, and will be released in several weeks. There were over 76,000 feet of film exposed in making this picture, which Mr. Harris predicts will be "The Birth of a Nation" among children's pictures.

Notes of the Trade.

SOUTHERN TERRITORY sold this week on the K. & R. Company's feature, "Silver Threads Among the Gold," consists of Alabama, Georgia, Florida and Tennessee to Albert Benzing, and Virginia, North and South Carolina to Harry Newman.

Manager Garson of the Broadway Features Company bought Michigan and opened with it in Detroit for a run.

Thomas Santschi, supported by Marion Warner and Lafayette McKee, will appear soon in a Selig multiple reel drama, "In Leopard Land." Several jungle beasts will enact important roles and the largest and most intelligent elephant in the Selig Jungle-Zoo is being carefully rehearsed for the thrilling feats he has to perform.

* * *

Tina Marshall, for several years leading woman in the support of Edwin Stevens, is now playing in that capacity in the Universal film, "The Man Inside," Broadway Universal play featuring Edwin Stevens.

Eve Unsell, who is writing the scenario for "Richard Carvel" in collaboration with Fred J. Balshofer, head of the Quality Pictures Corporation, which will be released in the Metro program early this fall, used to be a newspaper woman. She also was on the stage for a while, playing leading roles in Henry W. Savage's "Excuse Me" Company and Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Seven Days."

* * *

"The Tiger Slayer" is an exciting Selig Jungle-Zoo Wild Animal drama to be released in the near future. The scenes are laid around the construction of a railroad in East India. In this release Fritzi Brunette makes her first appearance with wild animals.

Trade News of the Week

Many Pittsburgh Changes

Many Shifts Announced for the Opening of the Smoky City Theatrical Season—President Harrington, of the National Exhibitors, Pleased at Outlook for His Organization—Other Western Pennsylvania Notes of Interest.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

SWEEPING changes are to be made in Pittsburgh theaters. Principal shifts announced this week for opening of the new season on Monday, September 6, include:

Vaudeville to be transferred to the new Davis theater from the Grand Opera house, long the house of variety shows.

Grand Opera house to be devoted to high standard photoplays.

Duquesne theater expected to stage stock company productions. No definite stock management negotiating for this house. Three other theaters under consideration for new projects are the Miles, where vaudeville last season was succeeded by motion pictures; the Victoria and the Liberty, which closed as burlesque houses, with the Gayety now presenting the only burlesque show.

The Nixon is to run the photo spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," the first five weeks of the season, starting September 1.

The Alvin opens September 6 with the staging of Louis Mann's new piece, "The Bubble."

The Harris continuous vaudeville goes on as usual. The Lyceum has announced no departure from the popular-price policy. The Schenley continues to present photplays.

The Harry Davis enterprises control the Davis theater, the Grand Opera house and the Alvin theater. It has, in addition, other important affiliations which give Mr. Davis and his associates valuable booking advantages. Mr. Davis, in removing the Keith vaudeville shows, which have for so many years occupied the Grand Opera house, to the new Davis theater, intends to install in the Grand Opera house a class of photoplay attractions, with elaborate musical and artistic accessories, on a scale never before attempted in Western Pennsylvania. With this readjustment the Alvin theater will continue its custom of playing the first-class road attractions, and the Davis Stock company will, in the near future, establish itself in another theater.

Plans are complete for the opening of the vaudeville season in the Davis theater on Monday afternoon, September 6, and new motion picture season in the Grand Opera house on the morning of the same day. For the continuous picture shows in the Grand Opera house the admission will be 10 and 20 cents. A symphony orchestra of 20 will be installed for the photoplays. Music will be augmented by a large pipe organ especially built for the Grand Opera house.

HERRINGTON PLEASED AT OUTLOOK.

In a visit to the office of Fred J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, piles of congratulation letters are noted, all of which Mr. Herrington says are good signs for a united organization of exhibitors, along with the fact that on Mr. Herrington's return from the national convention, he was met by many of the live-wire exhibitors of the various States, and was assured of their hearty co-operation, including the Northwestern Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, with headquarters at Minneapolis, Minn., with the promise of such men as comprise the membership of this organization, including Thomas Furness, of Duluth; Harry H. Green, president; William A. Steffes, secretary, and Otto Raths.

On Mr. Herrington's arrival home, he received a letter from Mr. Rembusch, of Mirror Screen fame, telling him where Indiana stood and assuring him that they would come over to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in the near future.

"My meeting with the boys from Wisconsin was nothing but one big success and the Milwaukee boys promised their support to the old league.

"Our old friend and champion, W. J. Sweeney, from Chicago, with that loyal bunch from Illinois, and others too numerous to mention, would become boosters for the league, and I feel, as president of the league, the boys will not let me fail."

NEW STRAND BEING PUSHED.

Operations on the new Strand theater in State street, Erie, Pa., are being pushed forward. It is expected the steel work will be put in place this week. The cost will be nearly $75,000. The house will have a seating capacity of about 1,500 persons.

PITTSBURGH'S NEW EXCHANGE.

The Greater New York Film Renting company opened a branch office in Pittsburgh last week at 121 Fourth avenue, second floor, adjoining the Fox Film office. It is announced that the Greater New York will make a specialty of furnishing single-reel comedies to exhibitors of feature programs. Productions of Lubin, Selig, Essanay and Vitagraph, and Edison, Biograph and Kalem will be handled, including the multiple-reel releases.

A NEW-FANGLED VOTING CONTEST.

The Rowland and Clark theaters, comprising the Regent, East Liberty, the Belmar, Homewood; the Arsenal, Butler street; the Bellevue, Bellevue; the Oakland and Schenley, Oakland, and the Rowland in Wilkinsburg, in connection with the Pittsburgh Press, have inaugurated a voting contest by means of which the first eleven contestants will be given their choice of parts in a moving picture play to be written by a qualified and well-known author, and produced by one of the large motion picture producing companies. In addition to this they will be paid salaries during the time they are occupied in acting their parts. The picture is to be not less than 2,000 feet in length.

NEW HOUSE FOR FARREL.

Farrel, near Pittsburgh, Pa., is to have an up-to-date motion picture theater on Broadway. The building, which will be 42 by 100 feet, is to be constructed of pressed brick. The theater will have a seating capacity of about 600. Fine upholstered seats will be installed. The appointments in the theater will be up to date and the decorations will be on an elaborate plan.

PROJECTION ROOM FOR F. P. F. S.

Announcement has been made by Manager Bachmeyer of the Famous Players Film Service, of Pittsburgh, that the projection room, which is located on the second floor of the company's handsome five-story building at Twelfth and Penn avenues, is completed. The room is to be used for the projecting of new films and for exhibitors who want to see any particular subject. The equipment consists of Power 6A machines, a Minusa gold fiber screen and a Johns-Manville booth.

THIEVES GET SMALL HAULS.

Petty thieves have been operating for a week among the film exchanges in Fourth avenue, between Market and Ferry streets, Pittsburgh. The Fox Film exchange, at 121 Fourth avenue, was broken into and about $1 worth of stamps and 60 cents in money were taken. A little over $2 in money and 50 cents worth of stamps were taken from the Metropolitan booking offices in the same building. The Feature Film exchange suffered the loss of some pieces of moving picture mechanism.

At the Alexander Parke exchange, 111 Fourth avenue, the thieves got nothing, though they broke in two different times. They were unlucky also at the Frank J. Hatch Film company's offices, 109 Fourth avenue. The police are investigating the robberies, but so far have found no trace of the thieves.

PITTSBURGH NOTES.

J. O. Brooks, who has been representing the Famous Players Film Service in Western Pennsylvania, has been transferred to Detroit, Mich.

Michael Adamoski, manager of the Star theater in Herminie, Pa., is remodeling and enlarging that house.

M. Y. Connors, who has just finished his fine new theater, The Regent, in Washington, Pa., has installed a Wurlitzer orchestra, style U.

The Thomas theater was reopened last week after being dark for the past few weeks on account of important changes being made. Two new machines of the latest model and a new screen have been placed in the theater.

Harry C. Grelle of the Grelle Feature Film company, of Pittsburgh, has returned from New York and Philadelphia. While in New York he bought Ohio state rights on "The Game of Three."

H. A. Lande has returned from New York and announced that the Standard program will be handled exclusively by him in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Painters and decorators have been busy about the Bijou theater in Monessen, Pa.

Fred V. Bleuel and William Bleuel, partners, trading as the Luna theater, Monessen, Pa., have filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, placing their liabilities at $7,320.13 and their assets at $3,505. They also filed individual petitions, giving as their occupations merchants. Fred V. Bleuel places his individual liabilities at $650.92 and his assets at $232. William Bleuel places his individual liabilities at $3,256.58 and his assets at $3,569.38.

New Cincinnati Film Co.

Veritas Photoplay Company Incorporated to Make Pictures Near This City—Capitalization at $250,000—Will Specialize on Educational Subjects with Scenarios of Dramatic Quality—Men Behind Venture.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE formal incorporation of the Veritas Photoplay Co. under the laws of Ohio, with a capitalization of $250,000, indicates an important step toward the consummation of a plan made public a few days ago by some well-known business and moving picture men, looking toward the establishment in or near Cincinnati of a big producing company. Among the incorporators of the company are numbered John von Rittberg, of Chicago, formerly general director of the Selig Polyscope Co., with Albert Kleybolte, William E. Greyble, David Rudisel and John W. Peck, all of Cincinnati, and well known in the business world.

According to an announcement from Mr. von Rittberg, the company will specialize on the production of educational subjects, which will possess an interest much greater than many films now classified under that head, by reason of combining dramatic merit with the treatment of matter of an instructive nature. The first production, it is understood, is to be made in Chicago, where facilities for that purpose are of course available, pending the location of a good site and the construction of the necessary buildings in Cincinnati. The strong backing possessed by the company, coupled with Mr. von Rittberg's known ability in the moving picture field, promises that the enterprize will be able to make a powerful bid for favor in the line of work which is to be attempted.

VINE STREET BUSINESS ASSOCIATION AGAINST FREE SHOWS.

Action of a nature rather gratifying to Cincinnati exhibitors, and resulting, very probably, from the recent affiliation of the local Motion Picture Exhibitors' League with the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, was taken last week by the Central Vine Street Business Association, an organization of business men on Cincinnati's principal business thoroughfare.

The association took cognizance of the showing of free moving pictures in the parks and at playgrounds by the park authorities, and indicated its intention of lodging a protest with the city against this practice. The ground taken is that it is unjust to the hundred odd exhibitors of the city, who maintain expensive houses and present worthy attractions at low prices, for the city to compete with them by offering free pictures; and the strength of the Vine Street Association, as well as that of the Chamber of Commerce, which may be expected to be behind the exhibitors if they care to take the case up, makes it reasonable to suppose that the protest may be effectual. Individual exhibitors have had good reason to complain of the matter referred to before, but have never been able to get concerted action. Under present conditions, however, after the lead given by the several exhibitors who are members of the Vine street organization, a good opportunity seems to be offered to get this particular trouble disposed of, so that it will not arise next summer.

FRANK HUSS GETS A VALUABLE LEASE ON FIFTH STREET.

Through the several transactions recently reported in this column affecting property on the south side of the block on Fifth street, between Rae and Elm, new high records have been set on rental values, which have soared upward after the manner of war stocks, and the latest deal reported, like the others preceding it, sets the mark still higher, and incidentally seems to indicate the possibility of greater changes in two of the houses on the block than have so far been announced. This deal gives Frank W. Huss, who is interested at present with I. Frankel in both the Colonial and the Sun theaters, which adjoin on Fifth street, a ten-year lease on the east 26 feet and 10 inches of the ground on which the Colonial stands, on the expiration of the present lease of the entire plot held jointly by the company in which he and Mr. Frenkel are interested.

Inasmuch as he recently arranged for a controlling interest in the Sun lease, effected through various extensions of existing rights and new contracts, this will enable Mr. Huss, if he so desires, eventually to construct a house with a frontage of over 56 feet on Fifth street, making it much the largest in the downtown section. It would rest upon the present site of the Sun and about half of that of the Colonial, thus involving the disappearance of both of these houses as they now stand. It is understood that Mr. Frankel has been able to secure extensions of the present lease on the remaining 20 feet of the Colonial site, but this would obviously be inadequate for moving picture purposes.

Messrs. Frankel and Huss have been associated in interest in the houses named, as well as others in Cincinnati and its vicinity, for some time, and it is possible that they will adjust the difference which the above transactions indicates exists between them. A significant fact, in connection with the situation as it now stands, is that there is available a lot of 20 feet front immediately west of the Colonial, now occupied for merchandising purposes, under a sublease which, peculiarly, provides for a bonus of $10,000 to the lessee if it is subleased for theatrical purposes. The status quo will necessarily be preserved, however, for some time, inasmuch as the original Colonial lease is good until 1919, by which time, of course, a good many things may have happened.

WALNUT THEATER TO FOLLOW OLD PROGRAM.

Up until last week the fate of the Walnut Street theater, the house which for several seasons has shown the popular-priced attractions of the Stair & Havlin circuit in Cincinnati, with moving pictures during the summer season, was in the balance, owing to reports of the dissolution of the firm of Stair & Havlin. It seems, however, that the Walnut will retain its former status, the opening of the season being announced for Sept. 5, under the operation of Anderson & Ziegler, with Stair & Havlin attractions at popular prices.

The extent to which first-class moving picture productions, shown at 10 cents, have cut into the business not only of low-priced theaters, but of others as well, in the past few years, was responsible for some doubt as to whether the Walnut would be kept going as formerly, rumors being current that it would enter the picture business permanently, while it was also reported that the Keith interests might take it over and turn it into a vaudeville house. John Havlin, of Cincinnati, manager of the Grand opera house, remains associated with Stair & Havlin, which will handle the bookings of the circuit formerly operated under that name, while a new firm, known as Stair & Nicolai, will take care of the producing end.

CINCINNATI JOTTINGS.

Sunday audiences at the Sun theater, at 122 West Fifth street, last week were so disturbed by a crowd of Italians on the floor above that the police were called and ejected more than a hundred men and women who were members of a "Sunday Club" holding high revel there.

"The Chalice of Courage," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature in six parts, written by Cyrus Townsend Brady, is making a decided hit in Cincinnati, inasmuch as it started a week's engagement at the Lyric last Monday immediately following a stay of the same length at the Alhambra, and has also been engaged by the Forest, among the suburban houses, for a run.

Local pride and the rampant military spirit caused by war talk were served last week by the showing of moving pictures of the First Regiment camp at Yellow Springs, Ohio, in the Enquirer-World Weekly. Most of the First Regiment comes from Cincinnati, and it was seen in a brief review, following its return from camp, some days ago, on which occasion moving pictures were also taken.

PRAIRIE STATES' LETTERS.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

IOWA NOTES.

Mr. and Mrs. Leo Devendorf, of Des Moines, have taken over the management of the Call opera house at Algona and will continue it as a Paramount picture house.

Harold N. Hoyt has purchased the moving picture theater at Fayette from David Prior.

Joseph Long, of Eldora, has purchased a moving picture theater in Oelwein.

G. F. Hochswender, of Fonda, is erecting a new moving picture theater at Pomeroy.

B. G. Buffington, who managed the Lyric theater at Boone for the Summerhays, has formed a partnership with E. E. Orris, of Wilton, and they have purchased the house.

C. D. Tinsley, of the Superior Film company, of Des Moines, made a local picture, "The Man at the Throttle," at Iowa City, which had a three-day booking at the Garden theater.

The Roper theater at Council Bluffs has inaugurated a policy of five and six-reel features.

The New Casino theater at Melcher has been opened.

A new motion picture show has been opened at Fryton Hall in Washington.

John Bro and Hans Olson have razed the Magnolia theater at Magnolia and in its place will erect a modern brick and cement photoplay house.

NEBRASKA NOTES.

Horace Thomas, of Springfield, Mo., has been appointed manager of the Strand theater at Omaha. Mr. Thomas has been publicity manager for the Kansas City Feature Film company.

The Strand is the new name of the American at Omaha, which has been taken over by A. H. Blank, of Des Moines. No vaudeville will be run—nothing but high-class pictures. Early bookings include "The Eternal City" and George Beban in "An Alien." The house will open about September 15. The new lessee has started remodeling and increasing the seating capacity. A pipe organ and a symphony orchestra will furnish music. Ten cents admission will be charged, with some seats reserved at nights for 20 cents.

The Black Hills Feature Film company, of Chadron, with whom Hartman Brothers of Omaha are now associated, is busy making pictures of pioneer life in and around the Fort Robinson military reservation near Chadron. A number of old scouts and a band of 100 Indians are being used in the interests of realism.

Plans have been prepared for a new moving picture theater to be erected at Sixteenth and Locust streets in Omaha.

WHY PAY TO SEE PICTURES?

In Louisville As Elsewhere Sidewalk "Seats" Are Popular—A New Form of Bread Tickets.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WHAT is probably the cheapest known form of amusement is that of standing in front of a motion picture theater in warm weather when it is necessary to leave the doors open and watch the pictures on the screen. This form of amusement is a nightly indulgence on Fourth street in Louisville, and it is really remarkable how many people will stop in front of a five or ten cent theater and try to get something for nothing. An interesting feature of the eye-full stealing proposition is that a great many fairly well dressed people will block traffic in front of the picture houses in an effort to see a few pictures without spending a nickel or dime which they could well afford to spend. The newsboy or small colored urchin is smiled upon, and sometimes a kind-hearted person will buy one of the youngsters a ticket to the show. It wouldn't do to give him the money, as he would return to his old pose as soon as his benefactor passed on.

NOVEL ADVERTISING SCHEME.

A rather unique form of advertising was recently entered into in Louisville between the Dealers' Baking Company and the Walnut Street theater management. The baking company leased the theater for one day and made arrangements with the management to run one of its regular bills and handle everything except the selling of tickets. There were no tickets sold, however, and the man at the door had nothing to do except collect coupons issued by the baking company. On every loaf of bread sent out by the baking company, on the advertised day, was a coupon which was good for one admission to the theater. This coupon was in addition to the regular premium coupon, and was placed on the five-cent loaf. That the advertisement proved good can be figured out by the fact that the doorman collected something over 9,000 coupons during the one day and evening. This advertisement not only did the baker a great deal of good, but it is bound to get people started to the theater who otherwise might hardly have known of its existence. Both concerns were highly pleased with the results of the day, and it is probable that similiar stunts will be handled later on. Local correspondents for the bakers' trade papers were so taken with the idea that it was played up strongly in the Louisville columns of some of the bakery journals.

GIVING THE NEWSBOYS A TREAT.

Through arrangements made between Edward Klapheke, manager of the Baxter theater, in the Highlands, and Erskine M. Brooks, of the Louisville Herald, a newsboys' night was recently arranged for at the Baxter theater. Forming in a line of parade at Hepburn and Barret avenes, 350 newsboys who distribute the Herald in the Highlands marched to the theater. The line was two blocks long and attracted a great deal of attention. The Boys' Brigade, under command of Capt. William Ruhl, was at the head of the line of march. A special program was provided for the annual occasion. This program took about three and one-half hours to run off. A large section of the theater was roped off and used exclusively by the newsboy guests.

AN EIGHT-DAY BENEFIT SHOW.

Frank Woodward, of Chicago, manager of the Dorsey Expedition Motion Pictures, recently completed arrangements with Colonel William Colston and Lieutenant Colonel Robert J. McBryde, of the First Regiment, K. N. G., for a monster benefit to add to the field equipment and hospital fund of the organization. Arrangements were made whereby an eight-day run of Oriental pictures was started in Louisville on Saturday, August 28, at the big Jefferson County Armory, which has the largest floor space of any building in the central west.

INTERESTING THE YOUNGSTERS IN FARMING.

Interesting school children in garden work by means of motion pictures is one of the latest developments in Louisville. The first of these pictures was shown at the West Broadway theater.

KENTUCKY THEATER DOINGS.

At the close of the theatrical season last year the Ben Ali theater of Lexington, Ky., was converted into a moving picture theater and it was generally thought the theater would discontinue pictures this fall. However, it has been announced by C. H. Berryman, head of the Berryman Realty Company, which owns the opera house and the Ben Ali theater, that the Ben Ali would continue as a moving picture theater.

The New Hippodrome theater, at Second and Market streets, in Louisville, has installed a new Wurlitzer instrument which is giving satisfaction.

WILKERSON RETIRES FROM TAB.

N. A. Wilkerson, of Mount Sterling, Ky., who for the past five years has leased and operated the Tabb theater, or opera house, has decided not to renew his lease, and the theater in the future will be operated by I. F. Tabb, the owner. Mr. Wilkerson will assist in the management for the time being, but expects to remain in the theatrical business.

WANTS MUNICIPAL THEATRES.

The Rev. Dr. J. W. Moore of Chattanooga Thinks These Would Prevent Decline in Artistic Standards Which He Believes Exists.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MOVING picture patrons of Chattanooga (Tenn.) houses were somewhat surprised at the stand recently taken by the Rev. Dr. J. W. Moore, in the Centenary church pulpit, when he discussed lowering of drama standards and regulation of the modern stage and motion picture subjects. Dr. Moore has been delivering a series of discourses on "Happiness." He recently took up the subject of amusements in relation to happiness, especially the theater. He took the position that the dramatic instinct is common in our nature, and that the drama has drifted into antagonism to the church.

Dr. Moore said the chief objection of the church to drama is the lack of artistic merit, in its being run for the sake of making money rather than for artistic ends, and added that the dramas and motion pictures are becoming more trivial every year. As a remedy for the evil, Dr. Moore suggested municipally owned playhouses, and the placing of the control and censorship of the drama and moving pictures with the school boards as a part of the educational work of the city and state. He discussed briefly why the churches have come to oppose theater amusements and why they are throwing influences against them.

PREDICTS REACTION AGAINST FILMS.

A deal is now on at Chattanooga, Tenn., whereby Fred Shepperd may lease the Bijou theater from the Chatt-Nash Company, and open the house early in the fall for big stage productions. The theater has been showing pictures for some time, and it was recently stated that it would open this fall with a big screen production and later run a series of stage productions. It is understood Mr. Shepperd will leave for New York shortly to close up contracts. In talking about these contrasts Mr. Shepperd made some predictions which are not shared by the moving picture men of the city. He said:

"There is no doubt that moving pictures have hurt the legitimate show business, but there is sure to be a reaction. The moving picture field has been overworked and the public has already begun to grow tired of the films. Naturally they will turn again to the stage for amusement. Moving pictures have largely been responsible for past theatrical failures, but I believe that the people will not be satisfied with this class of entertainment much longer. I see no reason why the Bijou should not have a successful season as a legitimate house. The criticism that Chattanooga is not a 'show going town' is not justified. Local theatergoers will turn out if they are offered an opportunity to see high-class shows."

SOUTH AGAINST FRANK PICTURES.

That the South is considerably disturbed over the recent lynching of Leo Frank cannot be denied. Dispatches were recently received to the effect that in Atlanta, Ga., moving picture theaters were ordered to quit showing films of the body swinging to the tree. In Chattanooga two young men recently went to police headquarters to get a license to sell photographs of the body hanging to the tree. The pictures were at once confiscated, and the vendors who proposed selling the pictures on the streets were given a few hours to leave the city. They left.

SUB-OPERATORS ASK INCREASE.

Relief or apprentice motion picture operators of Chattanooga, Tenn., are circulating a petition for submission to the Operators' Union, asking for an increase in wages from $7 to $10 a week. The apprentice operators complain that the high cost of living makes the increase imperative, and that the $7 wage is unfair as compared to wages received by cardholders, or regular union operators. Previous to the last strike of operators in Chattanooga the relief operators were getting $12 a week. The chief operators received $22.50 per week. When the strike was finally called off the apprentice workmen were restored to their jobs with cuts of $5 a week. The men claim that this cut was unfair.

TENNESSEE THEATER NOTES.

The Picto theater, of Chattanooga, has made a big change in its policy. A contract has been closed whereby the theater will show Metro features in the future, and the admission price has been raised from 5 to 10 cents. The first of the ten-cent shows was Olga Petrova in "The Vampire."

It is reported in Chattanooga that the Majestic theater will put on a new policy of vaudeville to commence about Labor Day. Tony Sudekum, president and general manager of the Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, was recently in Chattanooga where he conferred with the local managers on the subject.

It was with considerable interest that moving picture men and fans of Chattanooga, Tenn., heard of the recent refusal of Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher, a former Chattanooga pastor, now of Los Angeles, Cal., to accept an offer of $25,000 a year to act as director of a moving picture company which is to produce sacred scenarios. Dr. Brougher was at one time pastor of the First Baptist church for several years, and was popular.

Announcement has been made at Paris, Tenn., by the Dixie Theater company that it will shortly move the fixtures of the Princess theater to Humboldt, Tenn., where a new house will be opened under the company's management. Will Miller will take charge of the new house. The Dixie theater and the Princess theater have been under the same management for some time.

NORTHWESTERN NOTES.

The Reelplays company, which recently was incorporated at Chicago, has a company of twenty near Idaho Falls, Idaho, where they will spend six weeks making "The Cowpuncher." About 10,000 feet will be taken. In addition to this company, 125 riders and Indians are being used. In the company are: Mr. and Mrs. Griffin, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Harlow, Miss Maria Ascaraga, Miss Barbara Gordon, William Jossey, William Bond, Robert Bentley, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Linden, "Pat" Carson, C. O. Linden, James Fulton and A. Lincoln.

P. A. Counter and E. E. Wright will operate a moving picture theater in the new Counter building, which has been erected at Bremerton, Wash.

Beek & Stephenson have reopened the old Star theater at Pullman, Wash., as a five and ten-cent picture house and the Pullman theater will be devoted to higher priced features and vaudeville.

DOINGS IN THE DAKOTAS.

Floyd E. Wheeler, of Scotland, S. D., has purchased a motion picture theater at Rock Rapids, Iowa.

The new Opera house at Mohall, S. D., will be opened early in September. For the opening night a home talent show will augment the motion picture bill.

E. M. Valentine and J. L. Johnson have sold the Lyric theater at Yankton, S. D., to Harry Fisk, who owns the Yankton theater. The Lyric will be renovated and 200 new opera chairs installed.

The capacity of the Lounge theater at Huron, S. D., is being doubled.

Emerson & Son have leased the Arcade theater at Minot, N. D., to Phil Myers, a business man of that city.

C. V. Danielson has started construction of a motion picture theater at Wilton, N. D.

The Doyle building at Esmond, N. D., has been leased to the Bijou Theater Company, of Fessenden, which will fit it up as a motion picture theater.

Jack Haywood succeeds E. E. Seamans as manager of the Orpheum theater at Waubay, S. Dak.

The Electric theater has been opened in McCaig hall at Brady.

The Home theater at Blair has a new policy of four features a week. This house is conducting a pony contest.

Henry Rohlff will build a new motion picture theater seating 500 at 2561 Leavenworth, in Omaha, this Fall. It will be known as the Rohlff.

TRAVELING SHOWS LESS POPULAR.

Illinois River Towns Find Amusement Needs Filled by Local Picture Houses.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BECAUSE many municipal officials in Illinois regard the moving picture show as a local business enterprise that needs encouragement, times are getting harder for the traveling shows which often offer a real problem for the small city photoplay manager. An instance of this co-operative attitude comes from Havana, on the Illinois River, where the city council has made the local landing look less alluring for the many floating theaters which go up and down that stream, tying up at some town and giving vaudeville and dramatic performances. The very apparent reason for leaving out only the frayed end of the latchstring is that Havana has recently acquired two high-grade picture houses, the Lawford and the Castle.

Until now it has cost the showboats only $3 license for each engagement, but under a new ordinance the fee has been raised to $25 for each performance, a price that will cause several captain-impresarios to signal for an open drawbridge and "full speed ahead" past the town. Some of the money they would have secured will go to the local houses.

A number of other Illinois towns, by raising licenses, made things a little harder for the traveling shows—the carnivals, stock companies under canvas and the medicine outfits.

In addition, the town which has a local picture show is no longer "ready money" for the traveling show. The photoplay has satisfied the amusement need. This is the view, expressed to a World representative, of an old tent show man out this year with a vaudeville aggregation. He had a good show. The picture business has closed so many vaudeville houses he could name his own salary for meritorious acts which a few years ago would be insulted at the idea of playing under canvas. But the show did not do the business. Bad weather was partly to blame, but the principal thing was that in the smaller places the moving picture habit is pretty well fixed.

TO VOTE ON SUNDAY SHOWS.

Citizens of Lincoln will have an opportunity to vote upon the question of Sunday moving picture show. A special election has been called on other local issues, and as the Sunday issue is a live one it is proposed to settle it in that manner. Mayor Beetz favors the Sunday shows, but is willing to let the people decide. City Commissioner Ballin is opposed and incidentally expressed the wish at a council meeting that the license fees for picture houses be raised from $100 to $200 a year. The Courier-Herald opposes Sunday shows on the ground that allowing them to open is the first step toward an "open town."

The Pavilion theater, at South Pekin, is interested in the Sunday show question and has been having its patrons cast ballots on the issue.

INCIDENTS IN ILLINOIS.

The Rex, at Petersburg, offered a special program on Havana Day, when thousands of visitors were in the city.

Manager Hodgson of the Oak Park theater, at Oak Park, had films made of the annual frolic of Oak Park business men at Fox River Park, near Aurora. It proved a profitable plan.

The Lyric, at Lincoln, has a baseball team.

The Columbia, at Columbia, is making Ring Lardner's "You Know Me, Al" baseball stories a regular Sunday night feature.

L. A. Castle, of the Lyceum at Wyoming, has installed an automatic popcorn machine.

The big historical pageant in Freeport, which included a reproduction of the Lincoln-Douglas debate, was filmed by the Commercial Motion Picture Manufacturing Company of Chicago, under the direction of President William L. Lehle. The pictures are booked for September 4, 5 and 6 at the Majestic in Freeport.

The post of the Grand Army of the Republic at Quincy refused to go on record as opposed to the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" as requested by the commander of the Illinois Department.

John G. Fredericks, who has been managing the Lyric theater and Lyric airdome at Belleville, is at the head of a project to erect a $30,000 vaudeville and moving picture airdome on the site of the Lyric airdome in that city.

A. C. Wilson, of Fairview, has purchased the Cort theater at Monmouth from G. E. Wynne. Paul Pasche, who has been operator, will be the manager.

Moving picture shows are a feature of Sunday night religious services at the Airdome in Roodhouse. The Rev. Mr. Wharton lectures on the pictures. A musical program is given. A collection is taken to defray the expense.

The former Vogue theater on Broadway in Lincoln has been remodeled and will be operated as a moving picture house by Joe Belaski and Charles Snyder of that city.

The American Bioscope company, Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital of $100,000. The incorporators are J. E. Keith, William B. Moulton, C. S. Burton.

ATLANTA BARS FRANK PICTURES.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE moving pictures of the funeral of Leo M. Frank, who was hanged by a mob at Marietta recently, and which also included pictures of the crowds at the lynching immediately after the body was discovered, as also the crowds at the undertaking establishment in Atlanta, were barred by the board of censorship after Manager Logan, of the Georgian theater, had run them several times. Acting Mayor Ragsdale visited the theater with City Clerk Taylor, and immediately protested to the president of the board of censorship, as also the chairman of the censorship committee.

The president and chairman went immediately to the Georgian theater and watched the Frank pictures, which, according to their statement, were a part of the Pathe Weekly. They ordered Manager Logan to cut out any part of the Weekly which showed anything about the Frank lynching or funeral. Manager Logan acquiesced.

The chairman of the censorship committee explained the action of the censorship board as follows: "Prominent officials and citizens complained to us about the pictures, and declared that their being run would be a lack of consideration for the feelings of many people in Atlanta. We, therefore, on the grounds of public policy, decided to cut them out." The pictures did not include scenes of Frank's body hanging by the rope to a tree near Marietta, where he was lynched.

W. F. CLARKE NOW A CAPTAIN.

Word has been received from W. F. Clarke, who left Atlanta last November to fight for England, his native country, and who enlisted as a second lieutenant in a company of London recruits. He has won laurels and is now a captain. Captain Clarke came to Atlanta the latter part of 1913, representing a film corporation and was very successful. After the South Africa war Captain Clarke went to the source of the Nile river with his moving picture camera and also accompanied Scott's South Pole expedition. He has also visited Africa twice, hunting for pictures of big game with his moving picture camera.

HICKMAN TO THE FORSYTHE.

George Hickman, who has been the Wells representative in Nashville, Tenn., for several years, has been appointed manager of the Forsythe theater in Atlanta, and has already assumed active charge of the house. The opening season of vaudeville has not as yet been announced, nor has it been definitely decided as to whether moving pictures are to be run in connection with the vaudeville.

ATLANTA NOTES.

"The Climbers," in which appears Miss Gladys Hanson, is running again at the Grand theater this week. Miss Hanson is so well known in this, her home, that the Grand has had to give way to the many requests for the second showing.

Abe Ginsberg, proprietor of the Royal moving picture theater on Decatur street, was arrested Monday night by city detectives charged with cheating and swindling. According to Mrs. Williams, a boarding house proprietress, she let Ginsberg have $400, which he has not paid back. He is held under a $500 bond.

Miss Alameda Holcomb, the Atlanta girl who won the title of Georgia's prize beauty in the recent contest conducted by the Universal Film Company, has signed a contract with that company and will go to the coast to appear in moving pictures. The announcement was made Saturday at the Atlanta branch of the Universal Company, Consolidated Film & Supply Company. It was also stated that Miss Lois Wilson, of Birmingham, Ala., another Universal beauty, had been engaged by the company.

DETROIT NOTES.

This week's attractions at Detroit's one-week theaters were: Marguerite Clark in "Helene of the North" at the Washington; "The Ordeal," at the Broadway-Strand; Raymond Hitchcock in "The Ring Tailed Rhinoceros," at the Majestic, and Fannie Ward in "The Marriage of Kitty." All of these theaters are now making a weekly feature of new stage and scenic effects. All have large pipe organs, in addition to orchestras.

The Artone Film Company, of Detroit, has reduced its capital stock from $100,000 to $50,000. The officers of the company, W. H. Goodfellow, Gus Froebel, Francis Reno and William Canfield, have resigned, although they will be active with the company. William H. Gregory, formerly director, has resigned and gone to New York City, where he has been engaged by the Metro Film Corporation. The Company has ceased operations for the present, but expects to start work on feature productions before long.

The Strand theater, owned by John H. Kunsky, Inc., located at Grand River and Fourteenth streets, will open Labor Day.

The Kunsky Scenic Company is furnishing the stage settings for the remodeled Globe theater, which will open Labor Day.

Howard Pierce, publicity director for the various John H. Kunsky enterprises, is now the proud possessor of a new Dodge motor car.

John Loranger, manager of the Casino Feature Film Co., has just returned from an extended trip to Milwaukee and other Wisconsin points where the company maintains a branch office.

Eddie Murphy, manager of the Gladwin Park theater, is having such good business that in order to take care of all the people who want to see the features there, he is giving a series of special matinees. "It used to be that we ran matiness only on Saturdays and Sundays, but we find that with our big features we can draw good crowds by giving matinees during the week. We take in about $30 or $35 at these special afternoon performances which helps considerably to paying the cost of the film."

Arthur H. J. Searle, organist of the Liberty theater, has returned after playing two weeks at the Strand theater, New York, where he went to help out the regular organist while on a vacation.

Because of the refusal of state legislature to allow moving pictures to be shown in auditoriums on second floors, the Y. M. C. A. of Detroit has been forced to abandon the use of its elegant and spacious auditorium on the second floor and is using the lobby for its educational movies, which are shown twice a week.

STOCK IN NEW THEATER FOR SALE.
